Hon. Mr. Grossman: I agree with you, but the hon. members of the Opposition have not followed this practice. I am sure that they would agree that the members who support the government should be entitled to the same privilege.

Mr. Troy: We are taking our cue from you people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: From whom do you take your cue?

Mr. Troy: You.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

As a member of this Legislature who has discussed this general area of business, I would hope, in distinction from my hon. friend from Nipissing, that we would encourage participation from government members on individual estimate items and that debate is not to be confined in the manner suggested, either by the hon. member for Nipissing or by the hon. Minister, in his own reservation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that the hon. member for Scarborough West is setting the stage for a long speech he intends to make on a certain item. I will not get involved in this. I will be very pleased to hear what he has to say.

Mr. S. Lewis: The Opposition has that privilege.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like, Mr. Chairman, to finish my words of commendation to the hon. member for Hamilton Centre for having taken the trouble to visit all of these institutions.

I might say, too, that I have no anxiety to prolong the debate on Mercer. Of course, I have not. I said last week that this had been thoroughly dealt with by the investigating committee. I thought that would have settled it, but apparently it has not. But at least the hon. member went to visit all of these institutions. Of all the criticisms I have received from the other side, I have received them from hon. members who, in spite of the strong criticism they have made of Mercer, still have not taken the trouble to visit the treatment centres at Brampton, which are branches of Mercer. Surely the hon. member for Parkdale knows that our Dr. Flint pleaded with him, and pleaded with the hon. member for Downsview and the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite), to go out to Ingleside to the treatment centres and see our programme there—and they still have not gone. So I think the hon. member for Hamilton Centre is to be commended for going out.

Mr. Singer: We will, in due course.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, the suggestion is—

Mr. Singer: There was a lot to look at in Mercer that morning.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the time to have done it would have been at the time people were making criticisms about the programme at Mercer; going only to the King Street branch was not giving a correct picture to the public.

Mr. Singer: Oh, nonsense! Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. Minister is really asking for it and he is going to get it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Have I got the floor, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Singer: No. If you are going to misstate the facts, then you have got to expect interruptions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the hon. member is going to tell me where I misstated the facts.

Mr. Singer: Yes. The fact is that we went on a visit to Mercer. We were escorted by one of the officials of your department; and just because we were not prepared to stay to the strict schedule and the Cook's tour—the pleasant Cook's tour that was laid on for us—certainly does not imply the criticism the hon. Minister is now levying. The investigations we made at Mercer took at least a full five hours, and probably could have gone on for another several hours. The hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member said I misstated the facts. I merely said he did not go out to Ingleside, and he admitted this.

Mr. Singer: That is correct, and you know why.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said you had not been there, and you made your criticism in spite of that fact.

Mr. Singer: Because of that fact.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for York South suggested that he did not want to get involved in personalities insofar as the ladies are concerned, and I do not want to either. One of the things that caused all this was a personality problem between two ladies, and the last thing I want to do is get involved in that. But this was a personality problem, and a good portion of this was caused—

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Why?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because two women could not get along with each other.

Mr. Thompson: Why?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This happens even among men, and I am not going to get involved in why two women cannot get along with each other. A lot of this would have been entirely unnecessary if they had been able to settle down and find a common ground on which to work together, but they just could not do it. I am not going to say whose fault it was. I have my views; other people have their views.

To suggest that the hon. member for Hamilton Centre should have gone to some place else to get a more balanced view—the point I am trying to make here is that those who were criticizing should have taken in the whole area, should have gone to those others to get a more balanced view, too.

Mr. MacDonald: You go to the board instead of the two dissidents. That is the weakest argument—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not talking about the two dissidents. The hon. member was suggesting that when the hon. member for Hamilton Centre went to visit some of the other agencies—some of the religious agencies who were very complimentary about the institution—

Mr. Trotter: We have wanted to tear that place down for 44 years. Do not blame it on two women.

Hon. Mr. Grossman—that she was only getting a one-sided view. Of course, the same thing applies in reverse to those who are going to one organization to criticize these things.

Mr. MacDonald: In the Elizabeth Fry society—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the problem is that when you quote estimable people of integrity who say anything complimentary about any of the work of The Department of Reform Institutions, unfortunately there is a tendency to suggest that they are whitewashing; and this of course reflects on their integrity. I hope the report I am going to read now, which was just handed to me—and, quite frankly, I wish it had been handed to me a few months ago—will not cause any of the hon. members to suggest this is a whitewash as well.

This is from the inspector of public schools, who inspects our institutions. This is his report on Mercer and the first one is dated—pardon me, I am sorry, it is a lady. It is signed by Lotta L. McNeill, inspector of public schools, The Department of Education, and it is dated December 13, 1963.

Mr. Trotter: 1963?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This, of course, is a regular inspection which goes on at regular intervals. It was not a particular inspection made at that time.

Mr. Singer: You mean 1963?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right.

Mr. Singer: They do not report regularly?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They report regularly. I will give you the next one; I want to prove that this was not just a report. Someone may suggest it was thrown in at the last minute to whitewash. This is the one a few months prior to the criticism of what was going on in Mercer.

Mr. Trotter: I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister would answer my question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have got your question.

Mr. Trotter: On medical treatment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will answer the hon. member's question. As I pointed out, I do not think I can ever be accused of failing to answer a question that is put to me; and I answer it directly, I am sure you know.

This is from the inspector of public schools, dated December 13, 1963, to the deputy Minister:

Re girls training school, Andrew Mercer reformatory for women.

Dear Sir:

On several occasions during the past year I have visited the Andrew Mercer training school for girls. This report is submitted for your consideration. The training school continues to be a most convincing recommendation for the modern enlightened philosophy of penal reform when applied with sensible efficiency and sympathetic understanding. Its foundation stones are a living and learning environment established on a sound basis of cleanliness, order and beauty, thoughtful provision for the physical well-being of the girls, respect, courtesy and kindly consideration for each inmate on the part of staff members and officials and a well balanced programme of trade training, academic study, work and recreation. The results are seen in the remarkably pleasant, well-ordered tone of the school and the fine attitudes of the girls.

The institution's record for successful rehabilitation of its inmates is achieved through their learning to live and work effectively together. The girls are invariably well-mannered, friendly and responsible. The teaching staff are of the opinion that their department in most cases is superior to that of pupils in the public school system and my observations during the past 14 years support this claim. The girls show commendable interest in their studies and associated activities and the standards of neatness and accuracy and workmanship are sound.

Because of limited periods of sentencing, and of the additional provisions in recent years for segregation of first offenders and more readily reformable cases, the academic programme of this school has been reduced. However, where girls are interested in improving their academic standard and have the ability to do so, correspondence courses and individual tutoring are provided. Several of the girls have successfully completed courses in English, mathematics, history and geography at the seven, eight, nine and ten levels.

The home economics department, under the direction of Mrs. Steinberg, functions effectively throughout each school year and remains a most valuable and popular part of the educational programme. Groups of six to ten girls successfully receive a practical comprehensive ten-week course in homemaking, and all the girls take advantage of this opportunity. The programme includes an excellent course in cookery, with the useful background of food rules, principles of nutrition, simple basic chemistry and budgeting economy. The girls enjoy entertaining at luncheons, teas and occasional dinners for staff, fellow inmates and visitors. These occasions not only provide sound learning and testing experiences but also help greatly to bolster the girls' confidence and self-respect.

Mr. MacDonald: It sounds like a report from the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Ward-robe).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But it is not the hon. Minister of Mines; it is the inspector of public schools.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I just say it sounds like it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To continue:

Mrs. Steinberg is also very capable in mathematics, and is presently tutoring three girls in mathematics and English, making use of correspondence courses in these subjects. Most of the academic courses are now conducted by Mrs. Steinberg in evening classes. She also conducts physical education classes in two groups during two evenings a week.

Mrs. Frances teaches business practice in regular day classes throughout the week; 15 girls are enrolled in this course in two groups. The course includes considerable typewriting; a little shorthand, largely carried on through private study and group testing; related English studies, particularly in grammar, composition of letters, and study of form; and basic operations—

Mr. Singer: Mrs. Frances has not been there for over a year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well now, I am reading a report dated December, 1963—one thing at a time.

Mr. Singer: But Mrs. Frances has not been there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will read the other report later, if the hon. member will just give me a chance.

Achievement in typewriting is commendable. Progress records are kept for the class as a whole by an ingenious system of line graphs, and for each girl in an individual record book. Mrs. Frances is an enthusiastic, co-operative and capable teacher. Her classes provide enjoyable and useful training for the girls. New typewriting machines and textbooks are being used to advantage.

Under the capable direction of Mrs. Hall, the sewing school is providing useful trade training for the girls. There is a very good supply of modern factory-type machines and a remarkable variety of articles produced in a pleasant, comfortable working environment. The girls are learning a saleable trade and many of them are becoming very skilful and taking pride in their handiwork. Instruction in arts, crafts, and dressmaking is now being provided by Mrs. Dasch.

Mr. Singer: Mrs. who?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Dasch—D-a-s-c-h.

Mr. Singer: Is she there now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will let me finish, he will get a chance to question later.

She is particularly efficient in dressmaking and needle work, but is providing opportunities for the girls to continue with some handiwork and painting also. Miss Clark, who has been promoted to senior matron and is now largely concerned with other activities, is outstanding in crafts and continues to provide assistance and direction in this work whenever possible. The excellent display, which formed a part of the recent training school exhibition at Malton, largely represented her work.

Guidance groups, testing, library, and various recreational activities, are supervised by the teachers. The staff nurses conduct evening classes in home nursing, and hairdressing courses provide both trade training and a much appreciated service for the inmate.

Religious teaching and counselling are provided by members of the clergy and Salvation Army who visit the institution regularly.

Mr. Cozens, through his choir work with the girls, makes a fine contribution to the spirit and achievement of the school.

The school has a capable and devoted staff of teachers and instructors, who work tirelessly and co-operatively with the superintendent to maintain the excellent programme of rehabilitation through education which has become traditional for this training school.

Respectfully yours,

Lotta L. McNeill,
Inspector of Public Schools.

Now, Mr. Chairman, dated April 27, 1964—

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, just before the hon. Minister starts on the next programme, could I get clarification on this? Did he state that nurses provide hairdressing courses in the evenings? Did I catch that correctly?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. If the hon. member would just wait until I finish; this is a short report—

Mr. Thompson: No; this is in the last report. I thought he said that staff nurses gave hairdressing courses in the evening. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:

Staff nurses conduct evening classes in home nursing, and hairdressing courses provide training and a much appreciated service for the inmates.

No, it is not the nurses who provide it.

This is dated April 27, 1964. To the deputy Minister:

Dear Mr. Graham:

Re: Andrew Mercer reformatory for women

I very much enjoyed my visit to the school on Friday. It is operating as efficiently and as serenely as ever. The business administration and home economics departments are maintaining their traditional high standard. And I was particularly pleased with the work now being done in the arts and crafts department. The dress-making and needlework are of great variety and of a uniformly excellent standard. The addition of eight new typewriters during the past three years has served to equip the business school very well. A dictaphone, if one could be obtained, would provide further valuable training for the advanced students.

Re Mrs. Dasch: A departmental summer course in arts and crafts—probably carving leather work—would be very helpful if arrangements could be made for her to attend.

Yours sincerely,

Lotta L. McNeill,
Inspector of Public Schools.

Mr. Chairman, the impression seems to be that if anyone is highly commendatory about the things going on in the school, it must be a whitewash and there must be something wrong with it. I do not know how you deal with criticism other than to bring forward reports from people of responsibility and this is precisely what I am doing.

The hon. member for Parkdale—

Mr. Singer: Just at that point, would the hon. Minister pause? Of those five women he mentioned in that report, am I correct in saying only one is now employed there—Mrs. Steinberg? Are any of the other women who were mentioned in the first report still employed at Mercer?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you will hold that question I will get the information while I answer—

Mr. Singer: And the other thing: Am I not correct in saying there is only one staff nurse there—not “staff nurses”? There is only one, and she leaves at four o'clock in the afternoon?

An hon. member: They counted Mrs. Burrows in as two.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mrs. Burrows is a nurse.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but she did not act as a staff nurse nor did she give any courses in nursing; she was the supervisor.

Mr. Trotter: While you are still on that, the report that the hon. Minister read says they taught them hairdressing. I admit the equipment is there, but they do not teach them hairdressing. At least I asked this question, and the answer was: “No.” This answer was to me, and I mentioned this two or three times. Hairdressing is an obvious trade that could be taught many of those girls—but they just do not.

It is all well and good for an inspector to go—but unless somebody goes digging and really inquiring, then they just see what is drawn up for them; just like on page 4 of your advisory council where they set up all the different things they have for academics and domestic science and arts and the crafts. They are there in theory, but in actual practice they simply do not exist, surely? Do not try handing me that kind of report and expect me to swallow that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there is a very pertinent question. How long does the inspector spend in inspecting the school? Does she take the word of somebody about these evening classes or does she inspect them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not have that information.

Mr. MacDonald: I think that is rather pertinent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then the hon. member is critical of the manner in which the inspector of public schools inspects the training at Mercer. I would suggest you put that question to her.

Mr. MacDonald: On the basis of the report you read, the answer is: "Yes."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not think the hon. member for York South is qualified to say that.

Mr. Singer: The report says there were five giving training and there is only one there now; what else can one be except critical?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the questions on changes at Mercer, about which the hon. member has asked: Hon. members will recall that, on February 18, 1965, when I tabled the report of the Minister's advisory council on the treatment of the offender, I promised, and I quote:

The committee of inquiry has in its report made certain recommendations which they believe are necessary for a more efficient operation at the Mercer. Insofar as such recommendations are feasible and practical, they will be carried out.

As all hon. members know, the superintendent of Mercer, Mrs. Jean Burrows, was due to retire over a year ago but stayed on at the request of the department. However, since December, Mrs. Burrows has been in ill health; and, in view of this, the department has appointed, as acting superintendent, Dr. A. L. MacKinnon.

Dr. MacKinnon, after being head of the women's division at the Homewood Sanitarium for some years, took over the position of superintendent at Homewood in 1962. Since that time, he was employed as a consultant psychiatrist for The Department of Reform Institutions at the A. G. Brown memorial clinic at Mimico, and the women's treatment centre at Brampton. Dr. MacKinnon is recognized as being a very able administrator, and is widely respected in medical circles. On February 2 of this year, I informed the House that I intended to appoint an administrator of adult female institutions. Funds for this purpose have been allowed for in this year's estimates. As soon as this administrator is appointed, steps will be taken to find a permanent superintendent for Mercer.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the hon. Minister a question at that point? What date was Dr. MacKinnon appointed as acting superintendent? Was that subsequent to the grand jury report and subsequent to the visit of my colleagues and myself?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, yes—if the hon. member is trying to make something sinister out of that—

Mr. Singer: Oh, no. I just wanted to set the record straight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can tell the hon. member this: If Mrs. Burrows were not ill, she would still be there. Mrs. Burrows is ill.

Mr. Singer: She was not there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, she was ill, and she has been ill ever since; but we cannot leave the place without a superintendent. It has been most difficult to find even a temporary one, and this is what we have.

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder why?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, now, this is the old vicious circle all over again; we discussed it the other day. I do not know where the hon. member could find any other jurisdiction, doing our sort of work, which does not have difficulty filling staff positions.

As recommended by the MACTO committee, a community doctor has been appointed to take complete charge of the medical facilities at Mercer reformatory and to provide medical facilities for the inmates. The doctor appointed is Dr. William Kurtasy of 1430 King Street West. He is 40 years of age, born in Canada, and a graduate of the University of Toronto in medicine in 1950.

He spent five years in general practice, one year in Welland and four in Toronto. Dr. Kurtasy took three years of post-graduate training in Detroit, two years in the Henry Ford hospital. He returned to Toronto, and has been two years in general practice at this present time.

At the time of the grand jury report, the Mercer was temporarily without a qualified typing instructor. Hon. members will recall I pointed this out and so did the committee of inquiry. The position at that time was being advertised. This vacancy was filled on November 2, 1964, and an instructor is in attendance for two hours a day, five days a week. Within the last few days, under our new contract system of hiring teachers, a fully qualified commercial teacher has agreed to start work in September.

However, as all hon. members agree, the main change required at the Mercer is a new building. On February 18 of this year I stated, and I quote:

I then decided to ask the Minister's advisory council on the treatment of the offender to explore the feasibility of designing a women's institution in connection with the Brampton complex, which in the case of a radical change in our responsibilities as the result of a new federal penal policy could be converted to other uses within our system of reform institutions.

This study is now underway.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to see that government and the hon. Minister have done something in order to change the medical treatment at Mercer. It was long overdue. But the fact that the change has taken place makes it obvious that the criticisms that were being made over a long period of time were justified, because evidently even though there were certain attempts on pages 19 and 20 of the advisory council's report to cover up the situation, the hon. Minister has evidently gone ahead and done something about it. This proves one particular point in that the criticism, the outspoken criticism of that one particular phase, has obviously been justified or you would not have made the change.

I am happy to see, too, that you are now getting trained teachers. I hope you can hang on to them and keep them. Again it shows that before we get anything done by the government you have to really raise an uproar, to bring it to public attention what actually is going on within an institution like Mercer.

I hope that these other changes that are so necessary are going to be made. After all, our criticism has been that these things have existed for so long and nothing has been done. It is long overdue that we make these changes.

But how much more confidence we would have had in the hon. Minister, if, as a new man, he said these things are wrong, I am going to do something about it. Instead of that, he has gone through this procedure of whitewashing, then surreptitiously making the changes. He made no announcement in the change of the medical setup until now, although I have kept hinting at it and rather gathered, because he did not deny what I was saying, that it had happened.

These things have been done on the quiet. Why could he not have come out and done them in the open? We would have had far more respect for him. We always feel that too much is hidden. It is like an iceberg, one-sixth is above water with regard to what is going on over there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I think I would like to get one thing clear, the suggestion that I surreptitiously appointed a doctor. Now, I suppose inherent in this whole discussion is the matter of how you deal with people publicly. As far as we are concerned, as far as the MACTO committee is concerned, they did not find anything which might reflect on the professional ability of the doctor who is there now, and I think—

Mr. Singer: Why did you get rid of him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, just a moment, let me explain this. I did not get rid of anybody.

The hon. members will appreciate the fact that if you are in a responsible position one should be very careful of how one handles a person's reputation. Now, as far as Dr. Hills is concerned, the doctor who was at Mercer, I would tell the hon. members that some time ago when I found out the tremendous amount of work he was involved in at the Don jail—his essential work is at the Don jail, and he looks after hundreds there. I went back into the record and he was doing this additional work at Mercer in an effort to supplement his income because he was not being paid sufficiently there to keep a doctor full time.

I was concerned about this, and we went into this whole matter; it was a very delicate situation. There was some suggestion, when I discussed this with MACTO and with others, that Dr. Hills may have—and I think this is understandable when you work in a penal institution over many years, you sometimes have a tendency to become hardened to the situation—become somewhat brusque in his mannerism. This is all that we could find wrong with Dr. Hills. As I say, this probably stems from the fact that he had been working there so long, doing this tremendous amount of work which he was doing at Don jail.

Now, when the committee of inquiry suggested we should have a community doctor who will not have another institution of this nature with which to work, this seemed to be a very good suggestion, if we could implement it.

Now, surely the hon. members would not suggest that I blow a bugle about this and get up publicly and say: Hurray, we got rid of Dr. Hills and we have got a new doctor.

There was no need to do this. We have nothing against Dr. Hills and there is nothing to suggest that there was anything wrong with him professionally, or morally, or any other way, except perhaps he was over-worked and we needed someone in there with a fresh look who did not have so much to do. This we have accomplished; and I did it the way I thought it should be done; quietly, without any publicity.

We are dealing with a man's professional reputation and this is the reason it was done that way. Obviously I knew there was a good chance that the question would be asked in the House here, and if it is asked, I have to answer it. This is what I have done, but that is the reason it was handled that way.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Minister is emoting far too much about the particular problem of the medical system there. Certainly the grand jury found that it was far from adequate. Certainly that was the observation of my hon. colleagues and myself.

I think the hon. Minister would have been giving good public service if he said that as of—I wonder what date this new doctor came in?—as of whatever date it was, there is a new medical system there and we have a new doctor, and let it go; that is all. That is all that was necessary.

There has been no public announcement of this. Why the hon. Minister wanted to wait until the specific question was asked in the House I do not know. Now, if he wants specific questions, we will give him some more.

Has the nursing staff been supplemented since the visit of my hon. colleagues and myself? Is there more than one nurse there?

Mr. Trotter: Even your advisory council said the nurses were in short supply.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, there is one on duty every day at Mercer full time, and there is one part time.

Mr. Singer: But when we were there there was only one registered nurse and she went off at three or four o'clock in the afternoon. It was very difficult to get any medical attention if anything happened between four o'clock in the afternoon and when she came on duty again at seven o'clock the next morning.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This was made an issue of some time ago. Nursing staff is not easy to come by, but there is no problem there because now, in particular since we have a community doctor, if there is any emergency the doctor can be reached in a matter of minutes. So I do not think there is too much concern about that.

Incidentally, about making public announcements which possibly affect the reputation of staff: I know I could have made a hero of myself but I have never found it necessary to do that, to get places on the reputations of members of the civil service.

I know this is quite a thing to do. It could have been done that way. I could say: "I am a great hero, I got rid of the doctor and got a new one. I am a great hero, look at the Minister I am, I have changed this and I have changed that."

That is not the point. I like to get credit the same as anyone else, but I still have to concern myself with the reputations of some of these people; which incidentally is another reason why it is difficult to get certain staff because they do not want to expose themselves to this sort of publicity. If they feel that any time they make a mistake or do something which the Minister or someone in the department does not agree with or somebody in the Opposition does not agree with, it will be on the front pages of the newspaper, this is not conducive to recruiting the kind of staff that you would want.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the thing that puzzles me about the hon. Minister—I would have thought that perhaps he would have recognized it too—this hon. Minister, and my hon. colleague has said it, this Minister does not have to apologize personally for what has gone for the last 20 years. He came in, he worked hard at his portfolio and if he wanted to say that he had embarked upon a new scheme, without condemning anyone, a new method of carrying on Mercer, I think that the public and the Opposition and everyone else would have commended him. But instead he wants to do it the hard way. Well, if you want to do it the hard way, then do it the hard way, and we will keep after you then.

Are there any more nurses than there were the day we visited?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Singer: No more nurses. Have there been any changes in the visiting regulations?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Visiting for whom?

Mr. Singer: For the inmates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is no.

Mr. Singer: So that if an inmate wants to be visited by someone to whom she is not related by marriage, it is impossible for that person to be allowed to see her. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told that each case is investigated on its merits and I am sure the hon. member will appreciate the need for that. I think he raised the question of a common law husband.

Mr. Singer: That is exactly right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I am sure he will appreciate—I can easily see, right off the top of my head, some implications regarding this.

Mr. Singer: What are they?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One implication might be the woman wants to see someone who according to the regulations she is not entitled to see. I mean you cannot see everybody. There are certain groups whom you may be permitted to see, at certain hours.

After all, we are running a corrective institution. If a person is able to say: "Well, I want to see Joe Brown." And you say: "Well, is Joe Brown your husband, or a relative?" They say: "No, he is my common law husband." So how do you prove he is a common law husband?

Mr. Singer: Well, at least you accept her statement. We know you are not running a social hall and allowing visitors every ten minutes. If she is limited to one visitor a week, or whatever it is, certainly the hon. Minister must recognize, as do most hon. members of this House, that there are thousands of people living in common law relationship in this province. I think you are just being inhumane. Will you deny this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I did not say a woman would be precluded from seeing her common law husband, that is not what I said. I said each case is investigated on its own merits. You just cannot take a woman's word because she says that person is my common law husband. If the hon. member suggests we should take all of the inmates' word for everything, he surely does not appreciate what the problems are in running a penal institution.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister is avoiding the issue. We were told—not once, we were told at least a dozen times while we were there—that for a woman to arrange for a visit from any male she had to produce a marriage certificate to prove that she was married. This was the invariable rule and it had never been departed from.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, there are reasons why they may ask for this in a particular instance. The hon. member surely appreciates, being a lawyer, that there are cases where the staff, the administrators of the institution, want to make certain, if a woman is a married woman, that she is seeing her husband and not just someone else with whom she is living. This is not going to help rehabilitate her either. There are many of these problems. It would be well if the hon. member just took our word for it that we do everything we can to encourage visits, proper visits; and if he has found one particular case of a woman not having been able—

Mr. Singer: There were at least a dozen.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A dozen with common law husbands?

Mr. Singer: Yes. A substantial proportion of the population of that institution has common law husbands.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And did the hon. member satisfy himself that that dozen did not have legal husbands? How does the hon. member know what our records show? You have to know these things.

Mr. Singer: All right. Again, about the visiting, have arrangements now been made to allow the inmates to see the persons with whom their children have been left?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All I can tell the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, is that whatever regulations were in force at the time he was there are still in effect. There have been no changes made.

Mr. Singer: There have been no changes. So the situation still maintains, apparently, that if a woman who has an infant is in the institution and has left that infant in charge with someone else, while she is allowed to see the infant she is not allowed to talk to the person who is in charge of her child? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I would be very much surprised if that were correct. I am told by the acting deputy that every case is considered on its own merits. Certainly this is the proper way to run that kind of an institution.

Mr. Singer: If the hon. Minister is surprised, I think it is about time—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said I would be surprised if this were a policy; and I am told by my acting deputy that every case is considered on its own merits.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but the hon. Minister did not say whether every case may be considered on its own merits, but within these rules. We suggested that this was information that we had; it has been in the paper; the hon. Minister has had a chance to read about it; his investigating committee has had a chance to read about it; nobody has answered it; and I am asking the hon. Minister if this is, in fact, correct.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My answer is that there is no such rule.

Mr. Singer: All right. Can the hon. Minister tell me for a fact then that if a woman, who is an inmate of Mercer, has left behind her an infant in charge of another woman, she is able to see the person who is in charge of her baby?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That would depend on the particular circumstance. Surely the hon. member must know that that particular woman may be a person who, in the past, may have been convicted of bringing in contraband to an institution? She may be suspected of attempting to do this; there are all sorts of implications which our people would have to consider before they gave permission.

Mr. Singer: I would think that the course of being humane would indicate that when a woman is in an institution, and has left her baby in charge of someone else, she would be most interested in talking to the person whom she left in charge of her child. And if you cannot arrange proper security for such an interview to take place, then it is not her fault; it is your fault.

The other thing I wanted to inquire about is whether the system still exists of punishing persons, who are shown on the records as Protestants, and who go to Catholic church services and vice versa?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, this was suggested one time in the past. To suggest that a person would be punished for that purpose is ridiculous.

Mr. Singer: Well, Dr. Flint told us—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me finish now. If Dr. Flint told you that, he probably told you about a case where a person was punished for disobeying orders, not because she attended that service. I am sure if a person wants to attend a particular service and asks and gives a good reason for it, there would be no punishment.

Mr. Singer: No, that is not so.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, the suggestion that we would be so picayune and so inconsiderate as to punish a person merely because they wanted to attend a particular religious service—

Mr. Singer: A church service other than the one of the religion that they designated.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me read this; I have the official answer to this thing, in anticipation of the question:

Inmates may attend religious services of other denominations. All women are asked what their denominational preference is when they enter the institution and they are grouped, for the purpose of attending services, into Protestant and Roman Catholic. An inmate should have permission from the chaplain and the superintendent if she wishes to attend the services of, or change to, the other group.

Surely the hon. member can appreciate the need for that?

Mr. Singer: Why? Well, I cannot.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have to know where your inmates are. If he was in charge of an institution of this kind he would like to know if there is supposed to be 25 in this particular group, and 31 in the other; he would want to know where they are.

Mr. Singer: That is very simple. You do not need all this complicated system of permissions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This regulation is clear and the procedure is simple. Occasionally an inmate may persist in defying the rule; when this happens the behaviour, like all disobedience to institutional regulations, would be subject to disciplinary action. But, provided that she makes a justifiable request in the proper way, the inmate may attend religious services of other denominations. I see nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think that is the height of religious bigotry, emanating from an institution.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Minister answer: In his statistics under "Educational Status of the Inmates" on page 15, there are 160 illiterate and 5,888 elementary, and it is my understanding that there are 27 teachers, and 23 vocational instructors—that is 50 altogether?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think that the figure I gave was 77.

Mr. Troy: Now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are 77 teachers—academic teachers.

Mr. Troy: Full time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Troy: Almost 6,000—and we will say, 75 or even 80 teachers; well, even in an elementary school that ratio of teachers to pupils would be very high. The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) is not here, but he would agree with me that the ratio was 80:1.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member should appreciate that a lot of our inmates do not take academic training at all; lots of them. They get beyond it at a certain age; they are older ones; they do not take academic training because they do not want to, and some of their minds could not absorb it. Anyone who wants to take academic instruction is not only welcome but is encouraged; and we have sufficient teachers for this purpose.

Mr. Troy: You have—

Mr. Singer: Of the five women, I think, who were mentioned in the 1963 report of the public school inspector, how many are, right now, today, employed at Mercer?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One resigned on October 31, 1964; she has not yet been replaced. One of them retired, due to age, and prior to 1963 she had been replaced by another one. Mrs. Steinberg is still employed there. Mrs. Frances resigned and was replaced by Mrs. Anderson. Miss Crock was promoted to senior matron at the treatment centre. The other vacancies, we hope, will be filled.

Mr. Singer: Is Mrs. Anderson still there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer, I am told, is yes.

Mr. Singer: What does she do now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Part-time typing teacher.

Mr. Singer: So there is one full-time teacher, Mrs. Steinberg, and Mrs. Anderson is part time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is another qualified typing teacher who has been hired for September, 1965.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to commence a modest effort rather than a major one. During the course of this session there has been some question about treatment within training schools and facilities that are available within The Department of Reform Institutions generally. The feeling expressed on behalf of the official Opposition and we in the New Democratic Party is that many of the institutions within this department should lie in fact within public welfare; or indeed preferably within education. Some would even say within health, and nowhere do we suggest that this is truer than in the area of the emotionally disturbed child.

Now the hon. Minister to some extent agrees. He put, I noticed, quite some emphasis on emotionally disturbed children in his original remarks. I do not think, and I contend strongly, that such children could be adequately provided for within the institutions as presently constituted.

I have searched for some time to find a dramatic case illustration which could embody this lack in our government services as a whole. I believe that I have found such an illustration. It is not a lengthy one. I want to read it into the record from beginning to end. I believe it is a classic case of the inadequacy of services in the province of Ontario.

Now, may I admit to the hon. Minister opposite that such a case necessarily impinges on other departments. I introduce it at this juncture in the estimates because I think it has particular applicability here, and there are certain observations I should like to make at the end with reference to this department.

I have obviously left the name as a pseudonym and I have omitted the precise town, but every other fact in this case is as read. The quotations come from documents which I am prepared to file before the House and with the hon. Minister and his Cabinet confreres if it is deemed desirable. The parents, if requested, are ready to corroborate the material contained herein. I may say that I have omitted the name of the individual involved and the family and the city because for obvious reasons, once I have read the case, any enterprising journalist or member of the media, could find the individual I am discussing. I leave that to their better judgment.

I am also going to depart from habit, Mr. Chairman. I should like to read this into the record. In this instance I want the quotations and the facts to be precisely correct. The case is the case of Anna X, as I will describe it.

Earlier in this session I spoke of the desperate situation of up to 250,000 children in Ontario who need some form of treatment for emotional disturbance. About 80,000 of these children are severely disturbed. These are the youngsters who seem to slip through the gaping holes in the network of our social services and whose lives are an anguish to themselves and to their family.

At the time I attempted to document the way in which every government department—education, health, public welfare, reform institutions and the Attorney General's department failed these children.

After I spoke, I received the usual deluge of letters from parents who found themselves in just this situation. Among the letters, came the documents on the Anna X case and it is this case I wish to outline. In the history of this one child and her family can be traced the failure of every government department and branch to solve this crushing human problem.

Anna X's case history is the paradigm of ignorance and callousness toward, and government neglect of, the emotionally disturbed children of this province. It is a depressingly thorough corroboration of my attempt at a department-by-department critique.

Anna X, now 18 years old, was adopted by the X family of northern Ontario when she was three months old. The X family had their own three-year-old daughter at the time and later had two more children, a girl and a boy. They are an intelligent, devoted, Catholic family and responsible members of their community.

Anna X was a bright, gay, active infant, unusually well co-ordinated and talented. But by the age of three, despite loving care from her family, she had inexplicably become practically uncontrollable by anyone but her parents, excessively demanding of attention and apt to wander away from the house if not kept under constant supervision.

Anna has an IQ of 145. She did exceptionally well in the early grades of school; but after a severe bout of measles at the age of six, her behaviour rapidly deteriorated. It was now clear that Anna was an emotionally disturbed child.

Though she was clever enough to deceive and manipulate adults, she was caught in a series of bizarre acts—shoplifting, stealing from teachers, hiding in ditches on the way home from school, sneaking free bus rides when she had car fare, refusing to do her school work, showing an excessive interest in boys.

Now was the time, if ever, to catch and treat her illness before it became too highly developed.

The X family acted promptly. When Anna was six, they took her to the local mental health clinic for six months of weekly therapy sessions. It seems that the local clinician then washed his hands of the case. The clinic, incidentally, was subsequently closed. This was the total extent of the involvement of the Ontario government's much-vaunted community mental health programme in the case of Anna X.

The only advice given to the X family was to remove Anna from the community and parental milieu and send her to boarding school. The X family felt at this time, and many times in the years to follow, that their concern and informed interest in Anna was professionally resented and discouraged. Nevertheless, they followed the advice and sent her to boarding school. At the end of the school year, she was expelled for her total inability to conform to minimum standards of behaviour.

The hon. Minister might well begin to descry a pattern. This was the first in a long series of sad failures, on the part of the school system, to help Anna. In all, she went to six public and private schools and was expelled from most of them. A typical letter listing the reasons for expulsion came from St. Joseph's College, North Bay, after Anna left there in November, 1961. I should like to read them quickly and for the record; they form an important background:

1. Anna was frequently untruthful with regard to her school work and her conduct in school and in residence and outside school.

2. Within the school she committed petty thievery involving other students' personal articles, school supplies and money.

3. She was very careless about personal hygiene and grooming though well-provided for by her parents. She did not take proper care of her belongings.

4. In general, she was not socially accepted by her classmates.

5. She resented authority and disregarded the rules and regulations of the school.

6. She persisted in reading obscene literature and wrote objectionable letters and compositions. She composed letters to herself and signed boys' names to them, pretending that she was receiving mail from popular boys. These she would show to her associates.

7. Social contacts outside the school were highly objectionable. She frequented the company of young men of undesirable appearance and conduct. These friends were usually poorly groomed and, by the standards of our school, were offensive in their conduct.

8. Anna apparently lacked a sense of honour and responsibility.

9. She was well aware of all her weaknesses and sought help but did not follow the advice of those who tried to assist her.

This is directly from the school record. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, Anna was highly articulate and persuasive and evidently talented in writing, with emphasis on poetry, drawing and music. I may say to the hon. members of the House that I have seen much of that original poetry and talent and it makes this particular story, as it unfolds, an exceedingly tragic one.

No clearer syndrome of maladjustment could be presented, yet at no time was any school able to offer her adequate psychological counselling or help.

The Department of Education was only the first to fail Anna. In dismal succession came every other government department.

Government welfare services were equally inadequate. Though the X's are resourceful members of their community, and doggedly explored every avenue, they could not find a single social service in their community able to help them. The children's aid society pointed out, with graphic irony, that since Anna was not a neglected child within the meaning of The Child Welfare Act, nothing could be done for her. Prevention and protection, it seems, were not within their province.

Government hospital services were next. When Anna was 14 years old, an examination at a general hospital revealed no evidence of brain damage. Medical assistance was therefore closed to her.

What is a family to do? Isolated from major centres, trapped in northern Ontario with pitiful health and welfare referral services, the X family found their morale faltering. They were exhausted financially, physically, emotionally. Their other children—healthy, normal and successful—were being neglected in their effort to help Anna. Every school, every summer camp, which might have encouraged Anna's talents, had ended by expelling her.

In 1961, the X's, in total desperation, turned to the city court authorities. The Attorney General's department was as lacklustre as all the rest. Far from offering preventative services, they merely suggested that the X's admit Anna to St. Mary's training school in Toronto. In the fall of 1961, Mr. X took Anna to St. Mary's and spent a day there. The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions may fondly refer to his training schools Act as the finest in the world, but the desperate Mr. X was appalled. He decided that the school, in his words, was "too harsh a solution" and had no positive rehabilitative programme to offer Anna.

Incidentally, in this layman's judgment, he was later proved correct. He was, of course, perfectly correct at the time. No clinical services were available there to treat such a complex emotional imbalance. Taking the girl, he drove straight to Windsor to apply for her admission to Meryvale, a semi-treatment centre for borderline delinquent girls, where he was willing to pay the full cost of her upkeep.

Anna attended school in Windsor while under observation by Meryvale. By the time of her inevitable expulsion, after three months, Meryvale had decided it could not help Anna and recommended Warrendale, an intensive treatment centre in Newmarket for disturbed children. At this time, a volunteer social agency commented in a letter to the X family, and I quote:

You will be disappointed, as we were, that Meryvale cannot accept Anna. They have given this very careful consideration and discussed it with their psychiatrist. The reason for their rejection was Anna's use of manipulation, which had been evident to them during the weekend she spent at Meryvale before she went to St. Mary's Academy, the Windsor school. In an institution as large as Meryvale it is almost impossible to control this. Added to this was the age factor. Anna would have been one of the oldest girls in Meryvale, which is a serious consideration in view of the length of time she would require treatment.

I say, by way of an aside, Mr. Chairman, that this latter comment is particularly painful and revealing. Anna should have received treatment when her illness first became noticeable. Now, nine years later, time was running out.

Other agencies were also to recommend Warrendale, but the painful fact was that intensive treatment of this kind, the only kind that might have saved Anna, costs about $600 a month. Because Anna was not a CAS ward—and I emphasize that particular irony to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) in the hope that the regulations of The Children's Institutions Act may be altered—no public facility was available to her.

In July of 1962, the X's sadly admitted their 15-year-old daughter to the adult psychiatric wing of the Toronto Western hospital. She had been through a mental health clinic, education, Attorney General, poked her nose into reform institutions for a moment, and now went to the psychiatric wing of the Toronto Western hospital. Mr. X had travelled 13,000 miles and spent thousands of dollars in his search for more encouraging help. This was their last resort, as it is too so many parents of disturbed children. In fact, few of them have the strength and resources to hold out for so long, before relegating their child to the ranks of the adult mentally ill.

The public hospital system, however, was no more equipped to help Anna than the educational or welfare system. Anna remained in this large hospital, under the care of a psychiatrist with no training in child psychiatry, until August, 1963.

Now, the psychiatrist brought the Big Sisters association into the case. No noticeable success was achieved. After he had failed with Anna, he refused to consider alternative proposals by either Big Sisters or the X family. Although he had never previously heard of Warrendale, he refused to consider sending Anna there, because, he wrote:

I had no idea the cost was so high. I would think that this in itself ought to make one feel as though guaranteed results could not be available from such an institution.

I cannot say what strange logic lies behind this statement, but it does seem to point out the woeful failure of our public psychiatric authorities to be aware of and capable of recognizing the most advanced forms of treatment for children.

The Big Sisters, who had strongly suggested a treatment centre like Warrendale, finally gave up. I emphasize, to those few hon. members here who are interested in this field, the number of groups that have had to give up.

In February, 1963, they wrote to the X family and I ask the hon. members to put themselves into the minds of the family on receiving this letter:

In accordance with a plan arranged by the hospital and this agency, Anna was allowed gradually increased privileges to leave the hospital, to look for employment, and to visit the Big Sisters services.

Anna was not able to cope with a minimum degree of independence. She manipulated rules and people to achieve her own ends. This took the form of a surface respect for the privileges while, at the same time and within the limits set, she was abusing them.

She arranged to have appointments for employment prospects at a time when she could meet friends or go on a shopping spree. Except for one close girl friend, these friends were boys whom she claimed to have known for a long time. These boys loaned her money and gave her cigarettes.

The greater the freedom Anna had, the greater became her almost frantic desire to see these friends, and the greater her inability to control herself. The attempts to find employment have already been reported to you, although since then there have been further unsuccessful attempts.

It was soon evident to us that we could not make community living arrangements for Anna. She could not live in a home where there would be no controls, and says herself she would be afraid of this. It would be impossible to find people strong enough to withstand her manipulation and her abusiveness. Neither could she live in a residence with rules, because she would break them all.

The letter goes on:

It was with regret that we had to report to the conference that we have concluded that Anna cannot be maintained in the community and, at the present time, she is unable to live independently even with the support of a voluntary agency. We recommend an institutional placement and currently are exploring available resources.

And let no one underestimate the recommending facilities of Big Sisters or the exploratory capacities they have. These are scarce and expensive, they say of treatment facilities:

Although her age militates against her response to treatment we do not believe that it is hopeless. Teen-age girls with problems just as deep as Anna's have been rehabilitated in controlled treatment centres.

Big Sisters also pointed out that a large institution would be unable to handle the girl as convincingly, as successfully, manipulative as Anna; and this proved to be true of Toronto Western where she was able to deceive and use everyone from nurses to elevator boys.

Later that year, in May, Big Sisters wrote again, and I quote:

This agency regrets that we have been unsuccessful in finding a place for Anna. We have tried every resource which we know and which we believe would have been helpful to Anna and there is nothing more we can do.

Anna is a 15- or 16-year-old girl in a province of this wealth and this population and "there is nothing more we can do."

Nevertheless, the Toronto Western psychiatrist was now insistent upon returning Anna to the community. Now the X family wrote a letter to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) in a last appeal for help. He replied that they should consult Dr. McNeel, director of the mental health branch of The Department of Health.

The letter from the hon. Minister of Health contained the following observation:

Unfortunately, we are not always in a position to solve or propose a solution to such problems.

The hon. Minister of Health indicated that all that was available to her was treatment in an Ontario hospital.

Unfortunately, that too had proved to be a barren hope. The previous month the X's had taken Anna to be interviewed at the Ontario hospital in North Bay. The resident psychiatrist there explained that Anna was too clever and manipulative to be contained in such an institution.

The X's now turned to Dr. McNeel, whom they visited in Toronto in March of 1963. Dr. McNeel was sympathetic but advised them that nothing was available for Anna in the entire province. The X's recalled that Dr. McNeel felt that nothing could be done to help Anna until she actually broke the law. Perhaps the hon. Minister can see now why I am bringing it into his field.

During this time, when arrangements were being made for Anna to leave the Toronto Western hospital and to live in a Toronto boarding house, the X's frantically wrote to Dr. Whery, psychiatrist at Montreal children's hospital, and to doctors at Verdun Protestant hospital, among others. The Quebec Department of Health was rather more helpful in offering services to Anna than Ontario had been, but the Ontario department declined interest in helping to pay for such services on the grounds of the complexity of interprovincial arrangements.

Ontario advised the X's to keep looking in Ontario. Meanwhile the director of psychiatric services in The Quebec Department of Health wrote the X's that the medical consensus was:

This girl is suffering from a severe personality disorder and would require long-term treatment in a closed institution.

No such institution was available in Ontario. I approach the dénouement.

Anna had finally been discharged from Toronto Western and was living in a Toronto boarding house. The Ontario Department of Public Welfare, rehabilitation branch, was to provide supervision while Anna attended a hairdressing school, but that lasted scarcely a month. There followed a series of disappearances, for weeks and months at a time. The X's made desperate trips to Toronto to locate her, sometimes finding her in a coffee house or in various apartments with men. Twice, during the winter of 1963, she turned up at home to borrow money and promptly vanished once more.

Before I bring this presentation to an end, let me remind you again that this is a young girl, with remarkably resourceful parents who explored every community facility, who moved from one department and one branch and one voluntary agency to another, without finding the answer to their problem.

In April of 1964, one year ago, when she was 17 years old, Anna turned up in jail in Daytona Beach, Florida. Her parents bailed her out, paid her various debts, and brought her home, where she was found to have contracted venereal disease. She stayed at home intermittently for about a month, spending most of her time in pool halls, tangling with police in local restaurants, and associating with a gang of motorcyclists. That winter was, in Mrs. X's anguished words, "A nightmare of stolen cars, accidents, sudden visits and disappearances."

In the summer of 1964, Anna had again disappeared, leaving behind a trail of cheques, forged in her father's name. Recalling Dr.

McNeel's advice that only once Anna had broken the law might she finally receive treatment, the X family allowed the bank to lay charges against her. Anna was brought to court on September 26, 1964, put on probation during a remand for a pre-sentence report and disappeared once again.

The police could not find her to bring her to court for her next appearance. She was finally located in October, in the Don jail, where she had been in on a vagrancy charge. Her defiance of the court and her easy evasion of the law would read almost like a comic opera if the history of this brilliant and disturbed youngster were not so uniformly tragic.

On October 2, she was remanded in custody but, due to a clerical error, she was let out on bail—bail provided by an unknown man. On October 7, when she again did not appear in court, another unknown man appeared to testify on her behalf. He led police to an apartment where Anna was found beaten and drugged. Magistrate Bolsby sent the girl back to the Don jail for medical treatment.

On October 9, Anna was sent to Ontario hospital, 999 Queen Street, on a warrant of recurring seven day periods for psychiatric examination.

Within three days, Anna, who had no clothes, managed to secure an intern's uniform and walk out of the hospital in disguise, using two other patients as foils. She disappeared again. In her absence, she was discharged from the hospital, due to yet another clerical error. In fact, automatic discharge only operates when the period of elopement—which is the hospital designation for what people would call escape—exceeds the stipulated time of the warrant.

Anna reappeared when she was deported from the United States after having spent some time in jail in Buffalo; she spent Christmas, 1964, back in the Don jail.

I ask hon. members to harken to this: On December 28, Dr. Shinobu, of Queen Street hospital, testified in court that Anna was a psychopathic personality needing long-term custody and therapy. Medical evidence submitted to the magistrate showed that Anna needed long-term custody for her own protection but, because of her coherence and plausibility, was not defined as certifiably mentally ill in the technical sense of the term under The Mental Hospitals Act.

May I make a minor observation at this point; I have tried to understand this in discussion with psychiatrists. Apparently, within the context of the Act as presently defined and operative, mental illness demands, in order for certification, a certain estrangement from reality sufficient to grant that certification. In the case of a psychopathic personality, the person is conscious of the act to be performed and frequently conscious of the consequences thereof and therefore the treatment orientation is somewhat different. The precise definition within the meaning of the Act, as it presently operates, does not apply.

On February 11, 1965, Anna was placed on probation and required to live at a girls' residence in Toronto known as the Sancta Maria House.

Newspaper accounts of Anna's various appearances in court make much of the painful scene in which both parents and daughter express love for each other and hopelessness for the future.

The root bitterness and futility of the X's long search for health can be seen in the letter written to them by Magistrate Bolsby the day he sentenced their daughter, and I quote from that letter:

I do not expect Anna to abide by the terms of the probation order and it is quite likely that she will be back on my hands for a breach of probation in due course. If so, there will be no alternative but to send her to prison and hope that she can obtain some useful psychiatric assistance there. This may be a pessimistic outlook but all the medical evidence points in that direction.

The prison to which Anna will be sent will be either Mercer reformatory or Kingston prison for women.

Needless to say Mercer, with its total lack of psychiatric facilities will spell total and final disaster for this young woman. Kingston, no more adequately equipped to rehabilitate, is scarcely more adequate to render the intensive treatment the psychopathic personality needs.

Prison, the next inevitable step for Anna X, could also be the last step. It does not need an active imagination to picture the sordid finale which Ontario prisons might provide for this vivid and painful chronicle.

Most cruelly ironic, of course, is the fact that proper treatment, provided 12 years ago, might have prevented this whole unhappy story from taking place. I wish to emphasize that it is not just Anna's story. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of these 80,000 youngsters like Anna will end by filling our training schools and criminal institutions instead of having the opportunity to become useful, happy members of society.

For prison is only the dénouement in this long chronicle of the failure of Ontario's institutions and I remind you of them: Schools, public hospitals, training schools, courts, Ontario hospitals, welfare agencies, mental health clinics—all the government's proud boasts of its fine services cannot hide the fact that it was totally unable to help one young girl who might have been saved.

Now, I appreciate the hon. Minister granting me the indulgence to read that record through from beginning to end, because I recognize that it does not impinge, except indirectly, on his department. It impinges on several departments.

I chose to read it into the record here because it is true, and I think the hon. Minister admitted this in his opening remarks, that in a sense the psychopathic personality, if not precisely to this degree, is in fact characteristic of a large number of those who inhabit our training schools, our reform institutions.

As psychiatrists have pointed out, if in fact you were going to bring all psychopathic personalities in for traditional forms of treatment, you would have to double or triple the number of beds in Ontario hospitals, because that is the number with which we are dealing. But if you wanted to treat them in a long-term therapeutic milieu—in a residential treatment centre, if you will, whether it be under this department or whether it be under The Department of Public Welfare, or indeed under the special educational facilities of The Department of Education—then that is where the emphasis must be placed.

I say to the hon. Minister opposite that there was no institution for Anna in this province which could properly have looked after her except, perhaps, one or two agencies like Warrendale. And because there are no subsidies available and costs are high, those institutions were precluded from having Anna as a girl to be treated.

Now I suggest to the hon. Minister that this is not an incidental case, this is a pattern which is true of vast numbers of emotionally disturbed children. When they are in an institution, let me point again to the Galt training school, without any social worker and without any resident psychologist and with only part-time psychiatric help, then with the best will in the world it is impossible to provide the intensive treatment required to rehabilitate this kind of emotional disturbance.

I think that this is one of the most critical areas of government policy. I appreciate the hon. Minister talking about Hagersville and introducing that new school several weeks ago in this House. But I point out that the small group units to which he referred are for children under 12, children who because of their age should not, I contend, even be in this department. And if they are under 12, in these small group homes, there was no suggestion that we would have the kind of clinical team facilities required to do the job.

In a very real sense other departments of government were more culpable in this case than that of the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions—health, welfare, education, Attorney General. But in the broad sense all branches stand equally indicted. One young girl with a psychotic personality made a desperate attempt, a herculean effort, at assistance; and not a single resource readily available to the girl in question, or to the parents, Mr. Chairman.

I appreciate that the hon. Minister cannot give a precise answer to this problem, but I felt it should be spelled out for him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have no specific answers to this general problem which has been raised by the hon. member, but I would not want by my silence to suggest that I was not concerned, as indeed all of the government is concerned and all the hon. members of this House, with these tragic situations.

I by no means feel it is as widespread as the hon. member suggests, but no matter to what degree, it is very important and it is pitiful, it is sorrowful, it is a tremendous problem with which the most able people in this country, yes, and all the world, have been struggling.

The hon. member said he searched hard to find such a case. I am sure he did search hard, because it really is a terrible story, a very depressing one. I am sure that having read that he will appreciate the difficult problem that I would have, and people on my staff, to maintain an optimistic point of view in reading many of the files of the youngsters in our institutions. It becomes most depressing, because you see everything has been tried.

Now, really, we do what we see it is possible to do. This is one of the reasons for setting up a department of research. Our department will do whatever it can do. The hon. member has brought out a case which poses tremendous problems which have been attacked by jurisdictions all over the world. I had a note here from Dr. Tadieuz Grygier, and I hope that Dr. Grygier will not be accused of whitewashing because he does not condemn the department. I think it is very important to read this into the record because it is a thoughtful comment on this particular problem. He states:

The case described is typical of the cases discussed at the annual inter-faculty inter-professional conferences initiated several years ago at the University of Toronto by the school of social work. The facilities and professions represented included sociology, psychology, law, psychiatry, pediatrics, nursing, education and others. Despite several years of study, no agreement had been reached as to what is the best way to approach these so-called multi-problem families and children. No department, private agency, profession or co-ordinating agency in any country has the answer.

Of course, I know this is a rather negative reply. Merely because no country has the answer does not mean that we should not concern ourselves with it. But really, I do not know what the hon. member would expect that The Department of Reform Institutions should do. What we can do in our training schools for a particularly difficult problem like this.

The hon. member suggested that perhaps there might be some hope in the residential type of treatment for this girl. I am sure he must agree, after having read this and studied it, that residential type of operation would not be suitable for this girl. All through the piece, everyone is suggesting a controlled approach. As a matter of fact, I do not know if the girl had gone into Warrendale, I do not know how that would have been suitable for her, because Warrendale is an open institution.

Mr. S. Lewis: It is an open institution within certain defined control areas. When you say that everything has been tried, in fact the one avenue which has not been tried is the treatment centre emphasis. It is the one avenue which, groups like Big Sisters and attendant psychiatrists were agreed, might have given the solution.

The import of my remarks is very simple. With the greatest respect to Dr. Grygier, if across the province of Ontario there were, whether it be in your department or in the hon. Minister of Public Welfare's department, residential or confined treatment centres with very heavy emphasis on treatment milieu and clinical team work, it is quite possible that the Anna X's of this world would have their problem solved before the age of 15 rather than reach the threshold of a personal disaster at the age of 18.

There is a total lack of facility across the province for such people; and it is not a minimal number of people. Any superintendent of any Ontario hospital in the province of Ontario will indicate the extent of this problem. The directors of Warrendale, of Boys' Village, of Sunnyside children's centre, of Meryvale, of the Ottawa Protestant children's village—any directors of these centres—will tell you about the problem of psychopathic children and schizophrenic children and the severely emotionally disturbed, and the number who exist in the province of Ontario.

It is not minimal in any sense. Many of them inhabit our training schools; invariably, that is the ultimate consequence to which they come. If they do come to that unhappy end, then I am suggesting that within the reform institutions setup, as within welfare, there must be provision for a very intensive treatment milieu.

And with the greatest of respect, Mr. Minister, I repeat this does not exist at the present time. Indeed, I think you yourself would probably admit that it does not exist at the present time. The mere suggestion that there are not enough social workers or psychologists or skilled people for counselling purposes is open demonstration that it cannot exist. Girls like this can be swallowed up and destroyed in such a system unless a new emphasis intervenes.

I appeal for such an emphasis and I put this case on the record as a classic documentation of the requirements. Apart from that, the area of argument is a clinical one and I would not pretend to be able to engage in it.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: But does the hon. member appreciate that his indication that this is a psychopathic personality really is an admission that there is no known treatment today for psychopathic personalities of this nature? This is one of the problems. I have a note here which was handed to me by the chief psychiatrist of the department, Dr. W. F. Wright, a very eminent gentleman. He says there is at the present time no method of successfully treating a psychopathic personality.

I think one thing the hon. member's presentation pointed up, in addition to the fact of course that there is a great need to try and find an answer to this, and I will agree with him wholeheartedly on this, is the difficult cases that the department has to deal with and our training schools have to deal with and why they deserve credit for anything they can do to improve the situation. They do whatever they can to set along the right path as many as they are able. Certainly if there is at any time any hope placed before our department by our specialists, by the psychiatrists, by our research department, that such a unit would be helpful, might be successful, if there is any chance of success and it should in fact be part of our department, we would be very glad to go into that.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I say then, Mr. Minister, that as a single and, at this point, a very humble member of this House, may I commend to you a study within your department of some of the residential treatment centres that fall within the children's institutions Act under The Department of Public Welfare, some of those that I have enumerated, and see whether in fact their methods not be embraced by The Department of Reform Institutions. I think this is the objective to which you should logically aim in setting up your new Hagersville school and any further schools.

Perhaps I can itemize it. Perhaps indeed you can do it for me, and demonstrate some of the weaknesses and concerns I have.

I looked at your annual report on training schools very carefully. It had a very impressive statistical documentation of reasons for entry into a training school—number of days, problems of rehabilitation, problems of re-entry—but nowhere in that report, from cover to cover, was there an analysis of the treatment staff in each individual institution. We do not know how many social workers there are at Galt; we do not know how many psychologists at Galt or at Lindsay or at Bowmanville or at Trelawney House; we do not know how many teachers have proper degrees at these places; we have no idea of some of the fundamental facts of the training and treatment in the training schools.

Now let me be unkind; let me suggest to the hon. Minister that one of the reasons for omission is that it is probably not a very happy record to spell out in a report. I suggest to the hon. Minister that it is much easier to place on record the number of social workers at any school than it is to analyze statistically those inmates who have become rehabilitated—or break them down by age categories. It is very easy to tell us the number of social workers or resident psychologists; but they are not in the report. If the hon. Minister is serious in his training and treatment emphasis, then I suggest to him strongly that they should be there.

Perhaps for the interest of the House—and I will break it down to the girls' training schools, because I am personally quite familiar with St. Mary's training school in Toronto, with Galt and with Trelawney House—perhaps he might tell us, leaving out the superintendent involved, the number of full-time social workers or full time psychologists at each of the girls' training schools in the province of Ontario. I for one would be interested. I am trying to corroborate the contention made.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not have the detailed information for each school, but I would be very glad to get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. S. Lewis: I thank the hon. Minister. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) wants to enter this debate and since he is a good colleague, I do not want to go on much longer. But I do want to bring two further things to the attention of the hon. members of the House. My contention is—and I come right back and reiterate the central theme for raising this case and the central theme in all of this—that if the case histories you find in your files are frequently bizarre, and you have implied that they are, and if they come with degrees of emotional disturbance and horrifying environmental background, as frequently they do and you have admitted they do, then I suggest that we must have at the training school level a treatment milieu which knows no equal.

We do not even approach it. I indicated in this Legislature some time ago that there were 116 girls at the training school at Galt under the age of 16 and not a single resident psychologist, not a single resident social worker. I am sorry to repeat it ad infinitum, but it must be done.

Incidentally, in the Galt Evening Reporter of March 3, 1965, the superintendent of the training school corroborated almost word for word every contention I had made in the House the previous day with one small addendum which I think is of interest.

Mr. Lewis charged that there are 116 girls at the training school but not one social worker or psychologist. Mr. Wilson explained to the Reporter today that there were openings at the school for both these posts but no applicants to his knowledge. Hiring is carried out in Toronto by The Department of Reform Institutions.

Now, quoting Mr. Wilson: "They do not like to work in an authoritarian atmosphere."

I remember the hon. Minister somewhat vigorously berated me earlier in the session for using words like "punitive" and "authoritarian" when describing these training schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order!

The hon. member said "punitive" and "barbaric." Mr. Wilson used the word “authoritarian.” It is a mistake, and if Mr. Wilson feels that he is running an authoritarian institution that is his fault, because he is not told, authorized or encouraged to run an authoritarian institution and I will have a talk with Mr. Wilson.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine. I read purely from the press report. Mr. Wilson, of course, as the hon. Minister himself pointed out, suffers from what all the leading supervisors of our reform institutions suffer from, an atmosphere of inadequate staff and inadequate facilities and overcrowding. That is why you have members of the heads of staff at Guelph, and heads of staff at Mercer and heads of staff at Galt trying to depart from this particular Ministry.

Now, they may have their own reasons; perhaps Mr. Wilson does not like to work within an authoritarian atmosphere, I do not know. Perhaps out of respect to all concerned, I will not overemphasize that particular aspect. I just say to you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did Mr. Wilson say there was no social worker at Galt?

Mr. S. Lewis: That is what Mr. Wilson told me and that is what I reported and that is what is again confirmed in the press story—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, it so happens that Mr. Wilson is a social worker.

Mr. S. Lewis: Oh, I said except for the superintendents; knowing that you would say that—I said except for the superintendent. Surely the administrator of an institution is not expected to be the chief social worker of that institution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nothing wrong with it!

Mr. S. Lewis: I said it because that is also true of St. Mary's training school in Toronto, and there, too, you do not have any kind of adequate social worker, psychological emphasis.

Well, I want to go back to the Toronto Daily Star—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, just to keep the record straight: The hon. member knows that the diagnostic centre is right there on the grounds at Galt. We have social workers there and obviously it is not necessary to have social workers at both institutions. Anyone who requires the services of a social worker will get this from the other building at Galt, which is right on the same property.

Mr. S. Lewis: That is an interesting contention. It is not one to which I subscribe but I know that does not bother the hon. Minister.

I say to him, with respect, that the Galt training school should have resident and available for the girls, living with them all the time, social worker staff and psychological staff; they should not have to run a quarter of a mile down the road to the diagnostic and treatment centre when they have a particular problem. If it is not a quarter of a mile, perhaps it is 150 yards.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which makes quite a difference.

Mr. S. Lewis: All right. It makes quite a difference—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but although I think this was an interesting discussion I think he will agree that we should try and get these things clarified. In the first place, I said that we would like to get as many social workers as we can. Obviously, we have been going through these mental gymnastics for the last few days. I say that if he can find the social workers who are prepared to come in I would be very glad to hire them. The obvious answer is that they do not want to go with The Department of Reform Institutions. It is a fruitless discussion. Then we ask you why all other types of social agencies are short of social workers; does the same thing apply to them? They are all short of social workers. So it is not just our department; that is not the reason.

In addition to this, the suggestion that a good vast army of social workers would solve our problem is, of course, not so. Social workers, or psychiatrists, or psychologists, are not the be-all and the end-all. We presume this will help. You have to get somebody with some experience to deal with these things, and we presume these are the people who are trained for it, who would be perhaps of some great assistance. So we would like to have them. But there are other people on the staffs of these institutions who are doing a good job, even though they may not be social workers.

Mr. S. Lewis: I could not agree more with the hon. Minister. I do not suggest that you have to have a ratio of one social worker to one youngster in an institution. I would say that, just as in the school, it is desirable to have social workers or psychologists strategically placed at the institutions for referral purposes. Just as your teacher can refer, so your housemother can refer. No institution can operate adequately without this. I must say I am totally perplexed by the government's inability, in several ministries—I admit to the hon. Minister that it does not plague only his department—to find trained staff.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All governments.

Mr. S. Lewis: Not all governments. We will, later on, in fields of public welfare and health, introduce activities of other jurisdictions which are not having the same—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will permit me, in this particular type of work, in correctional work, I have gone through the statistics of all the provinces. I have gone through those of many of the American states. I have gone through the figures for the United Kingdom. They all suffer from the same problem. I think I would like to get that on the record. Even a province for which the hon. member may have a great deal of admiration, suffers from the same—I mean a jurisdiction, let me put it that way, which was built up, by and large, for 20 years, by the party to whose philosophy he pays allegiance. It suffers from the same problem. As a matter of fact, in many instances they do not have the staff and the facilities we do, on the basis of staff-to-student ratio.

The point I am trying to make is that I want to try hard—although I know it is difficult—to kill this idea that there is something about The Department of Reform Institutions of this great province that discourages good and able people from working for it; because we have many able people working for the department. Those who are more dedicated will work; and the staff shortage we suffer from is endemic in all jurisdictions in this particular field of work.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister has faced up to the possibility of a real job being done at the university and high school level here? We have today, I quite realize, a shortage of staff right through his department and other departments. Other jurisdictions have the same problem. But today we have a unique opportunity. We have the teen-age population of this world really burgeoning and now entering university. We have a resource here from which to draw, and from which no generation in our memory has had a similar chance to draw. We have young people by the thousands now, anxious to get into life. We have idealism here, which has been demonstrated time after time, and which can be mobilized.

I wonder if the hon. Minister has really attempted to reach down into the senior high school level and set up liaison to capture this idealism, and to say to these young people: "There is a challenging task here in this whole field of reform"; to say to them: "We have a programme of scholarships; we will give assistance; we want you to think seriously of the challenge that this field presents"?

I think the hon. Minister has a great opportunity here. It means work; it means a great deal of planning. It means perhaps more staff at this level of recruitment. I know something has been done, but how much has been done? How much thought has been given to this field by this hon. Minister and by this department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, we are doing whatever we can. I think I mentioned the other day that we are working in close co-operation with the school of social work at the University of Toronto. We are in contact with and have made some plans with other universities. We are hoping to encourage more people into this—and I hope the hon. members will not think I am belabouring this point too much, and I do not want them to feel it is critical of them—but there are too many pseudo-experts on the outside who put themselves up as experts in this field, and who, at regular intervals, get into the newspapers and give the department such a black name that precisely what we were discussing exists.

It is very difficult to get people. How are we going to encourage young people by saying: "There is a great challenge for you in this department," when day in and day out they pick up a newspaper in which someone is giving a completely false impression of what goes on within our department? I am sure the hon. member, in his travels around the province, in some of our institutions, must have seen a great number of very dedicated people; but it is very difficult to encourage the young people to get involved in it, and we are doing everything we possibly can.

We hope, with the new positions we have established—an administrator of adult female institutions, and adult male institutions, and so on, and with the appointment of a director of education, which we shall be announcing I think very shortly—they will find that perhaps this will proceed along more quickly than it has been able to do in the past.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Incidentally—pardon me. I have been handed a note. I should have mentioned this. I thought I had mentioned it the other day. We will have seven students in psychology—from the University of Waterloo—doing field work this coming summer.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has indicated that some of us who are pseudo-experts—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Mr. Chairman, I made it quite clear that I am not referring to any hon. member in this House. I said, “outside of this House.”

Mr. Troy: You did not make it clear.

Mr. Young: But, Mr. Chairman, I think we have to face the fact that every department in this government, and every department of any government, gets its full share of criticism. In our newspapers we have a great deal of criticism of The Department of Education and its failure to develop certain kinds of programmes and curricula and all this sort of thing. We certainly get all kinds of criticism of The Department of Labour. We have heard, this last week, very serious criticism. All these criticisms are widespread in our civilization and they are not all in this House. But this does not mean that young people are not going to be attracted to a challenge in these departments. Every day young people are meeting challenges. They are going to work at all kinds of activities which are being criticized, and criticized severely everywhere; so I do not think this needs to bother the hon. Minister that much.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope the hon. member is right.

Mr. J. C. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Mr. Chairman, on this last vote; I will be very brief, but I cannot let this occasion pass without saying something about the hon. Minister's plans for building a new training school for boys near Sudbury. I was very happy when this announcement was made a few months ago. I was especially glad to learn that it will be built within a 25-mile radius of the city of Sudbury, so that it can make full use of the facilities available at Laurentian University, and especially their department of psychology. I spoke to the officials of several service clubs in Sudbury, and in the Valley, and they will welcome this further opportunity to serve those less fortunate than themselves. They are, I must say, very anxious to support this school.

The proposed new school will take boys of every religious denomination. This is an experiment which is welcomed by the members of the clergy and the leaders of various denominations in the Sudbury district. This seems to be a valuable way of teaching the boys to live together with other faiths and widen their view of the world.

In a small school, such as that proposed for my riding, boys are going to get the individual and personal attention they need and I am sure it will make a real contribution to the great task of helping boys who get into trouble.

The most valuable factor I see in this school is the fact that it will be the first of its kind in the north. We all appreciate the strength of family ties: the old song says that “there is no place like home,” and although we have heard it often, it is still very true. Most persons, I am told, even boys at schools who have had unhappy relationships with their parents, cannot wait for the day when they will be allowed to go back home. As they are such strong family ties, it is indeed important that we make every effort to preserve them. I know that the hon. Minister is very sensitive to these facts, and I know that he has to balance many factors when arriving at the decisions regarding an area in which he will place a new school. We have to remember that there is a shortage of professional staff; that public money has to be spent where it will do the greatest good; and that he can only provide facilities where there is such a need.

Mr. Chairman, we in the back benches often wonder why the Opposition is so severe in its criticism of The Department of Reform Institutions—although it is their duty, I presume, to criticize us on this side of the House—but in the short period of time that we have been here, we have realized that the hon. Minister has given his department great dedication and, indeed, a new purpose.

Human values rate very highly with the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions. His decision to establish a training school in the Sudbury district to serve the great mid-north is another indication that his department intends to give every part of Ontario equal treatment. Our boys from the north will be able to have visits from their families and they will not be so cut off from their homes.

Mr. Chairman, I completely endorse the wisdom and the humanity of the hon. Minister's proposal and I sincerely hope that construction of this school will commence very soon.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, I may be able to explain why the Opposition gets a little critical once in a while. Following on the words of the hon. member for Nickel Belt; and, Mr. Chairman, I recognize, of course, the criteria that influences the placing and the removal of institutions to or from an area, it is not based on what the institution can do for the area, but exactly the reverse. It must be recognized, though, that the economics of Elliot Lake were at least partly the reason the reform school was originally placed at Elliot Lake in 1961, and as a result of various statements from various Ministers in the debate that year.

I want to place on the record, if I may, a few comments from substantial people in that area and as a result ask the hon. Minister a few questions. I quote from the Sault Daily Star of November 7, 1964, as follows:

It was a shock to residents of this uranium centre and the area in general when it was announced that the Ontario reformatory in Elliot Lake will close in the near future—

Mr. Troy: The riding became Liberal, that is one of the reasons.

Mr. Farquhar: I continue:

In a telephone conversation with Mr. Bloom, accountant for the improvement district, the Star learned that it will mean the loss of a $290,000 payroll for Elliot Lake.

"It is quite a blow to have families move at the present time," he said. "It will mean that at least 30 people, many with families, will be on the move. This comes at a time when more families are leaving the town-site each week. This kind of action at this particular time by the government is something we could have done without."

We [meaning the Sault Daily Star] inquired if Mr. Bloom knew what Allan Grossman, Minister of Reform Institutions, meant when he said: "The Elliot Lake location was unsatisfactory, largely because treatment and other professional personnel necessary for a correctional programme were too few in the area."

This was news to Mr. Bloom as he had not heard why the move was made. In his opinion he thought that the facilities had measured up to standard.

He said, "The training centres seem to be working well. The boys had a rink in winter; they played ball in summer; had exhibition games out there that were well organized. I just cannot understand the move."

The chairman of the improvement area told us that the municipality was having great difficulty, in the light of a difficult assessment, of managing the levy for the new home for the aged in Thessalon. In the light of this then, and since Elliot Lake is a government corporation, the situation has an amusing slant to it. With one hand the government removes an institution and with the other hand offers money for a loan. It may make sense to some, but it surely sounds funny to many people, especially in the uranium centre.

Elsewhere in news items in connection with the removal of this institution, which was one of the most unpleasant Christmas presents the improvement district could receive, there appear statements to the effect:

—that 45 families will be removed from Elliot Lake to other parts of Ontario at the expense of the provincial government. Mr. Grossman admits his decision was drastic but that many of the staff will likely be moved to a new training centre in Fort William.

Another interesting item appeared in the Globe and Mail on November 5, 1964, as follows:

Ontario reformatory on Quirke Lake north of here will be closed. Most of the 45 staff members will leave at Christmas.

Allan Grossman, Minister of Reform Institutions said in Toronto that lack of professional personnel led to the decision to close the four-year old institution which houses about 50 young males.

"Even if an inmate had a bad tooth," he said, "we had to take him to Blind River for treatment."

I would just like to comment for a moment on the suggestion that professional personnel was lacking. The hon. Minister must know that in Elliot Lake there is a $3.5 million hospital equipped with the finest of modern equipment and it has never been short of well qualified personnel, even though operating at 50 per cent capacity. Because the local dentist was killed just at that time in a car accident, which meant that for a time there was a lack of dental service, surely the hon. Minister does not mean that Elliot Lake is unique in this respect.

I quote again from the Globe and Mail of November 5, 1964:

The prison was established by the Ontario government in the unused mine buildings early in 1961 to help ease the plight of Elliot Lake, hit by unemployment and economic difficulties because of the closing of uranium mining.

Mr. Chairman, we know on this side of the House that the closing or opening or placing of institutions is entirely the prerogative of the hon. Minister. I know that there was some reason to do with the acquisition of property which meant that retaining the institution in Elliot Lake would have involved some expenditure, but I also feel that this was not reason enough to close the reform school; opened in 1961, closed at Christmas time, 1964, possibly the lowest point that the economy of Elliot Lake ever had or possibly ever will reach—we hope.

Mr. Chairman, you can imagine what effect this closure had, coming without notice on the municipality at a time when disillusioned people were leaving by the hundreds and commercial enterprises were folding up.

Two weeks later, on November 26, the following item appeared in our local paper:

A $1.5 million training school for boys to be built near Sudbury will be the first in northern Ontario and the first in the province to serve all denominations. Reform Institutions Minister, Allan Grossman, announcing the plan yesterday, said that the location will reduce travel for boys committed to schools in southern Ontario and for parents who now are unable to visit their sons in the south.

The province will pay both the construction and maintenance of the new school, for 120 boys aged between 8 and 18.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we do not put ourselves in a position of denying the city of Sudbury the acquisition of this immense complex and we certainly admit that the need for this institution is in the north, but at the same time we will know better than to believe the hon. Minister if he comes to this Legislature with any more statements to the effect that he is sympathetic toward any area that is suffering from economic disaster.

I hope that the hon. Minister will elaborate on the reasons for the closing of this institution, against now building a new one 90 miles away.

The reasons we have heard are vague, Mr. Chairman, and we feel he must have better ones than we have heard so far.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin has really implied as to why we closed it up. Surely he must not think that this was an easy decision to make. It was a most difficult decision to make. But, as he has intimated, our lease was expiring. We were involved in having to put hundreds of thousands of dollars into buying and rebuilding.

A decision had to be made. If we put these hundreds of thousands of dollars into that location, is this a proper location for such an institution? Or is it not? On the basis of those criteria we had to make the decision to move it.

I remember, in the first place, we went into—I was hoping we would have the figures here. We went into all sorts of studies to find out what effect it would have on the economy; because even though this could not be the major factor, we were concerned with it. It did not run anywhere near—it never ran anywhere near—$200,000, incidentally. But even if it had, I could not possibly—and I am sure the hon. member must appreciate this government could not possibly—justify spending many hundreds of thousands of dollars to establish an institution which had no likelihood of improving its situation insofar as what is required for a reformatory. It just was not working well.

The hon. member has stated that it was working well. All the reports I had from my staff, all the reports which were on file, showed a great deal of dissatisfaction. Treatment staff was unavailable. We could not get any social workers, psychologists or psychiatrists. I know we do not have some of these on permanent staff in some of our institutions, but they are at least available for visiting at regular intervals. And it was most difficult to get any of those interested in coming to Elliot Lake.

The hon. member also suggested—it was a rather funny expression he used, I think—that the government, at the same time it was closing this institution, was loaning money to help the economy. I think this proves the sincerity of the government in making this decision, because it was interested in the economy but could not justify keeping a reformatory there. And there is a difference between establishing a school up in Sudbury and closing this; in the first place, you are talking about two different types of institutions. The school in Sudbury was a training school for juveniles, and this was an adult institution and not a suitable place for it; we could not do anything for those boys. It was failing as an institution.

I made the statement here last year, before we even discussed Elliot Lake—if I recall, I was asked a question about location—I think the hon. member for Yorkview asked the question. I think he and another hon. member raised the question about where we would put these places, where we were going to establish our institutions. I think the matter of the federal government putting in a penal institution in Warkworth was current at the time, and there was some interest in where we put these places—whether we put them in for political reasons or not.

At that time I gave a commitment. I think the words I employed were something like this:

So long as I am head of this department, no institution will be placed where it should not be because of political reasons. I am not going to play with the lives of these people for political reasons.

It was a difficult decision to make. The hon. member must appreciate that. It is not easy to close a place. It is a lot easier to establish a new one. It was a very difficult one, we thought about it, we worried about it; but the decision had to be made and it was made strictly on the basis of the proper criteria for the location of an institution.

Now, the hon. member may say: "Well, it was there already." The point is if we did not have to make a decision as to deciding definitely that this was going to be there for a good long period of time by the spending of hundreds of thousands of dollars, it might have been different. But the decision had to be faced and I could not ask my hon. colleagues in the government to let me have "x" hundreds of thousands of dollars on the basis that a place is needed there because it is doing a good job and will be there for the foreseeable future. I just could not make that decision. I am sure when the hon. member thinks that over he will appreciate we did the right thing.

Mr. Farquhar: Oh no! Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, it is just absolutely and simply a matter of opinion.

I do not accept the fact that the area or locality or the personnel were lacking. In fact I do know this: ministers were out there on a regular basis; my wife took her choir out there on many occasions, whenever they were asked. I know as far as we were concerned and the local people were concerned, it was successful. We have not heard that it was not successful.

We do know that—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I can tell the hon. member that my qualified staff, who are interested in doing a proper job, were reporting month in and month out that they could not do the proper job there and I finally said: "Well, I am not going to make a decision like this unless I see the place myself."

The hon. member will recall this: I went up there and I attempted to reach him so he could visit the place with me. I went through the place myself with my staff. I had them explain the problems and I just could not argue against the logic of what they were saying in view of the decision I had to make.

Mr. Farquhar: To get my remarks into the proper context, I did not say there were political reasons behind this at all. I am only talking about the merits of one place as against the merits of another place. I do know that the facilities there were not adequate, I know the area is adequate. There is not that much difference between temperature in Elliot Lake and temperature in Sudbury, or terrain—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has nothing to do with temperature or terrain.

Mr. Farquhar: —or schools or church facilities or any other facilities! There is not that much difference. The fact remains that the money would have to be spent before those facilities would be adequate, I know this because the facilities they had were not adequate.

As I have said before, it is the hon. Minister's prerogative. I do not know why I stand here arguing, it is the hon. Minister's prerogative except that I—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think you are doing your job for your constituents, there is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Farquhar: I am still not convinced that it would not have worked and done a good job, both for the community and for the institution.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, if you were going to build a new training school, why could you not have built it in the riding of Algoma-Manitoulin and not in the riding of Nickel Belt?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The choice of the location was taken in consideration of the area from which most of the students would be drawn. This was charted on a map. We saw where every youngster came from during the past year, and this was the best location having regard to the fact that we were just at this time going ahead with one training school in northern Ontario. Algoma-Manitoulin apparently did not meet this criteria, in addition to which the criteria set down by the Canadian corrections association indicates it must be near certain facilities.

Sudbury has a university. This is very important. We were just talking earlier about encouraging young people to come into this work, and the best way to do it is to establish, if at all possible, as close to a university location as we possibly can. This is what we are trying to accomplish, and this is what we have done.

Mr. Troy: Well, what university is near Alfred? What university is near Uxbridge? What university is near Cobourg and Bowmanville and all these others?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, all I can speak for is what the policy of the department is now and what is going on under my leadership. I do not want this to be construed as criticism of my predecessors. Every one does things in the light of the way they see it at that time. It may very well be when those schools were established there was no such criteria laid down by the people involved in this work.

I read this as the criteria. I discuss it with my people. They agree with it, I agree with it and that is where the schools go.

Mr. Troy: Yes, it is the hon. Minister's prerogative. I am very glad to note that at long last the government has recognized the marvellous job that what are called denominational training schools have performed in this province. As anybody who has been in the House for some time knows, the late member for Windsor-Sandwich had pleaded with this government to help them out. It is unfortunate, too, that you are not going to have the type of people—you talk about dedicated people, but I presume you know the dedication of the brothers at Alfred and these other institutions; these are not eight-hour-a-day people; they go on duty for 12 or 18 hours. Of course, naturally, it is their vocation, and they are not of this world, and they have other ideas. But how are you going to bring in the—say, it is non-denominational—how are you going to bring in the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not denominational; it is interdenominational.

Mr. Troy: Then you have padres on your staff?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This has not been worked out in its detail, Mr. Chairman. I would ask the hon. member's indulgence not to go into the detail at this time. All I can tell him is that we are working this out with the hierarchy of the Church, with the bishops who are involved in this thing, and with a special committee of private training schools; we have been working very well together. Everything we have done has been with unanimous agreement. We have some ideas along these lines. I would not want to prejudice them by giving my views. All I can say is that it is working out well and, in respect of the religious brothers, we hope to have their continued support and assistance in the new interdenominational school.

Mr. Troy: Just a final word about that. Did I understand then that the reason you put it in the Nickel Belt area is that that is the centre of juvenile crime in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. That is not the centre at all. Obviously where there are built-up areas they will have more students coming from those areas. It was a good, geographical centre for a particular area near the facilities we want, where there is a university, and so on and so on. These were the factors involved. We hope, in the not-too-distant future, to establish another one in northern Ontario.

Mr. Troy: The last one is about these forestry camps. Where is Hendrie?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can show the hon. member on a map, but I always have trouble—

Mr. Troy: I see the picture here on your report.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Hendrie is in Simcoe county. Both Hendrie and Hillsdale are in Simcoe county, and Wendigo is in Parry Sound district. I am not very good at the map once you get beyond—

Mr. Troy: That is a forestry camp; that is the newest one you have?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wendigo Lake, yes.

Mr. Troy: What kind of inmates do you have there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a satellite of Burwash, and the staff will come out of Burwash.

Mr. Troy: The staff and the minimum security people?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, from that district.

Mr. Troy: By the way, just for the record, I know this is almost the springtime and it is the time men, in their young men's fancies, turn to a lot of things. Is this the time of year when, as you say, they elope from your institutions? About how many do this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, apparently this is what happens up at Burwash; but the elopement does not last long, I can tell you that. This is about the time they get the feeling and they start to run off. The figures, I think, are in the report. Not very many, after they run off, stay away very long; I think, out of 100, practically every one has been caught.

Mr. Troy: Have you special training for your staff?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have a special training for this. They have an aptitude for it, and they also tell me that the terrain is not conducive to getting away.

Mr. Troy: No, I mean the staff; are they specially trained and physically fit so they can chase them?

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1903 carried?

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I had an observation to make about certain Indian children in the training institutions. It may be that this should be deferred until tomorrow, if you wish to recognize 6 o'clock. Otherwise I am willing to go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

No. 68

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, April 6, 1965
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

Price per session $3.00. Address, Clerk of the House, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, April 6, 1965

Tabling report, committee on ambulance services, Mr. Wishart	1985
Foundation for the preservation of the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife, bill to establish, Mr. Auld, first reading	1986
Presenting report, Mr. Yaremko	1987
Estimates, Department of Reform Institutions, Mr. Grossman, continued	1988
Recess, 6 o'clock	2021

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the west gallery, students from Earl Haig secondary school, Willowdale and Humberstone collegiate institute, Toronto, and in the east gallery, Eastwood collegiate institute, Kitchener.

A number of members have on their desks today a letter which requires an immediate reply. To facilitate this matter, would they please forward it to my secretary as soon as possible.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, early last year, several Ministers of this government met with representatives of the Ontario medical association, the Ontario ambulance operators association and other organizations interested in the ambulance services throughout this province.

As a result of this meeting, it appeared that more information would be desirable in order that we might consider the problems of the ambulance industry and perhaps take some constructive action in respect to those problems.

The government, therefore, appointed a committee made up of several senior civil servants, together with representatives of the Ontario medical association, the Ontario hospital association, the Ontario chamber of commerce and the Ontario ambulance operators association. This committee was asked to review the problem of the ambulance operators and to study all ambulance services throughout Ontario.

As a result of the committee's studies, which have extended over the past year, a report has now been submitted to me and in order that the House may be informed of the views of the committee, I am tabling a copy of the report.

I might say that the report indicates in a statistical fashion the financial problems of a representative group of ambulance operators. The committee also brings forward recommendations for minimum and optimum equipment requirements which, it suggests, might be engrossed in some legislative form. The committee also puts forward suggestions respecting various methods by which financial provision might be made to not only improve ambulance services, but also assist municipalities in the provision of these services.

I think it is significant that a committee of such wide representation submits that the authority for dealing with ambulance services should be left with the local municipalities, with some financial assistance being provided by the province, where a municipality undertakes in a constructive fashion to provide improved ambulance services for its rate-payers.

This report and the suggestions in it will, I am sure, receive the consideration of the hon. members of this House; it is presently receiving my earnest consideration.

Additional copies of the report can be obtained from the Speaker's office.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I ask my hon. friend if he anticipates legislation arising out of the recommendations contained in this report?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we have just received the report, and it is being studied. It will be submitted to my colleagues in the government and I would hope that some of the recommendations, if time permits at this session, might be incorporated into legislation. That is as much as I am able to say at this moment.

Report adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until three of the clock on Thursday afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

BURIAL PLACE OF JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE AND HIS WIFE

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish a foundation for the preservation of the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, just a short explanation. This bill will establish the John Graves Simcoe memorial foundation. The objects of the foundation are to acquire and preserve Wolford Chapel in Devonshire, England, as an historical site for the benefit of the public, to disseminate information about the life and works of John Graves Simcoe, and to establish and maintain a trust fund to carry out these objects. Wolford Chapel contains the remains of Governor John Graves Simcoe, first Governor of Upper Canada, and his wife.

The present owner of the chapel, Sir Geoffrey Harnsworth, has generously indicated that he will give the chapel to such a foundation and the province has agreed to guarantee the terms of the trust, as indicated in the bill. The foundation will consist of 15 directors, three of whom will be named for a term of five years, six for a term of four years, and five for a term of three years. The three directors named in the bill have already undertaken to raise the funds necessary to provide for the maintenance of the chapel, which will be arranged through Ontario House in London.

This province is fortunate in its possession of historic sites which illustrate the work of our first Lieutenant-Governor. Simcoe House, where the first meeting of the executive council was held in 1792, has been restored and moved from Kingston to Upper Canada village. Navy Hall, Niagara-on-the-Lake, housed the first meeting of the legislative assembly in 1794 and is now administered for the public's benefit by the Niagara parks commission.

Governor Simcoe directed the construction of old Fort York, and named his Toronto residence after his first son, Francis Simcoe. We know the area today, where it overlooks the Don valley, as Castle Frank. It is appropriate, therefore, to mark, maintain and foster the final resting-place of John Graves Simcoe by the establishment of this foundation, to the end that all who visit it, will learn of his life and work for the province of Ontario.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton), notice of which has been submitted to him.

What is the reason for The Department of Highways' delay in approving designation of streets as connecting links for the city of Hamilton's $500,000 roadway reconstruction programme?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the clerk of the city of Hamilton was advised on April 17, 1964, that the highway routes through the city for this year's reconstruction programme would be designated as connecting links.

This designation will take place before reconstruction begins. The city has proceeded with design work and recently submitted preliminary plans. These plans were reviewed and have been returned to the district engineer. A meeting with the city's engineering staff will take place within the next week.

Mr. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Highways.

Will the hon. Minister look into the highways situation near the Garden River Indian reserve at Sault Ste. Marie, where there are no school warning signs for Indian elementary pupils?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, my answer to the hon. member for Brant in this respect is as follows.

There are two school areas in the vicinity of the Garden River reserve. They are both signed with departmental standard school area signs.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary to that, the people living at the scene say that they have approached the department before in an attempt to get some signs that would slow the traffic down. I believe there have been three children killed on the highway within eight years and the people feel that the department could do something in respect to signs. Is there any investigation going on to see what might be done?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, while that was not part of the original question, I do recall a number of circumstances when the former chief of the Garden River reserve, I believe he was known as Chief Richard Pine, made overtures to the department for surveys of the area. In each circumstance, surveys were made and it was the conclusion of those who conducted the survey that the traffic control and speed limit provisions were quite adequate and quite satisfactory.

I cannot remember the number of times that this has been done, but within my experience I think at least two or three surveys of the type that I have described here have been made with the same conclusions reached in each and every circumstance.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information.

Has any action been taken by the hon. Minister to acquire the house at Niagara-on-the-Lake as an historic site? If so, what action has been taken; if not, does the hon. Minister contemplate taking any action?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, this was brought to our attention a week ago Thursday night. I have been in touch with the owner of the property, Mr. Bowes, who has indicated that he will not destroy the property for a short time.

Tomorrow, people from the staff of Upper Canada village and the Niagara parks commission are visiting the building to find out its condition and see whether it is practical to move it or not. If it is practical, the Niagara parks commission presumably will decide whether it proposes to do this.

Mr. Paterson: Supplementary to this, Mr. Speaker, will officials of the hon. Minister be visiting the Laura Secord home, which was mentioned in the House by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator)?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not on this trip, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), a copy of which has been presented to him.

In view of the judgment of Mr. Justice Sam Hughes yesterday, that he would not evict a patient from St. Joseph's hospital until the patient had been provided with free alternative accommodation, will the practice of discharging patients from general or convalescent hospitals without alternative free accommodation now come to an end?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, not being a lawyer, I am not sure if I am in order in answering this question because I see that Mr. Justice Hughes did not make a judgment. He adjourned the case until Wednesday, I believe. However, I am not a lawyer, so I can claim, I hope, immunity from malpractice.

I would say that the function of a hospital is to provide essential treatment from the basis of medical necessity. It is the responsibility of the attending physician to admit to, and discharge from, hospital. I believe it would be a retrograde step if this pattern were to be changed by edict.

It is difficult to see how a hospital can be held responsible to find alternative free accommodation for those whose condition is such that they no longer need to be in hospital. This is an entirely new concept and one that has never been considered to be a duty of hospitals.

It is true that many hospitals have social service nurses on the staff who try to help make arrangements for patients who are to be discharged—patients who, for a variety of reasons, cannot go home. But this is simply an additional service that hospitals have assumed as a public service, rather than as a duty and responsibility of their own function, and they can never be held responsible to keep patients in hospital until other alternative free accommodation can be found.

As you know, sir, our hospitals operate under a cost-shared plan for maintenance of those patients who are insured under the plan.

When medical necessity has ended, the plan no longer covers the person's maintenance in hospital.

Without having had an opportunity to consider fully the implications of Mr. Justice Hughes' decision in this particular case, and to seek legal advice, I cannot discuss it in particular, other than to say the implications at first apparent are broad indeed, and will, I believe, require a good deal of careful consideration and study.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the report of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) for the calendar year 1964.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 51st order, the House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF REFORM INSTITUTIONS
(continued)

On vote 1903:

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Chairman, I mentioned the other day that I was hoping to be able to announce shortly the appointment of a director of education. I am now in a position to do so and I am sure that hon. members would be interested in hearing it.

I wish to announce the appointment of Mr. A. Douglas Mackey as director of education for The Department of Reform Institutions. Mr. Mackey, who is head of the industrial arts department of the O'Neill collegiate and vocational institute, Oshawa, holds a Bachelor of Science degree from the State University of New York, Buffalo, and will obtain his master's degree in June. In addition, he holds certificates from the Hamilton teachers' college and the Ontario college of education, as well as a specialist's certificate in industrial arts. Mr. Mackey has had previous experience in the elementary school system of Port Colborne and the secondary school system of Burlington.

In addition to his academic and vocational qualifications, Mr. Mackey has been programme director for the Ontario society for crippled children at Lakewood Camp, has been secretary-librarian of Ontario industrial arts association research council, and is the Canadian representative to the American industrial arts association, being a member of that board. He is editor of the Ontario industrial arts association Bulletin, and is director of publications for the Canadian industrial arts association and co-author of the booklet Creativity through Design.

The duties of the director of education with my department must inevitably concern the direction of our programme, both academic and vocational, toward the successful rehabilitation of students, adult and juvenile. Basically, we must place great emphasis on the upgrading of school grades; we must endeavour to bring those who are able to benefit from our vocational training programme up to the academic standing required of their individual trade. Next, we must place great importance on the practical use of trade training in a rehabilitation programme, endeavouring to provide, wherever possible, such training as will lead to purposeful employment after leaving our institutions.

I am sure that with the qualifications, training and experience of Mr. Mackey, we will have a man capable of directing our educational programme along these lines so that all educational services within our department may be co-ordinated into a purposeful force in the rehabilitation of offenders.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, late yesterday afternoon, my colleague the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar) was addressing certain remarks to the hon. Minister about the institution at Elliot Lake.

It occurred to me, if my memory served me right, that there had been a great deal of discussion in this House about that institution several years ago, and I went back to Hansard this afternoon just to refresh my memory and perhaps to refresh the memory of other hon. members of the House. I am sure the hon. Minister will recall that on March 24, 1960, when Mr. Frost was leading the government, the Elliot Lake crisis had occurred and was being debated here in the House. Ministers on the front bench, one after the other, stood up and told the people of Elliot Lake who filled the Speaker's gallery, what great things they were going to do for Elliot Lake, and one of the great things that was going to be done was to open a penal institution in that area. I thought it would be well just to refresh the hon. Minister's memory as to some of the remarks made by the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) who held the portfolio of reform institutions at that time.

On that day—and it is reported on page 1726 in Hansard for March 24, 1960—the then Minister of Reform Institutions had this to say:

Now, if the hon. gentlemen would listen and not yak, yak, yak—the story of the lion and the jackass—they might learn something from this side of the House.

Then he said:

That is why those hon. members are there. My department has been studying—

And then there was an interjection.

—for many months in order to select the best location for this new institution.

Now, the hon. Minister of Public Works is also aware of the situation, and his staff will be ready to start with this plan, and so forth, if all of our studies now being carried out prove the feasibility of an institution in this general area. I am told—

At that point he was interrupted by the late Mr. H. C. Nixon, who was then the member for Brant, and also by Mr. Frost. Then we come back to the then Minister of Reform Institutions. I am skipping a few of the interjections here, but about halfway down page 1727 he says this:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House any longer, but I mentioned it to show that we are progressing in our endeavours to help Elliot Lake.

Now, if we can start this before too long, and give something to them that will help in their situation at the present time, we will be only too glad to do it. And with that, the hon. Prime Minister and my government go along 100 per cent. They have suggested it, and they will follow it through as they do in all of these depressed areas, in trying to help out the little people of this province.

That was in 1960. Then I thought I would follow it through a bit and see what happened in later years. In 1961, on February 27—I am quoting from page 1542—the present hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) said this:

Yes. We are not going to plan on Quirk Lake, as I am hopeful the mine will open in two years. But there is the Stanley mine which is close to it; and that has been sealed, and there are some beautiful buildings. We hope that, within two years, we will be able to do some fixing there if we take it over, so that it will be a place that will be nice to look at and will be comfortable for inmates, and so on.

It will not be any shack place, I can tell the hon. members that; but we do not intend to build a huge new institution there if we can use those buildings, because they are very fine plants.

That was a year later. Then, a year after that, in 1962, the hon. Minister had left that portfolio and he was succeeded by the present hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett). This hon. Minister did not wax quite as enthusiastically, but he did say on March 20 of 1962, and at this point I am quoting from page 1330 of Hansard:

Early last spring a small unit was opened at Elliot Lake for those men in this category whose homes are up in northern Ontario.

Then, a year after that, the same Minister again talked about Elliot Lake and said, and I am quoting from the debates of December 12, 1962, at page 289 from Hansard of that year:

Elliot Lake is a reformatory which has a capacity of 52 and there are now 49 prisoners there today.

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that in light of the great desire of the hon. Minister of Mines and his colleagues of that day to do something for the little people, as he described them—the people in the depressed areas—the great studies that went on and the co-operation of all of the Ministers of that time in promising great things to the people of Elliot Lake, who were packing the Speaker's gallery, were not being just done at the moment he talked, but they had been going on several months prior to the time he was talking, which eventually resulted in the location of the penal institution there. Then the hon. Minister of Transport, when he took over the portfolio, in the two or three times that he reported to the House, he could find no fault with it. It would seem to me that a pretty substantial commitment had been made to the people of that area to bolster their economy by continuing that institution in Elliot Lake. True, Mr. Chairman, things have changed since that day. The member for Algoma-Manitoulin sits on a different side of the House than the member for Algoma-Manitoulin did in that day. The government is not quite so embarrassed, but I have not heard any logical reason come from the hon. Minister as to why that institution should have been moved in face of the very substantial and definite commitments given by those two previous Ministers.

The hon. Minister says there are criteria which this institution does not fit into. It is not near a university. I do not know that it is too important that the 49 inhabitants of that institution in 1962 should have been close to a university; I would think that they had not too much use for the facilities of Laurentian University if it had existed in that day.

One thing about Elliot Lake was that there were very few escapees. It is a very difficult place to escape from. And people who did decide to take leave for a day or two were quite happy to return voluntarily, because they found that they got much better food and shelter within the institution than they did in trying to escape from that area. I would have thought that was an inducement to keep the institution in Elliot Lake.

But the thing that puzzles me, Mr. Chairman, is that late in 1964 an announcement was made, when the House was not in session, that within a month's time the Elliot Lake institution was going to be closed. A fait accompli: the matter was done. All of those 45 employees who contributed in a substantial way to the economy of Elliot Lake were on their way from Elliot Lake a month later.

If the government had any real sincerity in the fine remarks they addressed to the people of this province, and particularly to the people of Elliot Lake when the great economic tragedy occurred there, one would have thought that it would have leaned over backwards to keep that institution in that municipality.

I could refer at much further length to the glowing remarks, the far-reaching promises, that the various Cabinet Ministers of that day made to this House and the real commitments that they made. None of them were exceeded by the elaborate remarks made by the hon. Minister of Mines.

And yet here, while the House is not in session, suddenly this hon. Minister has changed his mind. Apparently the concern for Elliot Lake diminishes in relationship to who represents the riding of Algoma-Manitoulin. This is the only conclusion that I can come to.

We were going to have schools, we were going to have parks, we were going to have tourist establishments. The Minister of Municipal Affairs was going to throw in millions of dollars. If you want, I have them all here; I can read you all those speeches.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Chairman, his own colleague will tell him what we are doing right now.

Mr. Singer: The whole front bench, one after the other—it started at that end and it went all the way through, with some assistance from the second row. There was not too much that this government was going to do for Elliot Lake. One of the few concrete things that came out of it was the location of this institution. And now it has gone, as I say, coincidentally after the representation in Elliot Lake changed. I think that the people of Elliot Lake deserve a much better explanation than the one they have been given up till now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Chairman, we really completed the circle now. There is no doubt about that. In the first place, the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin stated quite bluntly last night that he did not suggest that the decision was a political one.

Mr. Singer: I suggested it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right. Perhaps the hon. member for Downsview takes his reasoning from the manner in which his party in office in Ottawa does things.

Mr. Singer: No, I take my reasoning from the remarks—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will deal with that in a minute. The federal government insisted on putting a female institution in a location to which every corrective group, everyone interested in the rehabilitation of offenders in this country, objected. But because the political colour of the representative changed hands, and the seat is now held by a Liberal, they put an institution there in spite of all the advice they had from those who advised them against it.

Mr. Singer: I think if the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As a matter of fact, it would have been, in my view, more to the point for those people who criticized the federal government so strongly when they announced their plans and are now proceeding with it, to come out and say something in support of the action which I was taking, which was a much more difficult one, in closing one up, for the same reasons they gave against the establishment of one in Warkworth.

The hon. member states all the reasons why the government was attempting to help Elliot Lake at that time, and they are attempting to help Elliot Lake at this time. But the reasons why the government was more able to rationalize the establishment of a reform institution in Elliot Lake at that time does not exist today.

In the first place, there are some changes in services available there. But more than anything else, and the hon. member suggests that he did not hear this yesterday; he must have heard it, because I repeated it a number of times. The fact remains that I was faced with a decision of purchasing the property. The company was insisting that we purchase the property. Up until that time we had, and I will say it was, a very generous lease from the company. I think it ran something like $15,000 or $16,000 a year, something of that nature. We were faced with having to make a decision as to whether we were going to spend some hundreds of thousands of dollars for an institution and, in having to make that decision, we had to decide whether this was going to be a place which would be the proper locale for an institution of this nature for a long period of time.

Mr. Singer: It did not bother the former Minister. It did not bother him at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Also, in the meantime, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian corrections association had done a study of all the requirements—the criteria for the location of this type of institution.

I told the hon. members last year that I was going to do everything possible to learn all I could about this work, to pay attention to those real experts—the really knowledgeable people—and this is what I have done. They came out with this report in the meantime—having regard for what they had said at that time and what was said across the way—as to the proper location of institutions—and I could quote that from Hansard—I could quote some of the hon. members from the hon. member for Downsview's own party—hon. members from the NDP party, whose—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): NDP.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—from the NDP, who repeated on a number of occasions, the criteria for the establishment of this kind of institution. Having regard for that and for the fact that I had to make a decision as to the expenditure of some hundreds of thousands of dollars, I could not in all honesty say that place must remain there. We had to do something about it.

If the hon. member will just wait a moment—

The hon. member also downgrades my argument that it should be near a university if possible. He says that the most important thing for the retention of Elliot Lake was the fact that it was hard to escape from. All of a sudden, custody becomes important. I have heard for the last week that custody should not concern us at all. As a matter of fact, in Mercer, where we have 80 or 90 women, we should not concern ourselves with custody at all—just treatment; see that they get the proper facilities; see that there are visiting psychiatrists and psychologists and that sort of thing. But as for those boys up in the bush, we were not to concern ourselves with them at all. Well, I just do not lend myself to that kind of a philosophy.

I repeat, just in case the hon. member will forget it—if these estimates go on for three or four weeks, he may forget it three weeks from today—we had to arrive at a decision as to whether this, in effect, was going to become a permanent institution, and put into it some hundreds of thousands of dollars. On that basis, the whole situation had to be considered. I am very sorry that we had to close up the place, but the government's consideration for Elliot Lake is certainly shown by the fact that other measures have been taken to help in the economy of Elliot Lake, but not at the expense of people we are trying to rehabilitate.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I can only come to the conclusion that all that the former hon. Minister was telling us on that day in 1960, just did not mean a thing. Because he said—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is five years later.

Mr. Singer: He explained at length and plaintively to the House, and he was supported by all his colleagues on the front benches:

This is not a study that has just been started, we had gone through it for months.

He said:

I consulted carefully with my colleague, the hon. Minister of Public Works, and he has gone into it and it is logical and it is sensible and we are going to do it, and rest assured that we are going to do it, because we are interested in the economy of Elliot Lake and we think this is a reasonable place in which to locate an institution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was at that time.

Mr. Singer: Unless my hon. friend is dismissing quite casually all of the remarks made by the former Minister and his Cabinet colleagues of that day, then the only other conclusion I can come to, is that the former Minister was just talking politically because the gallery was full and he wanted to make a great impression. Surely one would expect from this government that if a study such as this has gone on, that the decisions made would at least last for a period of three or four years. But not now. The Minister changes, the criteria change, the decisions change and the membership in the House changes, even by coincidence.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We keep up to date.

Mr. Singer: I would suggest to my friend the hon. Minister that if he is concerned at all about what is going on in the House of Commons about penal reform or penal institutions, he could avail himself of an easy opportunity to assist. I notice the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) was offering it to the coroner—the federal nomination in Spadina—but you could avail yourself perhaps of that opportunity and have a go up there and see what influence you could bring to bear. I am sure you would do it very well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I can do much better here. I have colleagues here who are more interested in penal reform.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. While we are here and you have the responsibility for moving this institution, and you have it, then I think that the House deserves a better explanation than the one you have given up to now.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add one point on this particular issue. I think there is considerable validity in what the hon. member for Downsview has said. There are striking contrasts between all the beatings of propaganda drums which we saw on the three tiers of the Cabinet seats. They exacted every conceivable bit of publicity out of every conceivable headline concerning what they were going to do in Elliot Lake. But when they cancelled the project, it was done in relative silence and quiet, and I think it is not very appropriate for the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to step in and say that the government put a school in there, in effect to take the place of the reform institution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member does not want to misinform anyone, but he said this was done in comparative quiet. A public announcement was made.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, but there was not anything like the beating of the propaganda drums—I will come to that in a minute.

The hon. Prime Minister says the government put a school in, in co-operation with the federal government, and it is a very worthy project. What, in effect, you are doing, is stabilizing Elliot Lake at its depressed level. You are keeping it from slipping any more, when you take one out, you put another one in. You are stabilizing it at a depressed level and this is the serious thing about this particular community.

However, the one point, without repeating what the hon. member for Downsview has said—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Indian givers!

Mr. MacDonald: The one thing that surprises me about the government's announcement is why, if you are going to do this kind of thing, is it not done in consultation with the local community, so that it can prepare for and be able to sustain the further economic blow which this decision brought to an already rather economically teetering community. I have here, for example, a clipping from the Sault Ste. Marie Star of November 7, in which Mr. J. S. Bloom, the accountant of the improvement district of Elliot Lake, said that it will mean a loss of $290,000 payroll for this area.

It is quite a blow to have families leave at the present time. It will mean that at least 30 people, many with families, will be on the move, it certainly all affects the economy, especially the stores. Since Stamrock closed, more families leave the town every week. We have possibly 9,000 people left. We inquired if he knew what Allan Grossman, Minister of Reform Institutions, meant when he said:

"The Elliot Lake location was unsatisfactory, largely because treatment and other professional personnel necessary for correctional institutions were too few in the area."

This was new to Mr. Bloom, as he had not heard why the move is being made. In his opinion, he thought it had measured up to the standards.

In other words, for years we have listened to this government—I can think of the previous Prime Minister, for example—complaining about the insensitivity of industry suddenly pulling up its roots in a community and moving out and leaving that community with all the economic consequences of its departure, and saying that industry should not do this kind of thing but it should consult with the area it is leaving—and indeed, consult with the area it is going to move to, because the move does have economic consequences on both sides.

Yet when this government moves, it does not consult with the local people. The accountant who has to cope with the financial problems of the improvement district at Elliot Lake learned about it when he read it in the newspaper. I think it is about time the hon. Minister stopped preaching to private industry and others not to do this kind of thing, when he himself is doing it.

Even if one accepts all of the hon. Minister's explanations for validity in moving, there is still striking contrast with all the propaganda when he originally made his move. I suggest his action in not consulting with the communities so that they could cope with the consequences of the departure was a sin of omission and in striking contrast to his preaching down through the years.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, last evening when the House adjourned, I had started to raise a question about the Indians in our training schools. When visiting the school in Cobourg, I met a couple of youngsters, bright looking children who were Indians, and I asked the superintendent about them. He told me at that time that these two boys were in for a certain behaviour problem.

As I questioned him about the Indian children who came to him, he pointed out to me that he had no problems whatsoever with the children of Indian families who came into his institution. On making further inquiries since that time, I have discovered that by and large the Indian children who come into our training school system present little or no problem after their arrival.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister, first of all, about the number of such children who do come to our training schools, and why they come. Is this because of breaking the white man's code, or is it for other reasons? Is there any real consideration being given to the special behaviour problems, or the lack of behaviour problems, which they present in our training schools, and is there consideration being given to special institutions, not because of their particular nationality, but because of the particular type of behaviour problems that they present. As far as I can learn, they have little place in our training school system because they do not need the corrective treatment that we ordinarily think of in connection with those from our big cities. I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the hon. member as to the number covered by the annual report is about 130 children out of the total population of 1,635, which is 7.9 per cent of the training school population. As to the other question as to whether we are giving any special consideration to the problem of the Indian children, this is a matter which has concerned the department.

The Canadian corrective association is presently engaged in a study of the relationship of the "Indian and the law," which would cover this area as well, and I have appointed the Rev. Dr. Maurice Flint, director of chaplaincy services of my department, as a member of the study committee. This study committee was undertaken on behalf of the federal government. I think that that answers the hon. member's questions.

Mr. Young: But no plans are under way yet—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know if it is under way, but I imagine that it is.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see that the hon. member for York South must have thought a great deal of the argument of the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin yesterday and so got it into the record twice. Apparently one of the criteria that the hon. Minister has mentioned, and would influence his decision in the removal of the institution from Elliot Lake, was because a university and expert personnel were nearby. Does that mean then, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister is going to move his institution from Monteith? It is not near any university. A camp was built at Wendigo Lake away off in the bush near Loring; there is no university near there. Why did the hon. Minister not make a forestry camp in the Elliot Lake if he were going to move the institution? All the explanations that the hon. Minister has made already do not hold water and I am forced to agree with the hon. member for Downsview in his conclusion.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Is the hon. Minister going to answer the question of the hon. member?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, if he asked a question. Was that a question?

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister does not answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member thinks it deserves an answer, I am sure he is entitled to one.

Of course, the comparison is not really valid. Monteith is an existing institution which we own. I am not faced with having to make a particular decision there. We are building other institutions at the present time. We cannot rebuild all our institutions, but the fact is I had to make a decision in respect of Elliot Lake because we had to buy it or get out. That was the decision that had to be made there. The comparison is not valid, either, in respect of Wendigo Lake or forestry camps of that nature because these are really holding units for short-term, chronic, petty offenders for which no real training is involved.

I think I explained that in my remarks prior to the presentation of the estimates. Minimum security or open institution for short-term offenders is quite a different thing; there is very little that can be done by way of a vocational or academic programme, or anything of that nature, which did not apply to Elliot Lake. These were young offenders to whom we were giving academic, and attempting to give vocational training. This will be much better done at Fort William, where we are just completing a completely new training centre where they will be able to get the kind of training centres suitable for this class of inmate.

Mr. MacDonald: What was the hon. Minister's answer to the question I raised, then?

If the hon. Minister came to a decision to move out, why did he not consult the local community instead of doing it on his own without any collaboration—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The community had, as far as I can recall, two or three months' notice before we started to move them. The impact on the economy was not anywhere near what has been stated here.

We were so concerned that I went into all the facts as to how it would affect the community. As far as the community having notice, there was, as I recall it, two or three months' difference between the time I made the announcement and we proceeded to carry out our plans, so they really had some notice.

If the hon. member is suggesting that we should have gone into a lot of committee meetings and that sort of thing, we would never have the job done, because then the political pressures would have become so intense, as the hon. member will appreciate, it would have been difficult to do the job which we knew needed doing.

Mr. MacDonald: I suggest that a $290,000 payroll—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was not $290,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Bloom is the accountant for the improvement district and he should know.

It was not three months as the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin says; it was five weeks when they started to move out.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct attention for a moment or so to the institution in Guelph. The hon. Minister told us the other day that he felt that custodial officers were the key in the whole matter of rehabilitation. I agree with him that they are, but in an institution such as Guelph, with 975 or 980 inmates, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if it is possible that, in an institution of that size, this kind of work can go on with any degree of satisfaction? Is it possible for the average custodial officer there to hold conversations with the inmates? Are they encouraged to do this? Are they encouraged to get at the inmates' problems, or are they simply told that this is the job of the psychiatrists, the chaplains and other rehabilitative officers? I would like to get the hon. Minister's reaction to this point, because it seems to me that, in an institution of that magnitude, custodial officers have little other function than custody. It is very difficult for them to do this other job which has been mentioned by the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I think that I would like to get one thing on the record, and that is all the talk about Guelph being too large—and with this I agree. This might give the impression, as it has in other matters relating to the department, that this is an unusual size for an institution. Really, it is one of the smaller ones across this continent.

I have been in California where they are supposed to have one of the most modern systems in the world today, and their institutions far exceed ours in size. In fact, I was in a brand-new one, and I think it held some 2,300. I was out at Chino, where I think the population is 1,200 and they are now arranging to double it to 2,400. I thought I would get that into the record.

Now, I agree with the hon. member that they should not be this large. We are aiming for something like 350 at the maximum, if we can possibly arrange this. It would be better if the institution were smaller. As to whether there is any effective work going on, the answer is yes, a great deal of effective work. I think it could be more effective if it were a smaller institution. Again, I repeat, we are doing what we can in building more forestry camps so that we can reduce Guelph. But as I said the other day, the forestry camps require a certain type of offender who can be trusted in a minimum security, and there are not too many of those. You could take quite a few out, but there are not that many.

Again—and I know people have said we are using this as an excuse, but I am sure any hon. member who looks at it objectively will agree—it would be utter folly to go out and build brand-new adult institutions when we do not know what the federal government has in store for us by way of our responsibilities.

Within the framework of what I have said, we are doing everything possible to carry out a good rehabilitative programme in Guelph, and to reduce the size of it as much as we can.

Mr. Young: In this process, the custodial officers have their part, and are encouraged to do the job and to work with the offenders?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is precisely what our staff training course is for and why we have them attend seminars. We encourage them to take some of the courses at some of the universities, and this is precisely to give them the proper approach toward their relationship with the inmates.

Mr. Young: There is one other question, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to ask the hon. Minister. Some time ago, the hon. Minister and I had a bit of a conference regarding certain problems within the Guelph institution. I am not going to fret those here today, but at that time the matter of whether or not inmates could give gifts to custodial officers was raised and I would like the hon. Minister to explore this just for a moment or two.

I understand that he indicated at that time that it is all right for an inmate to give certain gifts to custodial officers or to employees of the institution.

I think there is danger here and I think this is recognized as dangerous. The Rivard case is an illustration, perhaps, of something along this line. But I would like to know the hon. Minister's policy here, because the policy which was indicated at that time and the policy which I had understood to be in force, were two different policies. I had thought that the matter of inmates giving gifts to custodial staff resulted—if the custodial staff or any employee accepted such gifts—in very severe disciplinary action.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate the hon. member uses the Rivard case as an example. There is no comparison at all. The hon. member will appreciate when he is talking about gifts here, the implication might be a gift per se. What he is really talking about is something that an inmate makes in a clinic, so it could not be of any material consequence, it could not be worth a lot of money—certainly not sufficient to corrupt the staff.

When the hon. member brought this to my attention, I will admit, having the type of outlook I have, I wondered about any possible implications and I went into this quite thoroughly with my treatment staff. Here again is the dilemma we find ourselves in. The hon. members will appreciate that we are trying to get our advice from people who are supposed to know about these things—such as psychiatrists, psychologists, our treatment staff generally—and they tell us, and the hon. member just mentioned it a few moments ago, that it is most helpful if there is a good relationship—at least the kind of relationship where there is some degree of mutual respect—between the custodial officer and the inmate. How do you retain this and at the same time carry out hard-and-fast rules as to whether you are allowed to accept some piece of leatherwork or something of that nature which the inmate makes in a clinic? I asked our director of psychology to give me his views on this. As a result of the conferences we held—as a matter of fact, at that time I was of the opinion that we should forbid it completely—he thought this would be a very dangerous thing to do. Here is his statement and I will read it to the House:

It has been our custom to encourage inmates and those who become patients in our clinics to take part in occupational therapy because we believe that it may play a part in the rehabilitation process. In occupational therapy they may develop new skills and by so doing increase their self-confidence. Many live the lonely life of homeless people, and a skill learned at occupational therapy helps them to put in their spare time more constructively.

Articles made in this way have been disposed of in several ways. Each inmate is allowed to take home with him one article that he has made. The majority are sent to charitable institutions for their use. On occasion, inmates have presented an article they have made to a staff member as a token of appreciation for the help they have received. In my opinion, these methods of disposal all have their therapeutic value.

It should be added that a great many of the articles made in occupational therapy are made from scrap materials.

I know the incident the hon. member refers to because he discussed it with me. I was in a dilemma, and I wonder whether any group of hon. members of this House could come to any specific conclusion if they sat down and tried to solve the problem, as to whether they should issue an edict forbidding a member of the staff to accept some article made by someone in one of the clinics, whether they should permit it or not, having regard for all of these factors.

Having regard to that, the only conclusion I could arrive at was that which I did arrive at as a result of discussion with the treatment staff. They think it would be a bad thing to lay down a rule of this nature, because it would put up some sort of wall between those who are taking the occupational therapy and those who are trying to treat them.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the hon. Minister? In looking over the report I noticed that vocational training is provided to the students in the various institutions. The vocational training is of prime importance when it comes to the youngster adapting himself back in society. Who decides what type of vocational training is to be provided to the youngster at the institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is a classification committee in each institution which goes over the social history and any other pertinent information relating to the particular person. In discussion with him and having regard for any of his abilities, this decision is made by the committee.

Mr. Newman: May I ask the hon. Minister, then, why laundry seems to be the most popular course, or one of the more popular courses, when it comes to the Bowmanville school? Why would you be teaching laundry as a vocational training programme to the boys at Bowmanville?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is not a course, it is part of their duties to look after the laundry.

Mr. Troy: It says "vocational training."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On what page is that?

Mr. Newman: On page 35. It is kind of odd that you would be using laundry as a training programme, unless you are using the students simply—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suppose this would come under the same kind of training as you would consider is being given to the inmates at Millbrook, for example, who work in the marker plant. It really is industrial training; it is getting them accustomed to certain habits of discipline, doing a certain amount of work in a day, something of that nature. However, as to whether it should be under vocational training, the hon. member has a point and I will look into this.

Mr. Newman: I certainly would like to see a few more students directed into tailoring and possibly even into printing—types of training that could be of a little more practical use to them once they left the institution. When I check through the institution at Simcoe, I see no vocational training there whatsoever. Is none given to the students there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Incidentally, I have been informed by the director of training schools that the figure is 51 youngsters over a period of a year. There would not be more than a very few at any one time, perhaps.

Mr. Newman: Some of your statistics, then, are over a period of a year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, in respect of the type of work they do. This would also have to take into consideration the IQ of the person involved. There are some youngsters with a very low IQ who could not really do much else. We try to give them some academic training and keep them busy at other times.

Mr. Newman: That answer is quite satisfactory, Mr. Minister. Why is there no type of vocational training given to the students at Simcoe?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is in accordance with our classification system. At Simcoe it is strictly academic training. Now, when we open Hagersville—

Mr. Newman: The youngster is screened before he comes into Simcoe, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Newman: With the greater emphasis that is being put by the department on vocational training, one would think that the hon. Minister would possibly take some of these students into the secondary schools in the vicinity and maybe give them some type of vocational training. Would the hon. Minister not consider taking a student out of his institution there and, say, have him go to one of the high schools or technical schools in the area?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In Hagersville we are making provision to hire only fully qualified teachers for this purpose. Sending the boys into the local community works in some instances, and if we establish smaller residential schools this will be more possible than it is at the present time in a place such as Simcoe. I do not think you could send out many of them; the local school could not look after them.

Mr. Newman: There would not be that many involved, because, after all, the numbers are only 100 and that is over the course of the year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Simcoe is in a location where I think 100 or 115 youngsters would, I imagine, constitute quite a problem if they had to absorb them all at once.

Mr. Newman: Well, it would only be those in the grade 9 level or above that you would be transporting to one of the secondary schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member referring to vocational training again?

Mr. Newman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At Simcoe we take those who are classified as being suitable strictly for academic training. We want to make sure that they are brought as quickly as possible up to standard as far as academic training is concerned. These are not the ones that we consider should be put into vocational training.

Mr. Newman: In other words, I am to assume that the 100 students you had at Simcoe are not vocationally inclined, but are academically inclined?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is why they have been placed in Simcoe.

Mr. Newman: Well, it really seems strange, because you would normally assume that a youngster who would get into trouble would be a little more likely to be clever with the use of his hands.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member will appreciate that we have skimmed these off the group of all of the boys, and ticked off those who are suitable to Simcoe as the ones whom we want to give intensified academic training rather than anything else.

Mr. Newman: But you are still only taking them in grade 8 and 9 levels, so even at grade 9 level your numbers would be very small. I will leave that for the time being as long as the hon. Minister gives me some assurance that these youngsters will be able to get some type or other of vocational training. That is quite all right.

In looking over his other report, I noticed that the industrial production is a little over $2.75 million. How are the articles produced in the department sold?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are just used for government institutions and government agencies—hospitals, and places of that nature.

Mr. Newman: In arriving at a final price for them, are these prices now competitive with prices that the department would be paying were they to purchase this similar type of article in the open market?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We could not guarantee that. Really, it is not that important. We are going to have these people doing some useful work and we have to do something with the produce. We do not go out in the open market and compete with manufacturers; we provide our own institutions with the product. There really is not much point in making it competitive.

Mr. Newman: My only reason for asking that is to find out how the hon. Minister arrives at a figure of $2.75 million. Maybe that figure should only be $1 million rather than $2.75 million.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because they actually pay us this amount. There is a costing made up. I was referring to the hon. member's question as to their relative competitiveness, but a costing is made up and the other institutions are charged and they pay us the money.

Mr. Newman: That is satisfactory, Mr. Minister. Does the hon. Minister actually think that the manufacturing of licence plates in an institution serves a practical training purpose to the institutionalized?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. The hon. member will appreciate that the plates are made at a maximum security institution, and it is what they call industrial training. You are teaching them good working habits—that you start at a certain hour, finish at a certain hour. They know that when they go out into society, if they get employed at all, they will get some employment, possibly, in a plant where this sort of work goes on. It is interesting that when I was in the UK, they had just completed a number of years' study on this. They have quite an extensive industry system within the penal system in the UK; as a matter of fact, they are now going out into the marketplace and competing with private enterprise, on a very small basis, of course. But the report of the parliamentary committee, which had some great experts in this field, came up with the conclusion that, by and large, this is the sort of work that is more suitable for adult institutions. They should go into this field of working in a plant, putting produce through a system at a certain speed, knowing that this is the kind of society, as I say, that they know they are going to have to contend with when they get out of the institution. It does teach them good work habits. It has its place.

Mr. Newman: Well, could not the department teach good work habits by doing something other than the manufacture of licence plates? I imagine there are other ways that you could teach them good work habits.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What is the matter with licence plates?

Mr. Newman: This is a type of operation that mass production could complete in practically no time. There is no skill to speak of involved in the mass-producing of licence plates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is mass production, and they are operating with very modern equipment. It is the sort of thing that, if they go out into industry and get a job in a plant, they are going to have to contend with. I see nothing wrong with that at all.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Does The Department of Transport pay for these licence plates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Department of Transport pays for them.

Mr. Oliver: What do they pay for them?

Mr. Newman: Seventeen and a half cents?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Somewhere around 15 cents.

Mr. Troy: Is that why they do not have the slogan Land of Opportunity, because they are made by the inmates?

Mr. Newman: I was going to ask the hon. Minister if it is that complicated in the institution now to put a slogan on the plates or increase the size of the plates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know which vote that comes under.

Mr. Newman: This is under the manufacture of the licence plates. Surely there would be more skills involved to the inmate here were he to come along and make a little more complicated—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, we make these plates in conformity with the requirements of the Ministry of Transport; insofar as adding anything to the knowledge or ability of the inmates, of course it will not add anything. They are all made essentially by a die and it would be the original die made up with whatever else was put on it and it would go through the machine. It will not help by way of rehabilitating or teaching them anything.

Mr. Newman: Yes, the hon. Minister is right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But the hon. member has made his point.

Mr. Newman: What happens to the 101,000 metal ashtrays that are manufactured there? Who uses them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Generally, for the exhibitions that we put on.

Mr. Newman: Right. Thank you.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, in connection with the reform institution at Burtch, some few years ago I visited that institution and I remember that the superintendent was very interested in the training of young inmates. A small shop was in operation, training for carpentry work, tinsmithing and masonry work. It was a feeble effort at the time, but the superintendent was very interested and was hoping that that would be increased and continued. I have not been to the institution for quite some time now. Has that been increased at all, because at that time I was under the impression that it would be a wonderful thing for these young people—they are only 17 and 18 years of age—if they could be taught these various skills that they were teaching at that time. As I said, it was a very feeble effort at the time. Has that been increased at all?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told that it has not been increased. We have some plans which we are working on now to build an extension of the operations, to extend this particular type of work the hon. member is speaking of. I do not want to make a definite promise because I do not want him to come here next year and say: "Where is the building?"

Mr. Gordon: Why was it not increased? It was a success as I saw it, and I was impressed. I was given to understand that it was going to be increased because it was in a temporary building that they were using at the time, and because of the work that was being done and the training that was being given. I understood at that time, when the school at Simcoe was opened, that that would be transferred to Simcoe and these skills would be taught on a wider scale. But has nothing been done since I was there? That was some years ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told that because of the plans for a completely new building, it is not desirable, at this time, to engage in any type of expansion. I am also told that we do not want to expand as to the number of inmates who are kept there, and the particular reason for the type of work they are doing. However, I think the hon. member will be happy when he sees the new building up, and with the new equipment, which will help us do a better job than we are doing there now. We are quite happy with the work that is going on there at the present time.

Mr. Gordon: I am sorry to hear that nothing has been done in connection with that, because, as I said, the superintendent of the institution at that time was very interested and was hopeful that this would grow because of the work that was being done.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will look into that for the hon. member.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I was wondering whether The Department of Reform Institutions has given any more thought to paying prison labour a proper wage. Out of that wage, of course, they would be charged for their keep and also for the keep of their families. The present hon. Minister of Mines, when he had the office of the Minister of Reform Institutions, said the department was giving this matter some thought, and nothing has come of it.

I think that about 1961 this very department put out a book setting out what the second congress of the United Nations congress on the prevention of crimes said in this matter. Some of the reading I have done on the subject has been from a booklet printed by this department.

I think that this is a most needed reform and it is something that should be started, if not in a big way at first, at least in a pilot project. It has worked in some jurisdictions, and many men well informed on this subject throughout the world recommend it. Can the hon. Minister give us any idea whether his department will do something about paying prison labour proper wages?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I think I mentioned some time ago that the department was contemplating the setting up of an industry and trades committee—I am giving this a name, although it may not be the actual name it will finally wind up with—on which there would be representatives from business, labour and so on, to draw up a policy for the department in this respect, and which would in effect be an on-going committee. It would supervise, study and advise the department in respect of matters which the hon. member has raised.

I was very much interested in the committee which was set up in the U.K. for this purpose, and there is one, of course, in the federal system of the U.S.

However, in view of the uncertainty of precisely the type of prisoner we are going to be responsible for, I do not think it would be advisable to proceed with such a study now. We are hoping for the decision of the federal government with respect to our responsibilities, before we proceed on a full-scale basis with a study of this nature. The hon. member will appreciate that, by and large, all we have now are short-term prisoners and it is not too easy to establish such a well-rounded programme to which he is referring with short-term prisoners. In addition to this, we have to concern ourselves with the likely possibility that our responsibilities will be for prisoners with even shorter terms, that is, six months and possibly shorter. It would perhaps be wasteful of the time of busy people to sit down and plan a programme of that nature, if, within a certain reasonable time, we may have a complete change of responsibility.

Mr. Trotter: Then let us go to prisoners on a short-term basis. This does not affect their pay but it would affect their treatment. These are the people who are alcoholics. The former Attorney General who is now the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not necessarily, not necessarily. You would have somebody given three or six months and he may not necessarily be an alcoholic. He, the alcoholic, would be given perhaps ten days or so.

Mr. Trotter: All right, fine. I accept your answer. I am sorry that something is not being done in this line. Possibly when the federal government comes out with a more definite plan, we here in Ontario could do something in regard to paying wages, because I think it is something that could be done.

But here is a second problem, and again it is something that has been mentioned in this House before—the treatment of alcoholics. The present hon. Minister of Lands and Forests has said, when discussing this problem, that we should keep men and women who are alcoholics in a type of institution that is more of a farm. I have two questions to ask with regard to alcoholics:

1. Has the present Minister any plans for keeping alcoholics in an institution different from those in use now—that is, more or less out on a farm?

2. Would the hon. Minister be interested in urging through the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) that the law in this country be changed so that alcoholism is not treated as a criminal offence to give a man a criminal record?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I touched upon this very lightly in my comments prior to the presentation of the estimates. I said quite definitely that many of us feel that the type of person the hon. member is speaking of does not belong in a penal institution as they are structured today. We are doing what we can within the department, in that we have these minimum security forestry camps at Hillsdale, and there is an annex at Millbrook. In the plan for regional detention centres, it is contemplated that there will be a minimum security unit which by and large will look after these people. But, essentially, the nub of the whole problem has to be attacked in the manner in which the hon. member has suggested, and a great deal of very active consideration is being given along these lines. He may very well hear something about this before this session is over.

Mr. Trotter: I am glad to hear that.

As far as changing the law to treat these men who are alcoholics, I realize that finding them guilty is not in your department, but the problem for your department is that they end up in your hands. If something is ever going to be done to change the law, which is a federal responsibility, the criminal code should be changed. Of course, it does affect us in some respects because of our liquor laws here in Ontario.

We, as a province, should bring pressure on the federal government to change the criminal law in this country. These things are only done by people organizing to speak up for change, and there is no better way than to have a government, such as that of the province of Ontario, make its voice heard. Certainly, I hope that through the hon. Attorney General, your department can put the pressure not only on the hon. Attorney General but through him all the way to Ottawa. It is the only way this law is ever going to be changed. It is all right for the hon. Minister and myself to say this should be done and we hope it will be changed and we think that way, but the thing is: What are we going to do? A lot of responsibility rests with you because you are in a position of power to do something.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again I would like to remind the hon. member that I have pointed out that I met with the federal Minister of Justice on other matters which are being held up because of this split jurisdiction. Perhaps I could offer a strictly personal opinion. If the hon. member feels that publicity on some of these things is helpful, perhaps this might be helpful.

I do not think that the penal system across this country is going to move ahead quickly enough, until such time as the federal department has a special ministry for corrections or penal institutions, or whatever you want to call it. This is what it needs, because so long as this is only a branch of a huge department of a ministry of justice, it cannot get the attention it requires. When you can get a Minister up in the House of Commons and question him as I am being questioned, a Minister who has nothing else to do in his official duties but look after correctional institutions, that is the time when we will get the kind of action we need across this country.

Mr. Chairman: Is the vote carried?

Mr. Singer: No. This is a very interesting topic of discussion. The point that my hon. colleague was getting at, and perhaps the hint dropped by the hon. Minister, intrigues me very much. He said we may well hear something later in the session. But what has bothered me for some considerable period of time, is that it is not just this hon. Minister's responsibility. It is a substantial responsibility shared by his colleague, the hon. Attorney General.

I talked a year ago about the method of handling deviates. My hon. colleague from Parkdale talks about the method of handling alcoholics. But surely it has got to be a continuing process. There has to be a pattern of procedure from the time that the individual—a deviate or an alcoholic or what have you—first comes into contact with the law.

My apologies to the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko), but I would like to get the hon. Minister's views on this; this is perhaps the first time when the police become concerned with him, or perhaps his family, or his relatives are very concerned with him. They come to some authority and say: "What can we do? We do not want this man or woman to go to jail; they are sick. Is there not a method of treatment?" Unfortunately, the fragmentation of authority brings these people into the hands of the Minister of Reform Institutions after the so-called wheels of justice have ground on for some considerable period of time. Because of the legal procedure, his hands are tied to a very substantial extent.

The real problem is the wedding together, for certain purposes, at least, the responsibilities lying with the hon. Attorney General, and the responsibilities lying with this hon. Minister. That is why I was intrigued with the remark. I suppose that is all we will get; I cannot try to force this any further. Maybe we will hear something further about it in this session. I certainly hope so, and I certainly hope that what we do hear will be something of joint plans that will come from those two departments, at least. Because if this is going to work, if there is going to be any continuing process to deal with these very serious problems in our society, it has to be a process that will start at the beginning—from the first time the individual concerned becomes a problem, whether his relatives bring attention to it, or whether the police first discover it. That is when the treatment has to start. There is no point running him through magistrate's court, with $10 or ten days, and he ends up in jail. Or he comes in for some sort of sexual or deviational offence, and he is sent off to jail because there are not proper facilities.

There has to be a method that we must evolve, probably in co-operation with the federal authorities, of being able to identify these people, and segregating them for the particular type of treatment that they can be given to the best of our ability and knowledge. Until that date comes, we are going to have, and this hon. Minister or whoever has that portfolio is going to have, exactly the same problem. He cannot do it by himself. His colleague, the hon. Attorney General, within the four walls of provincial responsibility, has to be an integral part of it.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, I meant no discourtesy to the hon. member for Downsview. I just wanted to get the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions' permission for a moment. I would ask the indulgence of yourself, Mr. Chairman, and the hon. members of the House, to call attention to a group of special visitors who have been in the gallery for some time this afternoon and who entered the House since the Speaker left the chair.

Hon. members of the House will recall that during the consideration of The Department of the Provincial Secretary's estimates I made mention of the fact that that department arranges for other government departments to participate in the Colombo plan for public administration in conjunction with the foreign aid office in Ottawa, and today is the middle of a three-day seminar. In the group we have the participants in those seminars; they represent, interestingly enough, some 20 countries from Asia, Africa and West Indies, and I should like, because of the unique type of gathering, to list the countries for the hon. members. They are as follows: Basutoland, Sarawak, Somalia, Pakistan, Swasiland, Cameroon, Indonesia, Brunei, Nepal, British Honduras, Jamaica, Barbados, British Guiana, Antigua, Trinidad, Tobago, Dominica, the Philippines and St. Lucia.

The group also has a number of ladies; I had the pleasure of welcoming them yesterday morning on behalf of the government and on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario. They will be having a dinner this evening which will be hosted by the government. On Thursday they will be proceeding to Niagara Falls. I have, on behalf of all hon. members of the House, and I think that all would concur, wished that they have a very pleasant and informative stay here and take back very pleasant memories of the province of Ontario to their homelands.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, on page 34 you have the net per diem cost per capita. I notice in the last year for the Catholic institutions: St. Mary's, $502; St. John's, $486; Alfred, $439. The hon. Minister has stated that there would be an increase. Will they be brought up to the same as the others?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The per capita?

Mr. Troy: Yes, the per diem.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are not going to be getting a per capita allowance; we are going to pick up the complete operating cost.

Mr. Troy: The complete operating cost?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Troy: Fine. Then again I see that St. John's training school's designed occupation is 150, as of December 31 there were 219 young boys there. Will you be increasing the accommodation? In St. Mary's there is not much overcrowding, 160-167. The one at Alfred, 160-210. Again, 50 overcrowding. In the report on page 35, which showed the vocational training, I noticed there is no vocational training at all at Uxbridge and there is some at Alfred, but none such as in the other institutions where you have special vocational training.

My last question is this: From where will you draw these youngsters who are going to be sent up to the new school in the Blezard Valley? I do not know what you are going to call it, but I understand it is up in the Blezard Valley near Sudbury. Where will you draw those from? The inmates that will be transferred up there, all northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: These will all be from northern Ontario. This is designed to relieve the pressure on St. John's and on St. Joseph's.

Mr. Troy: And not St. Joseph's?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And St. Joseph's.

Mr. Troy: Is it customary to send the young juveniles who are of French extraction to Alfred, or do they have both English and French?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are both, but the larger proportion of the French-speaking go to Alfred—St. Joseph's.

Mr. Troy: And will St. John's have any opportunity, then, to have vocational training?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is vocational training at St. John's. The confusion is that there is a column for full-time and a column for part time. The hon. member will note that at St. John's there are farming and horticulture, three; printing, five; tailoring, three; shoemaking and repairs, three; carpentry, three; barbering, three, and so on.

Mr. Troy: My apologies, sir.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is pretty difficult to read with all these figures on one page.

Mr. Troy: That is fine, thank you.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister referred a moment ago to the expansion of facilities at Burtch. I understand that that was simply to be for training facilities and not to accommodate more inmates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is true. We are going to put up a new building with better facilities for those who are there now. At least, the number who are provided for there now.

Mr. Nixon: Living facilities, or just training facilities?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Both.

Mr. Nixon: I know that he was a bit hesitant about making any sort of an announcement about it, but would this be expected within the next year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are trying to plan it at the present time, but I would not want to promise it within a year. The hon. member will appreciate there are only so many things you can do. As I pointed out earlier, I hope fairly emphatically, that we have a rather extensive programme this coming year. I hope that I have not embarked upon too much so that this time next year somebody is going to say, "Well, you said you were going to start on such-and-such and you never did get it under way." I hope that most of the things we planned on and we have begun, we will be able to consolidate in the coming year. This is one of them which we hope to get planned and perhaps get under way this year.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister will recall our concern last Thursday night about what we consider to be a deliberate suppression of evidence at the inquest into the death of Ronald Franklin Cross on September 9 last, the death occurring on August 20. I would like to ask the hon.

Minister: Who in the reformatory at Guelph makes the decision as to the detention of a person who is an inmate in that institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The superintendent of the institution.

Mr. Renwick: The superintendent is not only responsible for the decision, but he, in fact, makes the decision?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, in the light of what he said the other evening, that the inquest had answered his questions and that it was not necessary that there be any further investigation into this matter, I ask the hon. Minister if he would please look at the evidence of the superintendent of the institution on page 34 of the inquest. Referring to a time about May 26, the superintendent specifically states toward the bottom of the page, referring to Ronald Franklin Cross:

He was returned to the main work party and that was the final dealings I had with him.

Mr. Chairman, we had grave difficulty the other night in trying to pin down the responsibility for what to us is this deliberate suppression of evidence. I would suggest that the sworn testimony of the superintendent is in direct conflict with the statement which the hon. Minister read to the House that evening, and is in direct conflict with the answer to the question which he has just given to us, that the responsibility for awarding detention in that institution lies with the superintendent. If our inference is correct in this matter, the superintendent had further dealings with Ronald Franklin Cross after the period of about May 26 to which he referred, when he in fact consigned this chap to detention.

I ask the hon. Minister if he would take this matter under advisement and consider it in the light of our remarks and our concern.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course I will. When any hon. member raises a question, of course I will take it under advisement. I have not read this thoroughly—I say quite frankly to the hon. member—and the statement I made the other day I still think, by and large, holds true. I do not know even whether we should be commenting on it now. If the hon. Attorney General said he will investigate this matter, I will wait until we hear from him.

I think I mentioned at that time that it would be most difficult to take any kind of disciplinary action on the basis of somebody's suggestion in the House that he did not agree with the report of the coroner's inquest. They, the staff, could quite properly grieve and say: "I was berated by my superior officer for doing such-and-such, whereas the inquest cleared the members of the staff. We do not think we should have to contend with that sort of thing."

It is a very difficult position. I will be glad to look into the report, but quite frankly I do not think that I should comment on it at this time. The report cleared the staff. If the hon. member is not satisfied with that, he raised the question in the House the other day. The hon. Attorney General, who is, of course, the responsible Minister for the actions of coroner's juries in inquests and so on, has stated that he will investigate it, and I think we just have to leave it at that at the present time.

I will, of course, go into the other matters as soon as we have some time to study them, and do what I can by way of clearing in my own mind some procedure which perhaps may be going on at the institution and which may require some correction. I will do that.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, has the hon. Minister received any request from anyone, apart from the remarks that we have raised in this House, for an investigation into the question of the death of Ronald Franklin Cross?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I cannot recall receiving anything like that currently. It may be possible that a few months ago a member of the staff, who since resigned, may have raised this in some of his correspondence with the department. A certain member of the staff had all sorts of complaints to make about various things and it may be that within this correspondence he may have mentioned this. I cannot recall it. The only reason I am referring to it now—and I do not want to say bluntly "no"—is in case he may have. But aside from that, I cannot recall. My acting deputy states he cannot recall anyone else raising this question at all.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister clarify what he said? Does he or does he not recall having been asked for an investigation?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not recall.

Mr. Renwick: He does not recall?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have been gravely concerned, as the hon. Minister will recognize, about the question of the inquest into this death of Ronald Franklin Cross.

I am greatly concerned on another score, because I received yesterday a letter from a former custodial officer—or a custodial officer who is at present grieving to the civil service board—and I would like to read the letter to the House. I think this is the only way in which we are going to be able to get an investigation into matters which we have been pressing for. This is a letter dated April 3, 1965, addressed to myself:

Dear Sir:

I was a member of the custodial staff of the Ontario reformatory at Guelph from April 1, 1957, until my forced resignation or dismissal on January 21, 1965.

In the approximate eight years of service, I was not once reprimanded for dereliction of duty. In fact, other than minor disagreements with a few members of the senior staff, the verdicts were usually in my favour. My yearly appraisals, five by the superintendent and one by the assistant superintendent, were very good. Over and above my duties as custodial officer, I was often called on to perform extra duties such as the installation of linoleum and floor tile and ceramic wall tile. Last November, 1963, I was one of the two officers from the custodial staff selected to lay concrete blocks for the gym at the boys' training school.

However, certain conditions pertaining to the treatment of inmates forced me to ask myself if I were doing my duty as a custodial officer in remaining silent or in turning a blind eye. My conscience answered "no." I cannot here elaborate further as I am bound by the oath of secrecy. The superintendent made this emphatically clear to me when he stated in the presence of the deputy Minister's designee on December 21, 1964, in his office, that I was bound by my oath for all time, and should I slander his name, he had a lot of money at his disposal and would use it against me in court.

In the spring of 1964, our branch had one of our best attended meetings at which a brief was drawn up and duly voted on. Mr. Young has a copy of this brief. A small part of the brief constituted a threat to security and consequently was deleted. This brief was to be delivered to the civil service association of Ontario personally.

Approximately seven months had elapsed with no word regarding our brief. At this point I was instrumental in calling a special meeting to discuss the matter. We had a large turnout as tempers were high. We were not enlightened in any way by the members of our executive as to whether our brief had been delivered, received and read, accepted or rejected. At this point the meeting was in turmoil.

I made a motion that copies of the brief be given to three members of the Progressive-Conservative Party, one copy to a Liberal member, and one copy to a New Democratic Party member. I went on to state here that these gentlemen were duly elected by the people to represent us. A member of the executive gave me the necessary copies there and then.

I personally, in the company of another officer, delivered a copy to the president of the civil service association of Ontario. The only member of Parliament we were able to contact in Toronto was Fred Young of the New Democratic Party. A few days later a member of the staff delivered a copy to Mr. Root of the Progressive-Conservative Party, and on this same day I delivered a copy to Harry Worton of the Liberal Party. A member of our staff residing in Fergus and another member residing in Galt stated they each delivered a copy of the brief to two Progressive-Conservative members. These last two I cannot confirm.

At a later date, after many erroneous statements by the Hon. Mr. Grossman, Minister of Reforms, with regard to the peace and tranquillity of the Ontario reformatory, Guelph, we petitioned Mr. Grossman to meet with us in order to air our grievances and be heard. I sent a covering letter with this petition and was severely reprimanded by the superintendent and had a letter read to me from the deputy Minister reprimanding me further. Although I took the full blame and responsibility for the covering letter, many of the custodial staff who had signed this petition were intimidated by those in authority.

We were, as usual, experiencing difficulty in hiring capable staff. Although we had many officers of high calibre, we were being forced, through inadequate wages and working conditions, to lower the standards required of a good custodial officer.

I might state here that approximately 15 men with from five to 14 years of service resigned in disgust, not to mention those with less service—a number which would astound you—who also have resigned. When one considers a starting wage of $3,600 per annum with yearly increments to as high as $4,400 per annum, naturally the members of groups 1, 2 and 3 are forced to moonlight. Groups 1, 2 and 3 comprise approximately 90 per cent of the custodial staff.

Moonlighting, or having a second job, may be all right in certain types of employment, but not in custodial work. Here, one must be alert at all times due to the danger element. One must be pleasant and co-operative with members of the staff and, above all, a guiding factor to those placed in his charge. The above-mentioned qualities cannot exist when an officer is fatigued by overwork or financial strain. If moonlighting were to be forbidden without a substantial increase in wages, there would undoubtedly be mass resignations. The qualification standards would be lowered and this would not be in keeping with the recent press reports of the great stride forward in reform and rehabilitation.

Now that you gentlemen saw fit to give yourselves an increase equivalent to the full salary per annum of a custodial officer, you should experience little difficulty in convincing the powers-to-be to increase the wages of the custodial staff at least $1,000 per year.

With reference to the news media in regards to the death of an inmate last year, it is true that all witnesses were not called. I, for one, was involved. I cannot, due to my oath, elaborate further. I did, however, deliver to the Attorney General's secretary on or about November 9, 1964, private and confidential information pertaining to this case and other conditions. There was further correspondence between myself and the Attorney General plus two telephone conversations. This honourable gentleman thanked me for this information and asked my permission to turn it over to the Minister of Reforms. I complied with this request.

Later in November, I had a hearing or interrogation by a member of the prison inspector's branch. None of my allegations were denied. On December 21, 1964, the designee of the deputy Minister said that he was removing me from service. I could not at this time receive any clarification as to why I was being dismissed and I still cannot. I can surmise, however, that my dismissal or enforced resignation was because of my contacting the Attorney General, together with my previous criminal offence of daring to write to the Minister of Reforms, as both the prison inspector and the deputy Minister's designee repeatedly asked me why I had contacted the Attorney General and the Minister of Reforms.

I explained to both these gentlemen that if I had used the proper channels I would ultimately be brought before the chief prison inspector who, I am led to believe, is the brother-in-law of the one I have the grievance against. The prison inspector admitted to me that he had checked my record and found it without blemish, and as I received my yearly increment I was not dismissed because of my work record. I have a grievance hearing on April 14, 1965.

I may be wasting my time as it was stated twice last week at the Ontario reformatory, Guelph, by two high officials from Toronto, that I was finished; I would not be back grievance or not. However, I shall have my day in court.

There were three serious conditions reported to the Attorney General. Two of these practices have been stopped since November, 1964. The other is the reason I am now writing to you. In my estimation, there is a terrific victory already.

Being ten years over the age acceptable to industry, and being a civil servant for the past eight years, I have been unable to find suitable employment or to collect unemployment insurance. Therefore, I have used up my savings and gone into debt. The reason I am sending this correspondence to you, Mr. Renwick, is because you are a lawyer. If this letter constitutes a breach of my oath of secrecy or the threat of the superintendent at the Ontario reformatory, Guelph, has any validity, please destroy this correspondence. I could not possibly raise the capital to defend myself. As you are an elected member of Parliament I am using you as an Ombudsman.

Yours very truly,
Patrick F. Lindsay.

I would like to know whether or not the hon. Minister would like to comment on that letter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member puts me in a very difficult position. I do not know what he thinks about getting up in the Legislature when there is a case coming up for grievance and prejudicing the case. Actually, the hon. member must appreciate this is what has happened. He is a lawyer and he certainly should know. He should have let this go until this man's grievance was heard.

However, he will have to take the responsibility for having brought this to the floor of the House, and I will give him—

Mr. MacDonald: He has. Go ahead!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, of course he has. There has been a lot of trouble caused by this man and I think the reason he caused this—in fact, there is no doubt—is because he was encouraged by a couple of hon. members from that party. I will read the report.

I will have the whole file up here and I will read it from now until tomorrow if necessary to give the hon. members all of the facts and the affidavits which would probably have been presented at the grievance committee procedure which he had postponed, for what reason I am not aware. We have a pretty good idea why.

This is the report from the executive assistant to the deputy Minister on the investigation:

On April 20, 1964, the hon. member for Yorkview asked questions about vacancies and salary scales at Guelph reformatory. Immediately afterwards he issued a press release alleging simmering discontent among the staff at Guelph. Mr. Lindsay wrote to the Minister on April 28 enclosing two pages of signatures petitioning him to meet with staff to discuss grievances. The covering letter was not seen or approved by the officers who signed. The Minister declined to meet with them on the ground that it would be highly improper for him to deal directly with the employees over the head of the civil service association when there was proper staff-employer machinery for handling such situations.

The grand jury report on Mercer published on November 5 seems to have spurred Mr. Lindsay to fresh efforts. On November 9, four days later, he wrote to the Attorney General mentioning his previous approach to the Minister, but also, this time, extending his remarks far beyond staff working conditions into a series of charges about procedures and occurrences at the reformatory—to be precise, the Cross death.

Incidentally, in that letter, I should point out, Mr. Lindsay gave the hon. Attorney General the impression that he had been trying to see me about this matter. This was not so at all. His request to me was to come out to Guelph and talk about wages and working conditions as such. It had nothing at all to do with any other matter he brought up subsequent to that, and that he referred to in the letter to the hon. Attorney General.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, may I clarify one point?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me finish, if the hon. member does not mind.

Mr. Renwick: Go ahead!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The report continues:

The Attorney General forwarded this letter to our Minister—that is, to me:

—on November 12. An immediate investigation was ordered into the truth, or otherwise, of Mr. Lindsay's charges. Mr. F. J. Matthews—that is, our inspector:

—conducted the inquiries and investigated every charge made in the letter, with the exception of one concerning the evidence given or withheld at the inquest into the death of an inmate, which he was instructed to lay in the area of concern of the Attorney General.

The inspector's report concludes:

After a point-by-point investigation—and I am quoting the inspector's report:

—that Lindsay wrote his letter to the Attorney General on November 9, 1964, a few days after the news of the trouble at Mercer reformatory.

And I am quoting word for word, the inspector's words:

His flimsy excuse that he decided to write his letter only when he heard that inmates were being placed again more than one to a cell in detention is ridiculous, especially as the guard from whom he says he obtained this information denies ever speaking to Lindsay, or even knowing him.

I find it hard, therefore, to believe that this letter was not written except to further embarrass the department at a time when the public was being so blatantly misled about another institution.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Lindsay is on record as saying that there were eight good reasons why he could not lose his job—referring to the NDP members of the Legislature—but that if he did, other heads would roll.

The inspector recommended that Mr. Lindsay be dismissed from the service. On December 21, Lindsay was interviewed by Mr. J. K. Lambie, executive assistant to the deputy Minister. Mr. Lambie reported to the acting deputy:

It is my impression:

1. That he could not substantiate the impressions given in his letter to the Attorney General.

2. His letters to our Minister could not be justified, and

3. That although he stated his reasons were to keep the matters within the government he had brought into disrepute the institution, the superintendent and senior officers of the institution and had other motives for doing so.

I therefore telephoned you—referring to the acting deputy Minister:

—and received your authority to suspend or release him from employment without pay and with the probability of dismissal.

Because it was near Christmas, Mr. Lindsay was allowed to resign, effective January 21, 1965, with one month's notice and the suspension was withdrawn.

Mr. Lindsay then filed a grievance to the civil service association, claiming, among other things, that his resignation had been demanded from him and it had only been given because of coercion. The hearing of the grievance was scheduled for February 16, but was postponed at the request of the association until further notice.

Further evidence about Mr. Lindsay's involvement in deceitful activities, and the hope of creating sufficient agitation to embarrass the superintendent at Guelph, has come to light in the matter of 1. The ex-patient of the neuro-psychiatric clinic, a very disturbed individual, who appears to have been used by Lindsay; 2. Another officer who has followed Mr. Lindsay patiently, rumour by rumour and lie by lie, to arrive at the attitude whereas he has admitted he has been willing to take almost any action to attack and disturb the superintendent.

Both these cases have now been dealt with by our inspectors and there is no further obstacle to prevent an early hearing of Mr. Lindsay's grievance by the board.

Evidence which has come to light in a subsequent investigation makes it clear that the postponement of the hearing of Mr. Lindsay's grievance was done at his request, and that he thought it would be for his benefit to wait until after the chesterfield incident. He was hoping that he would be able to bring the administration of the reformatory into disrepute and further his case.

The following is quoted from sworn testimony taken at the institution:

Q. Did Mr. Lindsay tell you that he had postponed his grievance until after the chesterfield incident had been settled?

A. He said: "Until another issue has been settled which is coming up."

There is no doubt that this was the chesterfield incident.

As far as staff morale is concerned, I think it is important to get this into the record because this man—in association with another member of the staff there, another custodial officer—had been creating a lot of disturbance. They have been going out of their way to give the impression that morale was at a terribly low ebb at Guelph.

There are over 400 persons on staff at the Ontario reformatory at Guelph and it is reasonable to expect that some individual or other will be dissatisfied. We know that one or two of our disgruntled officers have been in touch with some hon. members of the Opposition and we hope that they will not take the complaints—which have already been investigated—too seriously.

In one instance, officers complained about the rigidity of the working schedule and days off. A vote was taken among all officers in the institution and the complaining officers were shown to be very much in the minority.

In May, 1964, the local branch of the civil service association passed a vote of thanks to Mr. Sanderson, superintendent of Guelph, for the continuous co-operation he had accorded the branch and I quote:

—far beyond what could normally be expected and a vote of confidence for his constant display of dedication and leadership which has been the inspiration of all those who serve under and for him.

I have that resolution, passed at the last meeting of the civil service association of Ontario, branch 11, dated May 6, 1964, and it is signed by the president of the branch:

Mr. Lindsay quotes staff turnover and mortality rates as evidence of low morale. We cannot expect all new employees to fit into this work or like it, therefore we can expect our heaviest turnover in the first year.

In the last two years, staff turnover was less than 3.5 per cent, and of those who resigned, several applied for re-employment. Vacancies on the staff are rapidly filled and there is usually a waiting list of applicants.

As far as mortality rates are concerned, it is merely coincidental that for a short period there was a heavy rash of deaths among the staff, but there is no connection that could be traced between the cause of death and occupational hazard, particularly as half the staff involved had very little contact with inmates and were employed on such work as truck driving.

Mr. Chairman, as I said, it would have been better to wait until this grievance was heard. There are other reasons why it would have been better; I took the hon. members for Riverdale and Yorkview into my confidence as to why I thought it would be better to wait until this grievance was heard, for other reasons.

They are going to have to take their responsibility if there is any serious trouble at Guelph, because the inmates are going to read what has been going on here. All they need is the kind of encouragement they have been getting from some of the hon. members in the hope that they can get away with all sorts of things that normally they would not even attempt, in the knowledge and the feeling that there are hon. members of this Legislature who will back them up, no matter what kind of trouble they cause. I would like very much at this time to hear the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Wornton), whether he wants to engage in this debate or not, as to what his views are about the result of this sort of thing if it is carried to the extremes to which it is being carried, because it is in his constituency.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. Minister and, if he is unable to understand it, I would ask the hon. members of this Legislature to take into account what he has just stated to this House.

The hon. Minister on March 10, or thereabouts, took it upon himself to castigate the hon. member for Yorkview and myself about a visit to the Ontario reformatory at Guelph. He did so on the basis that the hon. member for Yorkview had gone to the hon. Minister and told him what he knew at that time about an incident at Guelph and had asked the hon. Minister to go to the institution with him. He had refused to go.

As a result of his refusal, the hon. Minister then decided that he would bring before the House matters—not that we were bringing before the House, but that he wanted to bring before—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member is misleading this House because the tearing up of a chesterfield had nothing to do with the subject that he discussed with me.

The hon. member was discussing with me the matter of the patient of the neuropsychiatric clinic, making some leather goods.

The complaint he had, and the complaint he registered with me when I was in the hon. member's office, was that some of the staff had accepted some of these leather goods and promised to pay him for it and had not paid him. It had nothing to do with going and doing what they did and tearing up a chesterfield, obviously to find contraband; that was not mentioned to me at any time. As a matter of fact it was their bounden duty to do that; they should have told me that because some terrible things might have happened in the interim. If they had felt that there was something being hidden, and I know what they were looking for now, they should have informed me so we could get on the telephone immediately and see that no damage was done. They took an awful chance and they are taking an awful chance now, creating some trouble at Guelph.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, so that we will not get diverted by the smoke screen which the hon. Minister has just raised, I will just point out that the hon. Minister was told on the day the hon. member for Yorkview spoke with him that there was further evidence. In the light of that remark and evidence that was put before him in a very short interview—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Further evidence of what?

Mr. Renwick: That there was further evidence—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of what?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): It would help if you would listen.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All I was told about was this matter of the exchange of leather goods. What further evidence was involved in that? I did not deny that. I said I would investigate and find out what the policy of the department is in respect of this. What further evidence was required—to dig into a chesterfield, to find a piece of leather goods? There was nothing else told to me.

As a matter of fact the man's name should never have been given to the press. Do you realize the dangers involved in that, when you are dealing with a psychopathic personality? Do you realize the dangers to the members of this department; the dangers to the Minister? You are fishing in waters that you do not know anything about, and you are going to create a great deal of trouble. You are just trying to—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Yorkview will speak for himself. On March 10, or thereabout, you attributed to us the fact that we were irresponsible in what we were doing. If anyone were to read today the statement of the hon. Minister on that date, he would note that it was completely inappropriate to the occasion that gave rise to the statement. The reason it was completely inappropriate was because there was the deliberate concealment of evidence at the Cross inquest. Again today we had to drag from the hon. Minister the question of a request to him for an investigation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why are you bringing the Cross case into the matter that the hon. member discussed with me about this psychopathic personality and the leather goods? The Cross case was never mentioned to me at that time; it was not even mentioned by the hon. member for Yorkview, nor was it mentioned by the hon. member for Riverdale. You are trying to give the impression that this was discussed with me and I ignored it. All that was discussed with me on that date was the exchange of leather goods—

Mr. Renwick: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. Minister will listen he will recognize that at no time did I say the question of the Cross inquest was discussed with the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the impression you are giving.

Mr. Renwick: Then I correct the impression. You just listen for a few minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly!

Mr. Bryden: And get a few things straightened out!

Mr. Renwick: Do you understand that what you have done on each and every occasion in which a question has been raised about the conditions in an institution under your control, and for which you are responsible? Immediately, without a moment's hesitation, you move to attack the person who gave the information.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not realize any such thing.

Mr. Bryden: That is exactly what you do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then prove it to me.

Mr. Renwick: That is what you did the other day.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What other day?

Mr. Bryden: What you did was completely out of order!

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, let us find out who is trying to bamboozle the public. I wish I had the press clipping here. The hon. member for Yorkview told the press, for example, that when they went to Guelph it was to investigate the Cross case, and the matter of searching into the chesterfield and of tearing the chesterfield apart was something that they decided to do while they were there—while they were there. The hon. member, just a few moments ago, and quite correctly, stated that what they asked me to go out there for and what they went out there for was to check precisely the opposite—was to check about the comments and the charges made by this inmate. It had to do with the exchange of leather goods, so they did not go out, and they did not ask me to go out, to do anything about the Cross case because it was never mentioned.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member has said a dozen times that he did not ask you about that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member has told the press that he went out that day to investigate the Cross case—

Mr. Bryden: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On the other hand, he knows perfectly well that he asked me to go out there for another purpose and that is the purpose for which he did go out.

Mr. Bryden: So there is nothing inconsistent in that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course there is.

Mr. Bryden: But you got up and made a statement before the orders of the day about the other matter, a most inflammatory statement. If you are concerned about discipline in your own institutions, you would not have dragged that statement, and that weird letter attached to it, into this House, I can tell you that. You made the statement under circumstances where there could be no answer to you. You made an attack on hon. members of this House when they could not answer—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, you give answers all right; you just go to the press gallery and give the answers to them.

Mr. Bryden: They could not answer what you said and their only opportunity was to go directly to the press because they were debarred by the rules from answering your out-of-order statement. Now, you keep getting up and interrupting while the hon. member for Riverdale tries to get the record straight, constantly trying to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are interrupting.

Mr. Bryden: I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he sit quietly for a while.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would suggest that the hon. member sit quietly.

Mr. Bryden: I suggest to you that you sit quietly for a while and listen to the hon. member for Riverdale. Let him get a few statements out in succession without you interfering with your red herrings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, sit down so I can hear him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the House to look at the record so far as the incidents from March 10 onward took place and are known to the hon. members of this House.

The first thing is that at the least intrusion by the members of this Legislature into one of his institutions, the hon. Minister immediately stands up and as part of his statement indicates that we were there because of some privilege which he extended to us. We deny that. We deny that we were there because of any privilege coming from the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions. We consider that we had a perfect right to be there. We consider that every member of this Legislature has that right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I answer that? May I answer that particular point?

Mr. Renwick: No, you may not.

Second, we have all listened since the date this House convened, to the matters about Mercer reformatory, and the very same technique has been used throughout. Anything that an inmate has to say, anything that a former member of the staff has to say, is not worth the paper it is written on so far as the hon. Minister is concerned.

I am but a simple lawyer—I do not understand the intricacies of law—but I can tell you if what we listened to today was the result of an examination by a member of his staff, on the basis of which a member of the custodial staff at Guelph was suspended, then the whole method by which investigations are carried out in the hon. Minister's department must be corrected.

Mr. Bryden: Hear, hear!

Mr. Renwick: There was nothing in that statement that was an attack on the person who made the request for the investigation. There was an attempt to show that he had done wrong by going to the hon. Attorney General, and that his evidence was flimsy. I cannot understand how you would expect a person to do other than to go to the chief law enforcement officer and be prepared to put the information that he has before him. He granted the request of the hon. Attorney General that the matter be turned over to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions and what is the net result? The hon. Minister just attacks him—whether it is in public or in a private memorandum or in the inspections made by his department—until the man has not one single hope on the day of his grievance to bring this matter forward in a proper and concise way.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Who brought this up?

Mr. Renwick: The reason we brought this matter forward today is perfectly obvious. If this matter had gone forward until April 14, there is no question in anyone's mind in this House, other than the hon. Minister's, that the man would not have succeeded in his grievance. We are not prepared to sit here and listen to another man attacked because he has seen fit to suggest that something is wrong within the framework of the hon. Minister's institutions.

I am not prepared to attack this wrong on a single individual basis. What I am concerned about is the very question which we raised last Thursday evening: What is the method by which either an inmate or a member of the staff of the Ontario reformatory at Guelph, or any other of the institutions under the responsibility of the hon. Minister, can be brought forward, and can be examined dispassionately, intelligently and objectively, so that a reasonable result is arrived at?

All I can say is that if the only recourse that the hon. Minister will allow any such person is to appeal directly to him, and to have the kind of investigation—and the only kind of investigation—plus the kind of attack which is automatically made on his character carried out by the hon. Minister of Reform

Institutions, then I would say no one, but no one, is going to raise a question with the Minister by way of complaint. For the hon. Minister then to proceed to suggest that we here are not entitled to raise it is something which is a serious reflection on the operation of the government. I would suggest that a procedure must be adopted so that reasonable complaints can be assessed and heard, so that a custodial officer who puts forward a complaint is not immediately or within a very short time, suspended and then under the pressure of the time—for practical purposes forced to resign—or immediately fired at Christmas time.

Now, I would ask: Would the hon. Minister not think that there is some room somewhere for a proper investigative procedure to be established by which inmates and custodial officers and others in his department can make reasonable requests?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I would like to get it clear that I never suggested that the visiting of our institutions by members of this Legislature was a privilege granted by me. I never suggested that at all. What I was suggesting was that the invitation I had extended to visit the institutions, under the circumstances I suggested it, was an unusual one. And it was. Because the usual procedure for a member to visit one of the institutions is to either get in touch with the Minister so he can arrange it; or even if he goes to an institution he does it on appointment so that the superintendent can prepare to receive him. Now I invited all the hon. members to go at any time without notice so they would not think we had anything to hide. I would like to get that clear.

Now as far as the grievance is concerned—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The point of order is that the hon. Minister misquoted exactly what he said in his statement on March 10 to this House. I think I will just read, if I may, the two paragraphs involved. As I understand it, what the hon. Minister said was that he did not intimate to this House that we were visiting there at his leave. This is what he stated in his statement that day.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What day is that?

Mr. Renwick: This is on page 1156 of Hansard, on March 10:

Hon. members will recall that last year I extended an invitation to all hon. members of this House to visit any of our institutions at any time without notice. It was my feeling at the time that all hon. members who wished to avail themselves of this invitation would do so in the full sense of the responsibilities which go along with the acceptance of such an invitation. It is obvious that not all hon. members appreciate the responsibilities attached to such a privilege.

I hesitate even to use the word "privilege," because it is my feeling that generally hon. members of this Legislature should feel free to visit provincial institutions, and I only use the term for lack of a more suitable one.

However, in the light of recent circumstances, the whole matter of visiting our institutions will have to be reviewed with the possibility that such invitation may be qualified with certain conditions, to ensure the protection of the staff, the inmates and the public.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know how I contradicted myself there. That is precisely what I said a moment ago.

Mr. Renwick: It is a direct contradiction of what the hon. Minister stated. The hon. Minister stated that he at no time indicated that our visit was at his leave and I am suggesting that what he has said here is exactly that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member really misinterpreting this or just trying to befuddle the House?

Mr. Renwick: I was just reading what you said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said that it was under certain conditions. The invitation I gave was to visit under certain conditions—not just visiting—and I repeated that in the statement which the hon. member read. When I said to review it, I said "to review it" so that the conditions under which they visit would have to be reviewed. This is what I was talking about, not whether they could visit or whether they could not.

This is the point I was making. I said it was not a privilege I was extending to visit, it was the privilege to do it the way I suggested, with a completely free and open hand, without regard to making any previous appointments or even concerning yourself with whether the superintendent was there when you got there; that is all I was saying.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as far as the grievance is concerned, as far as any guard, any member of the staff being able to complain: Is the hon. member referring to complaint about his working conditions, about what is expected of him as a custodial officer, what is expected of him by way of his duties or extra-curricular duties, or extra duties? If this is what he is talking about, then of course, this is a matter for the civil service association. He has a branch there and presumably he would make his complaints through the branch, which would make them through the proper channels. This is why it is set up.

I am sure that I would be subject to complaint here and to criticism by the Opposition if I went out there and over the heads of their official representatives, the civil service association branch, engaged in discussions with the staff as to working conditions. The hon. members would get up in high dudgeon, I am sure, and quite properly, and say you have no right going over the heads of the association which is in effect the bargaining unit for the employees. I could not put myself in that position.

Again, Mr. Lindsay is trying to make it appear that his attempt to get me there to discuss those matters, which his own association did not want to discuss with me because they knew the proper way to do it, has some connection with the Cross case. He never mentioned at that time and there was no talk of it at all until he wrote a letter to the hon. Attorney General, I suppose months later, and gave the hon. Attorney General the impression that he could not engage in correspondence with me on the matter of the Cross case. He had never mentioned the Cross case to me at all.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister stated himself that the letter from Mr. Lindsay to the hon. Attorney General was written on November 9, which according to the hon. Minister was four or five days after the report of the inquest was published. He immediately intimated that the only reason that Mr. Lindsay wrote that letter was because there was some publicity about the Mercer reformatory.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is my view.

Mr. Renwick: That is your view?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Renwick: That is typical of the attitude which you have—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the attitude I have.

Mr. Bryden: Always attributing it to some other motive.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he would answer the question which I put to him: Is he satisfied with the procedures in his department by which complaints are dealt with, whether they come from inmates or whether they come from the members of his staff? Obviously, on the record he has put before this Legislature, starting on March 10, it is absolutely unsatisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To what sort of complaints is the hon. member referring? I asked that. Is it about working conditions?

Mr. Renwick: No, it is not about working conditions. As far as I know, the complaints which were in the letter which went from Mr. Lindsay to the hon. Attorney General were not related to working conditions, because in the letter which I received from Mr. Lindsay he was quite forthright and forthcoming about matters relating to his specific working conditions, such as his salary, the conditions of the staff and the working conditions.

The points at which he did not elaborate were the very points on which he must have complained to the hon. Attorney General, because he specifically states, in two or three places in this letter, that he is bound by his oath of secrecy. The only matters that he could be dealing with are matters related to conditions within the Ontario reformatory at Guelph and his inability to get anyone to listen to his complaints. He is obviously a respected member of that custodial staff and was so until he started to raise some question about conditions, and then immediately he is faced with the sequence of events which leads to his suspension in December.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member trying to tell this House that Mr. Lindsay was concerned with his oath of secrecy and he was sort of welling up inside with his protest which he could not tell anybody? Is this what you are trying to say? Let us find out what his concern for his oath of secrecy was.

You said that, did you not? Have I got the hon. member right?

Mr. Renwick: Yes, he told us—I read the letter today, was the hon. Minister listening?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The letter to the hon. Attorney General?

Mr. Renwick: No, he said in this letter that he wrote to the hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, let us find out what he told the hon. Attorney General, how he honoured his oath of secrecy. You are putting this gentleman up as a great man of honour, who could not breach his oath of secrecy.

Mr. Bryden: Are you implying that talking to the hon. Attorney General is violating an oath of secrecy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: You meant it would—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, just let us lay this point to rest. He wrote to the hon. Attorney General. Surely if there is any officer, any member of this government who is going to raise the question about a breach of the oath of secrecy, it is the hon. Attorney General. The hon. Attorney General did not do anything about it. He wrote a very polite letter, apparently, to Mr. Lindsay and asked him for permission to relay the information to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions. Certainly the hon. Attorney General did not consider that he was in breach of any oath of secrecy and I certainly do not think that the oath of secrecy—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will the hon. member—

Mr. Renwick: One moment, please!

I do not think that the oath of secrecy was designed to protect the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions in this kind of a situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, then—now do not interrupt! If the hon. member for Woodbine will be quiet and let me debate this with him, his turn will come—you are telling me not to interrupt him.

Apparently Mr. Lindsay found a way of expressing himself, of laying his complaint. He laid it to the hon. Attorney General and there is no problem. He found some person to protest to. How would the hon. member suggest that we arrange this sort of thing? The man has a complaint—does the hon. member suggest that if any one of 2,500 employees has a complaint, or the thousands of inmates who may have a complaint—and thousands of them do, every day—that the Minister should be in a position—should put himself into the position to have to sit down and listen to those complaints? There would never be enough hours in the day to do it, nor to winnow out the legitimate ones from the charlatans; you never could do it. How would the hon. member suggest we do it?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister again comes back to the very point. I do not expect this and I do not think it is wise. Everything the hon. Minister has said indicates that it is not a proper procedure to give only recourse to the Minister of Reform Institutions. There must be some other procedure adopted. It is not for me to suggest; it is a question for the government to decide whether or not this is an adequate procedure. There will be ample opportunity to make other suggestions as to procedure. The question of ombudsman, the question of parliamentary committee has been raised in this House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the first place, as far as inmates are concerned, they could write you a letter. They do, do they not?

Mr. Renwick: The only letter that I have received from an inmate in the reformatory at Guelph was one which was opened before it arrived at my desk and had nothing whatsoever to do with the matters that I am discussing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But the hon. member appreciates that any inmate can write to him. We had inmates write to the hon. Prime Minister. Inmates have written to me.

Mr. Bryden: Somebody reads their letters along the way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Pardon. Well, of course, all the letters are censored. Is the hon. member suggesting that letters by inmates should not be censored?

Mr. Bryden: I would suggest that letters to elected members or to the Prime Minister should not be censored.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will say this to the hon. member: It is a good thought, and I thought about it, because when I saw these letters censored I wondered about letters being sent to me that were censored. I think I explained this the other day. If they came to me uncensored, I would get thousands of them. I would never be able to deal with them. They have to know that before they put something in a letter there is some substance to it. Of course, the whole problem here is to understand the problems that are inherent in running penal institutions. As far as I can ascertain—there may be some places where this does not apply—this is the way it is handled in every jurisdiction in the world. Every letter in and out of a penal institution is censored—has to be censored for security reasons. I know there are some dangers inherent in this, but I have sufficient confidence in the kind of people we have in charge of the institutions in Ontario not to concern myself over-much with the possibility that an inmate may not be allowed to send a message out if this is what he wants. Again, I would point out, as I did the other day, that even if he could not write a letter out, even if he was forbidden—which is, of course, not possible—there are people going in and out of that institution; there are clergymen, 222 of them; in fact, across this whole province probably 300 or 400—when one takes into consideration the reformatories—they are going in and out of these institutions daily, engaging in private conversation and private counselling with these people. Surely the hon. member does not feel that any one of these people, if they had a serious complaint from an inmate, would not bring it to our attention? Of course they would.

Mr. Bryden: I am sure they would, but the point is that to the inmate they may appear to be representatives of the establishment. I would suggest to the hon. Minister—and this is a bit of a diversion from the main point being discussed, but while we are on it let us follow it through—I would suggest to the hon. Minister that there is not going to be a breach of security in relation to a letter that an inmate might send to a member of this House or to the Prime Minister. It would seem to me he should feel that there is a place to which he can appeal without his complaint being first of all looked at by the people against whom he is complaining. This surely is part of our responsibility, even though I have no doubt the hon. Minister is right, that we might get a lot of complaints.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You will get thousands of them.

Mr. Bryden: We might, but as of right now we get practically none. This must be a pretty severe inhibition that has been put on these men if there would have been thousands of complaints when, in fact, we get none. I do not remember getting a complaint from an inmate in all the time I have been here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I get lots of them.

Mr. Bryden: I have no doubt you do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fact, we get them from the local jail.

Mr. Bryden: Do not worry about protecting us. You definitely have to be concerned about the security of your institutions, but I believe that there should be a channel, and a letter to an elected member, I think, is a proper channel, whereby a person in that institution can feel that he can get word to the outside world, if I can put it that way, without anybody in the institution looking over his shoulder to see what he has said. Surely a man has a right to feel that he has somewhere he can turn without the all-pervasive influence of the institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about the people who visit? His family and so on? Surely the hon. member—

Mr. Bryden: Some of these fellows have no family.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know, but it is very rare that he does not have a family or somebody.

Mr. Bryden: You have not given any good reason why a letter to an MPP has to be censored, but I do not see any point in pushing the matter any further. I can see why letters to unknown parties should be censored, but surely that is not the case with an MPP.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have raised this question, and to date I have been advised against it. I cannot think at the moment of reason why a letter to an MPP has to be that, because it appears to me just as logical as it appears to the hon. member. But I can assure you that if we ever decide to allow the inmates to write to the members of the Legislature, the hon. member will be a sorry man.

Mr. MacDonald: They do that now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am talking about uncensored letters. In any case, has any hon. member ever found that any letter sent to him was censored or was tampered with by anyone in the institution?

Mr. MacDonald: By a superintendent?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. members were in the institution on King Street a few months ago. They talked to the inmates. The point I am trying to make here is that what I would like to do is, as far as possible, destroy this image that is being created that somehow or other we run institutions somewhere out in Devil's Island, where you cannot reach anybody and no one ever sees them. There are hundreds of students from various schools doing social work, doing theses, doing studies, doing research, going in and out of these institutions. There are lawyers by the hundreds going in and out of them; there are clergymen; there are families. How in the world could anyone who wants to get a message out fail to get it out? This I cannot believe. I cannot understand it.

Mr. Singer: That is what Mr. Sedgwick is trying to find out right now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Find out what?

Mr. Singer: How people who have been in the Don jail—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is something else. Let us not muddy the waters.

Mr. Singer: Do not give us that nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let us not muddy the waters. He found out that people were there because they spoke to people and told them that they were there.

Mr. Singer: After they had been there weeks and months.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You do not have to do that, because that information is available. We get a regular count; we find out how long they have been there. Mr. Sedgwick found out something entirely different. They were held there because of actions of The Department of Immigration on hold orders—

Mr. Singer: But they were still there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Or by the actions of lawyers, who kept remanding cases.

Mr. Singer: But they were still there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They were still there, but they got their message out; they were not being blacked out. Do not confuse the issue.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the hon. Minister that certainly to my knowledge any citizen of Sweden who is incarcerated is entitled to write to the ombudsman without any censorship whatsoever. He has a direct line of communication to the ombudsman. I would hope that we have dwelt long enough on this point that the hon. Minister will take it under serious consideration to provide some avenue by which persons who are deprived, quite lawfully, of their freedom, should have some minimum protection so far as complaints are concerned. I think that it is now about time to revert to the initial point which I made; that is that the investigation of the sworn testimony of the superintendent at Guelph falls into the whole of this pattern of the way in which it is practically impossible to get any information that will be acceptable to the Minister with respect to the functioning of the Ontario reformatory at Guelph. I hope this matter would be taken under consideration.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I just want to pursue this point. I was not aware until now that someone on the hon. Minister's behalf, or someone in the department, has apparently taken it upon himself to determine whether or not the members of the Legislature can receive correspondence from inmates of the institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, no. Let us get this straight.

Mr. Singer: All right, let us get this straight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In every penal institution in Canada, letters going to and from inmates in every penal institution to anyone is censored by the staff at the institution.

Mr. Singer: All right; now that is straight.

Mr. MacDonald: May I interject something in here? Then you can pick up the argument.

The hon. Minister may not be aware of the fact that among the hundreds of letters I have had from inmates, a significant proportion of them reach me through his deputy's office.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is all right; it was censored before it got to the deputy.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister is talking about censorship, it is censorship with Big Brother looking on to the point that the letter goes from the institutions to the deputy, and then it comes to me with a note from the deputy. If the hon. Minister does not think this is the case, I can go into my files and give him half a dozen examples within a very few minutes—letters that come through the deputy Minister's office.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know what the hon. member is referring to. I will have to investigate that.

Mr. MacDonald: You do not need to investigate it; you can accept it as a fact.

Mr. Singer: Well, let me tell you. I have had letters from penal institutions in other provinces. The hon. Attorney General and I have exchanged some correspondence with reference to one. There has been no problem. I have corresponded with this individual, he has corresponded with me, all his mail has been getting to me. I have asked the hon. Attorney General for certain information and he is getting it. I have had one letter from the Don jail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You had it from another province, did you say?

Mr. Singer: Yes, from another province, where there is no difficulty—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I had a letter from Quebec uncensored, but they are supposed to be censored.

Mr. Singer: Now wait a minute. Just be patient here. The censor stamp is on the letters but the letters come out. What is new that is being added here today is this: Apparently the staff of the hon. Minister is taking it upon itself either to destroy the letters or to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not true and apparently it is not so. We do not censor letters at head office at all. There have been some letters, apparently, which have been addressed to some of the members of the NDP, and the secretary of that party apparently calls at regular intervals about some information and the letters are handed over for consideration. Why this is done, I do not know.

Mr. Bryden: Apparently you have to get a good close look before you send them along, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, no!

Mr. Singer: I think this is very serious. If a letter comes out of one of those institutions addressed to any member of this House, it should be allowed to come out. And I do not want the hon. Minister to save me the trouble of receiving these letters. That is my decision, as to what I am going to do with them. And I think if the hon. Minister takes it upon himself, or any of his people do—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not say that was the reason—

Mr. Singer: If the hon. Minister wants to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not say that was the reason. Do not put words in my mouth.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister should stop interrupting all the time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is a Chairman here, you know.

Mr. Singer: Well, you are out of order. Would you just sit down?

On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am getting sick and tired of this hon. Minister interrupting all the time. Surely he can let someone else make a few remarks.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said: "On a point of order."

Mr. Singer: You did not stand on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said: "On a point of order."

Mr. Singer: What is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell the Chairman, if you do not mind.

Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member is putting words in my mouth. I did not say that these letters were being sent to save the hon. members the inconvenience of receiving them. I said that if we ever change that, they would probably ask for them to be censored again.

Mr. Singer: Ah, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister again is dragging the same old smoke screen across the trail; it is a distinction without a difference. It is obvious now from what he has said that there is somebody in that department, or some group of people in that department, who are taking it upon themselves not to see letters coming out of those institutions addressed to the members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Singer: I think this is wrong and I think this is a sign of a police state and I think it is a covering up. They do not want complaints to come out of the institutions, and I think the hon. Minister should be very seriously criticized for trying to get up and justify this in the House today.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, so that it will be clear in the record, I at no time said that any inmate was forbidden to send a letter out or any letters were stopped. I said all letters in and out of the institutions were censored. The letters go and they are received, but they are censored.

Mr. Singer: Well then, could the hon. Minister explain in the case that has now been admitted—of the letters addressed to the NDP which have to be called for and picked up—why they cannot go through the mail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know and I am going to investigate this.

Mr. Singer: It bears out what I have been—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It does not bear out anything of the kind.

Mr. Singer: It bears out the fact that those letters are sidetracked and they do not get through the way they should.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister started out by suggesting that I was wrong, as is his usual tactic, and then he backed up and said he was not so certain. Let us put it right on the record. If he goes into his files he will find—and I have picked five or six that run from 1958 until closer to now—on October 23, 1958, over the signature of J. A. Graham, executive assistant to the deputy Minister at that time:

We are forwarding you a letter addressed to you from the above-mentioned, who is an inmate of the Burwash industrial farm.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Before you go on, can we deal with that one? I am interested in this, too. To whom was it addressed? Was there an address on it?

Mr. MacDonald: The letter was addressed to me.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is there an address on it? Maybe the inmate did not know where to address it, and he addressed it to you and expected our people to—

Some hon. members: Oh!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am asking that. Do you know that?

Mr. MacDonald: They get a form on which they can write their letter and they cannot write more than one page. On the back of it there are all the specifications and regulations. The only way it can be done, apparently, is through the institution, and it comes right through the deputy's office.

However, just let me put some more on the record and the hon. Minister can look into it. November 27, 1961:

Attached is a letter addressed to you from the above-mentioned in which he complains of the treatment received at the Ontario reformatory in Mimico.

Signed by L. R. Hackl, assistant to the deputy Minister.

November 24, 1961:

Enclosed is a letter addressed to you from the above-mentioned in which he is requesting a personal interview after his release on December 27, 1961.

Signed by L. R. Hackl, assistant to the deputy Minister.

October 12, 1962:

Attached is a letter addressed to you from the above-mentioned who is presently being held in the Metropolitan Toronto jail.

Signed by L. R. Hackl, assistant to the deputy Minister.

January 15, 1962:

Enclosed is a letter addressed to you written from the above-mentioned from the Rideau industrial farm.

Signed by L. R. Hackl—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member made his point.

Mr. MacDonald: Good. Do not be so ready to deny it next time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite frankly, I had no idea that any letters came through head office. It was my understanding that all letters went direct—that they were censored, but they went direct. If some of these are going through head office, it may be because they do not have addresses. You may laugh at this but I am going to find this out. I cannot see any reason at the moment as to why they should be channelled through head office unless they do not have addresses. I will investigate this and find out.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, as to the business of addresses, for goodness sake, anyone who is a member of this House knows that if the correspondent puts MP or MPP after any one of our names that the letter gets to us and gets to us very quickly. If there is one thing that the post office department does, it is to get those letters to us and I am sure every member in the House has received letters as long as his name has been on them. The impracticality of that suggestion is a bunch of nonsense.

If the hon. Minister does not know about it, as he says he does not, I would like the assurance given to this House now that any letter that is addressed by an inmate of any institution under the hon. Minister's control to any member, gets to that member and gets to him by direct mail. If he gives us anything less than that assurance, then I suggest that he is covering something up.

Mr. MacDonald: In fact, Mr. Chairman, I got a letter today that was sent from Washington, addressed to, "NDP Leader, City Hall," and it arrived in my office.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you sure they did not mean Controller Dennison?

Mr. MacDonald: No, they did not.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, all this is very good and I think this discussion of the availability of the hon. Minister or members of the Legislature to the inmates of institutions is a good discussion, but we started with the problem of the custodial officer and his problem in getting through to the authorities.

I am not going back over this whole problem today, but let us face this fact, that we have asked certain questions in this House about an inquest. The hon. Minister, in the first instance, chose to raise this in the House. In the letter from the superintendent, the whole matter of our investigation regarding the inquest was recorded, and the hon. Minister read this into the record at that time. If he will look back into that letter he will find what we did in looking over the records and in finding the permanent record. All this is here, and this is what the hon. Minister read into the record on March 10 last.

Mr. Chairman, I simply point out to the hon. Minister that his department, in this event, has placed the hon. Attorney General's department on the spot. When he talks about manipulation, there are certain people in his department who well may have manipulated in a certain way by not giving proper notice to the family, and not bringing in the proper witnesses. These are things which the hon. Attorney General must determine and he was put on the spot in this respect.

These are the questions we asked and these are the questions we want answers to.

The other question which occurred to me is that the hon. Minister said to this House that he did not remember this matter of the Cross inquest having been brought to his attention, yet he had all of the material here to answer it when it was raised, and to answer the record of Mr. Lindsay—the whole series of incidents leading up to this. I would like the hon. Minister's answer as to how he was so well prepared when he did not even remember what had happened in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is quite simple. It was obvious to me that Mr. Lindsay was out to create a lot of trouble, and from the first time we had this letter from him we accumulated the file on him. When there was an investigation as a result of the complaints which were made about his actions out there, and as a result of his dismissal, we had the file. I presumed it was going to be raised here because he said to some of the other inmates—and this is under testimony and under oath—that he had the protection of the eight members of the Legislature.

Mr. Young: On a point of order, does he say the eight members of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Young: Or was he—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He said he had—well, I had better read it—

Mr. Bryden: He said to somebody who said to somebody who said to somebody. Are you sure he wasn't referring to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This was sworn testimony. He said there were eight good reasons why he would never be dismissed.

Mr. Young: Might that be his family?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, he said members of the NDP.

Mr. Young: Did he say that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Taken down by F. J. Matthews, inspector:

Guard Lindsay told me he is a socialist but objects violently to anyone calling him a communist. He is a troublemaker, I have said that before; he is finished with all this.

I would be ashamed to raise my head in the town of Preston because I am on the staff of the institution. He also said that this applies to the guards who live in Guelph.

He appears to have a grudge against everyone from the rank of sergeant up, with the exception of two or three. He was the driving force behind the movement for higher wages but now that this has taken on—

Mr. Young: Is this a sworn statement of Mr. Lindsay?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment, please. This is Mr. Lindsay. This is a statement signed by another custodial officer during the investigation. It was taken down by an inspector when he was out there on the investigation.

Mr. MacDonald: They have all been intimidated.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suppose this is a whitewash. Mr. Chairman, may I finish this?

It is quite obvious that he intends to degrade this institution and some of the officers in it. I feel that the guards are all against him with the exception of one or two. Guard Lindsay is on an extremely friendly basis with the NDP and can refer to many of them by personal names.

I asked Lindsay, about a week ago, why he hadn't been fired and he told me, "I can give you eight good reasons why I have not been fired—eight NDP members of Parliament." And he mentioned these by name to me but I cannot now remember them.

Lindsay also told me that if he is fired over this trouble there will be two or three more heads roll other than his.

Maybe he means mine, I do not know.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, a civil servant is in the clear if he is a friend of the Tories but he gets into trouble if he is a friend of the Opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I noticed when the hon. member for York South was reading those letters that they are all on forms. I noticed in that very advanced province of New Brunswick, when I had a letter from an inmate of a reform institution there, seeking some help, that it certainly was not on anything like that. They allowed them to write on ordinary paper but that is not the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Personal stationery.

Mr. Troy: This has to do with the hon. Minister's statement that he is taking over the full cost of the operation of the training schools that have been operated by members of Catholic orders. Does that mean that he is also paying the cost of the instructors?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are taking over the complete cost of the operation and that includes all staff.

Mr. Troy: Fine, I am glad to know that. Therefore, you are paying for the religious education of Catholics in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, now—

Mr. Troy: I know it is a very fine point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member wants to make it difficult—

Mr. Troy: I am not making it difficult—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is certainly not helping it any. I would say we are trying to arrange it in such a fashion that the free time which the religious brothers give will include that time which they give to their religion—shall we put it that way?

Mr. Troy: I just thought it might be the thin edge of the wedge so we could expand that.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, yesterday the hon. Minister indicated he might give information regarding staff at the training schools. Has he that information now, as to social workers and psychologists connected with the various schools in the province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Individual ones?

Mr. S. Lewis: Individual schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member want me to read this out or will he take it if I hand it to him? It is quite a lengthy list.

Mr. S. Lewis: Just read the complement of psychologists and social workers in the training schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Psychologists: The Ontario training school, Simcoe—Does the hon. member want the number or the names?

Mr. S. Lewis: The number.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Two.

Mr. S. Lewis: Are these permanent members?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are both for one day per week.

Galt: Two of them, two days per week. Guelph: Two, two days per week. Lindsay: Three psychologists, one on half-time and one for one day per week; and one supervisor. Bowmanville: Two, full time. Cobourg: One, one day per week.

Psychiatrists: Simcoe: One, one day per week. Galt: Two, one day per week, one half-time; at the diagnostic centre, one. Guelph: One. Port Bolster: One. Lindsay: One. Bowmanville: One. Cobourg: One.

Social workers: Simcoe: Two. Galt: The diagnostic centre, three. Guelph: Two. Bowmanville: Three.

Mr. Troy: Is Cobourg full or part time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Some are full time and some are part-time. Which one is the hon. member asking about?

Mr. Troy: Cobourg.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Cobourg, one day per week.

Mr. S. Lewis: Am I right in thinking, Mr. Minister, that at the Galt diagnostic and treatment centre you have three full-time social workers for a complement of—I believe it is usually—10 or 15 girls, and at Galt training school with 116 you have none at all?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. Of course, the hon. member will appreciate that we have to do some intensive work there.

Mr. S. Lewis: I appreciate they have to do intensive work.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: These are available for the balance of Galt as well. I mentioned that yesterday.

Mr. S. Lewis: Is the hon. Minister suggesting that there is an actually formalized tie in staff between the Galt diagnostic centre and the Galt training school? Surely the Galt diagnostic centre serves all the training schools, and there is no more formal tie between it and the Galt training school than between it and any other training school.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, but they are available. They are right there, and they would be available if they were needed.

Mr. S. Lewis: But there are none at the moment attached to the training school itself?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Other than the superintendent.

Mr. S. Lewis: I just wanted some of that. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, in speaking of the situation in Guelph, mentioned the staff there, and I would like to ask him if he has the records here today of the number of custodial officers in each one of the categories—custodial officer 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. I wonder if that information is available here this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Young: I wonder if the information is available as to how many custodial officers there are in the Guelph reformatory in each of the categories—custodial officer 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6—at least that far.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not think I have this information here. I will be very glad to get it for the hon. member.

Mr. Young: Right.

The other question that I had is this, Mr. Chairman. I notice that the inspectors of prisons have a salary range of $6,000 to $7,200, which is a salary range lower, I think, than most of the superintendents. Is this a deliberate kind of range or is there some adjustment pending here which might bring the salary range of inspectors at least up to the place where it might be equal to the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All these salaries are now under review by the commission.

Mr. Young: So that those will be—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I have to leave that to the commission.

Mr. Chairman: Carried?

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, just before this vote finishes, there are one or two items I would like to deal with—quite briefly, probably. One, Mr. Chairman, is this matter of gratuities to inmates and it is information I am sure which might be of value to many of the hon. members in the House. I do not know how this is based, but I would like some information from the department. Is it based on a daily basis or a monthly basis, or is it a matter of the term to which the inmate has been incarcerated? What is the amount?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is a fixed sum of $2 a month, but this is really being carried on because it was started many years ago. It really bears no relationship to what an inmate gets when he leaves. Any well-motivated inmate—a releasee—who is prepared to accept the assistance and whose record shows that he does not abuse it, gets all sorts of assistance from the rehabilitation officers, including clothing and whatever cash is required for accommodation and food.

I asked, as a matter of fact, the obvious question that occurs today: How long has it been $2 a month? It has been so for many years, perhaps 20 years. The obvious question is: Why have you not raised it, because the cost of living is going up? The answer was that instead of raising that, they just add money to the rehabilitation fund and use it where it is most suitable. For example, if you have someone who goes out of the institution with $30 or $40 in his pocket, in many cases that will be gone before the day is over. We feel it is better to handle it through the rehabilitation officer, and with his co-operation to do what we can to help with accommodation and so on.

Mr. Freeman: Thank you, Mr. Minister, I appreciate that. One other matter, Mr. Chairman, that I think will just take a moment, concerns the fact that as recently as March 17, I believe, the Ontario provincial council of the united brotherhood of carpenters and joiners of America presented a brief to the Cabinet. I think it would be just as well to read from the brief itself, for purposes of brevity, and I think it will probably serve the purpose:

The feelings of our council in taking issue with The Department of Reform Institutions over the construction at the industrial farm, Fort William, Ontario, where inmate labour was being used exclusively to construct the carpentry portion of the particular project—

I would like to interject briefly, Mr. Chairman, that I, in company with some of the members of the carpenters and joiners union, visited the institution at Fort William. We were greeted in a very friendly manner by Mr. Gauthier, the superintendent, who showed us over the project and the work being done. It was a fact, undoubtedly, and the superintendent agreed, that a good deal of the carpentry work was being done by inmates.

But apropos of the very fact that I was asking about the gratuities, Mr. Chairman, is the question as to whether or not a qualified carpenter, who quite possibly—I do not know what the going rate is, but I would imagine it is well in excess of $2 an hour in the, shall we call it, free world—might be admitted as an inmate of the institution and stating his occupation no doubt would put down “carpenter.” I would take it for granted almost that the superintendent would naturally assign him to carpentry work within the institution. It would seem like good common sense. But to use a qualified carpenter in a building project, or a number of qualified carpenters or tradesmen of other categories, in an institution such as you control or supervise, it would seem to me that a great deal more than $2 a month—or up to, say, $5 or $8 or $10 a month—should be coming to that man when he finishes a term of, say, three to six months or a year.

I agree with the hon. Minister that a good deal of common sense must be used in that the circumstances of the inmate upon discharge should be taken into consideration. But it also seems to me to be rather an unfair thing upon a qualified tradesman, who has possibly put in many years in learning his trade, that he should donate his ability and his knowledge to The Department of Reform Institutions or any other department of government on a very low pay basis.

Further to that, just very briefly, one of the institutions to which the brief refers raised this question with the government in the years 1959 and 1960, when the estimated $100,000 tailor shop was being constructed with inmate labour at the reform institution some ten miles from the city of Brantford. I would take that to be Burtch from your descriptive booklet. The work in this case was reported to be substandard and a serious safety hazard. I wonder if the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, would have anything to say with regard to the present status of that institution from a construction point of view? This goes back to 1959 and 1960.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The representatives of the union raised that question. As a matter of fact, any time you are going to do any work in that area of Ontario, you usually get complaints about this. I investigated the allegation that the building at Burtch was built in an unsafe condition and so on, and I find no evidence at all on record that there was any such allegation by anyone other than the representatives of the union. Our people tell me that the building is in very good condition, and is very well built.

As to the matter of the carpentry work at Fort William, this is a training centre we are completing and we are going to teach carpentry there, and the best way to teach some of the inmates is on the job.

Mr. Freeman: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are using this. As a matter of fact, the union representatives mentioned that they met one of their members in the institution and it would seem to me that it would be a logical thing to put a qualified carpenter in with the young ones whom you are trying to teach carpentry. So far as paying them is concerned, I am sure the hon. member will appreciate the difficulties in a penal institution, if you are paying some and not others. I was in a U.S. institution where the authorities paid fairly well, and this was one of the problems they were coming up against, a very difficult disciplinary problem. If someone has some work assigned to him and he gets paid a considerable amount of money, and others do not, or if they get paid a lot less, it creates tremendous problems. However, as I told the representatives of the union, this whole matter will be reviewed when this committee that I spoke of earlier is set up—the industry and trades committee.

Mr. Freeman: This is to be under review?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, just one last question.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): It is six o'clock.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

No. 69

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, April 6, 1965
Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

Price per session $3.00. Address, Clerk of the House, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, April 6, 1965

Estimates, Department of Reform Institutions, Mr. Grossman, concluded	2025
Estimates, Department of Labour, Mr. Rowntree, concluded	2031
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2051

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF REFORM INSTITUTIONS

(continued)

On vote 1903:

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, the questions I would like to direct to the hon. Minister (Mr. Grossman) concern, first, a comment I noticed in the Ontario water resources commission report. One of them said this:

The cause of overloading at the Burtch industrial farm sewage treatment plant should be investigated and eliminated.

Continuous chlorination of the Brantford Plaza sewage treatment plant effluents should be maintained and the refuse disposal site should be closed and another one selected.

I presume this has been brought to the knowledge of the authorities and I am wondering if this recommendation has in fact been carried out or if plans are being made.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Could the hon. member tell me the date of that report?

Mr. Young: I am afraid I do not have the date of the report here. I will get it though. It is a recent report—within the last couple of months.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am told that we put a new sewage disposal plant in there about three years ago. I have not heard about it and my acting deputy Minister knows nothing about it.

Mr. Young: All right. I will get further information.

One other question, Mr. Chairman. Last summer the hon. Minister visited the district jail in Sudbury. The following day I was there and the governor mentioned to me one of the problems he had—

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): On a visit or—

Mr. Young: They let me out again, Leo. The governor mentioned to me one of the problems he had in regard to the yard. It seems a grand jury on a couple of occasions had recommended the yard be enclosed so that the inmates there could get exercise in that yard. Up until last summer, at the time of the hon. Minister's visit, that had not been carried out. I wonder if any steps have been taken in that regard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Department of Public Works has already let the contract for that. They are waiting for spring to proceed with the work.

Mr. Young: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, on this vote 1903, under "District jails salaries, $1,039,500," I should like to ask the hon. Minister what percentage of these salaries goes to local level?

I am not making that very clear: What percentage of this $1 million goes out to local levels?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If it is salaries for district jails all the money would be going to those people who work in the district jail.

Mr. Sargent: What percentage, Mr. Chairman, do the municipalities get out of, say, a $10,000 salary per month in a jail? What percentage does the province pay of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am afraid I do not understand the hon. member's question. Does he appreciate the fact that the district jails are completely owned and operated by The Department of Reform Institutions?

Mr. Sargent: If that is the situation, are these jail employees part of the civil service set-up?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about county jails.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perhaps I should explain that the district jails are jails which have been established, generally in unorganized territories, by The Department of Reform Institutions and are operated solely and completely by the department.

The hon. member is referring to county jails. The county jails are owned and operated by the counties. The Department of Reform Institutions makes a grant of ten per cent of the maintenance costs for all county jails.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you.

Would the hon. Minister go further? The employees, the guards and custodians in county jails, are they under the jurisdiction of the department?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, they are employed by and are under the jurisdiction of the county.

Mr. Sargent: Does the hon. Minister agree that their pay schedule should be under the civil service pay schedule?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would not agree to anything like that at all. They are negotiated on a local basis, sometimes with the local unions, and I would not want to interfere with that.

Mr. Sargent: I am not trying to harass the hon. Minister, but this is a very sore point. The county jails have the lowest pay schedule of any employees in municipal administration. I think if the hon. Minister has jurisdiction there, which he says he has—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have no jurisdiction in respect of the salary of employees of county jails. If the hon. member feels that a particular county is not paying decent wages to its employees, that is the level at which the pressure should be exerted.

Mr. Sargent: A final question, Mr. Chairman. I have been over this before with the hon. Minister and it is a very important point to me that tonight we have people still going to bed in cells that are 36 inches wide by 8 feet long. I do feel that, if this is part of our reform institutions setup, I would like to know what programme the hon. Minister is directing so far as replacing these old jails?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, for the last couple of days we have had some discussions about the plans for regional detention centres which my department and this government are sponsoring. We will pay 50 per cent of the cost of construction for new regional detention centres, in other words new multi-county jails, which are approved by the department. This will solve these problems, which I agree are in existence and which the hon. member has mentioned. Those counties which are prepared to go ahead with such a plan will get assistance and guidance, and 50 per cent of the cost of construction, from this department.

We are, of course, fully aware of the situation to which the hon. member refers. I have spoken of it publicly and we are trying to attack it in the manner which I have just outlined.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, I would like to make this point. I have talked to the hon. Minister personally and I know his concept of this, but I do not feel any municipality will voluntarily come forward and say; "We want you to give us a regional jail here, we will pay half the cost."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, they are.

Mr. Sargent: They are not doing it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have, Mr. Chairman, for the hon. member's information, quite a number of counties—I do not know what they are in number, I could total them up, but quite a few of them—and there is a new group of counties coming in to see me in the morning to discuss this.

It is not being left entirely on a voluntary basis. If I have given that impression I would like to dispel that. Our department takes a lot of the initiative in this thing. We attempt to sell the idea to the counties. We have been very successful in many instances and it is beginning to take hold. I do not think it will be too long before it covers this whole province.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, I would suggest, as a member of this House, that it is the wish of most people in this province that you take a dynamic approach to this and order modern penology methods in this province and do away with this situation. Make it mandatory that these fall in line with your suggestions, and not voluntary! I would plead with the hon. Minister on that point.

Mr. Troy: This is the first time, Mr. Chairman, that we have discussed district jails in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, no, we have discussed it here. We have discussed it right on the floor of this House the last few days. However, it is the hon. member's privilege.

Mr. Troy: Yes, that is right.

One of the amenities that we have in northern Ontario is the fact that you take our gold, you take our pulpwood, you take the products of our streams and you give us back district jails.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member should know—I think we might as well get it on the record—that those areas of which he is speaking are getting district jails and getting their responsibility looked after by The Department of Reform Institutions and the government, which other counties do not get.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I just pointed this out to the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston), it is one of the amenities of living in the northland.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): The hon. Minister does not know praise when he gets it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It just sounds different, that is all.

Mr. Troy: I do not know if it is the hon. Minister I should congratulate, but there is one question I want to ask which concerns a late constituent of mine who died in hospital in Peterborough. He had been an inmate of the Millbrook farm. I know he was in hospital at one time when he was in custody. I just wondered if he—shall I give the name? He died recently in hospital in Peterborough. I wonder if he completed his term of incarceration and then was released and died, or was he released because of his physical condition?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He had completed his sentence before he died.

Mr. Troy: I know, but before his discharge—the hon. member should be on the Pierre Berton show with that psychiatrist.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I hope the hon. member will make it clear, for the record, that his last remark about being on the Pierre Berton show was directed to his hon. colleague and not to me, because the record would show it otherwise.

My acting deputy tells me that he is familiar with the person to whom the hon. member is referring and he informs me that he was released, his term had expired, and it was subsequent to that that he went in hospital and passed away.

Mr. Troy: Thanks very much. I found out in the army that sometimes they used to release chaps who suffered from TB and then they—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, of course, the hon. member knows we would not have the authority to do that. We cannot release people when we like. Either their term expires or a parole board, which acts independently of any other official in our department, would have to parole a person if he were eligible for parole.

Mr. Troy: You are more humane then.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Has any agreement been consummated with a number of counties for the erection of a district jail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, Mr. Chairman, not yet.

There are some, as I mentioned the other day, which are fairly imminent. There was at least one group which was prepared to make an arrangement with another municipality, and at our urging is having a discussion with a third municipality, because we think it would be a more viable unit. They have just recently been having discussions with the municipality. There are a number in this particular category, and my hon. friend will also appreciate that it takes quite a while to get these things organized. We started it last year and we feel there are some imminent just now. None have signed.

Mr. Oliver: Has the department laid down rather concrete specifications as to the capacity these jails must have, or the number of counties that must be involved?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, in each instance we have had some fairly detailed figures to show them the approximate cost, the accommodation, percentage of maximum and minimum security and that sort of thing. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Wellington South sat in on a meeting of those concerned in his area and he is familiar with all of these details which we have provided.

Mr. Oliver: What would be the capacity that the department insists on? What would be the capacity of a new institution?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That would depend on a particular location. We would not want them to go over 250, in any instance. Most of them will not, I think, reach this capacity; most will have about 100.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I expect the hon. Minister is aware that over the past several years the grand jury's report in Hamilton was to the effect that the Barton Street jail facilities were quite antiquated and should be torn down and replaced. I take it from his previous remarks that the hon. Minister knows about the negotiations between Hamilton and, I believe, Halton county, about building a county jail. This has been going on for some time.

What I was concerned with is where the jail may be in Halton county; this, of course, will be some distance from where the present Hamilton city jail is. There will be extra cost to the city of Hamilton for transportation back and forth. I understand that the hon. Minister has said that it is a 50-50 proposition, and the department foots 50 per cent of the bill. Does that mean that the counties will have to negotiate the other 50 per cent share?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The government has not committed itself to paying any portion of the cost of transportation. This is a matter to be worked out with each particular group, because they do not all have the same problems. As a matter of fact, I doubt very much whether the Hamilton group will have this problem at all.

Mr. Gisborn: My question was not in relation to just the transportation costs. It is the capital cost, I understand, that your department is concerned with. Will it be left then to the other parties to negotiate their share of the other 50 per cent in relation to the circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. There is no problem here because there is a basis for the formulae for this. As a matter of fact, Hamilton has such a basis because it has had a working arrangement with the county of Wentworth. They have had this sort of arrangement with them and they know what percentage to charge them. It may be per inmate; I am not too sure at the moment. They were quite prepared to go ahead, incidentally, with the county of Wentworth on such a regional detention centre. It was that group which, we suggested, discuss matters with Halton, because we feel this would be a more viable and more logical unit. The discussions are apparently going on, and are on a very amicable basis. We hope they will come up with an agreement shortly.

As for the percentage, this is easily worked out. It is usually on a per capita basis, based upon the number of inmates coming from that particular municipality in the previous year.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I take it, Mr. Minister, that your allocation of the cost of these district jails will be 50 per cent by the province and 50 per cent by the county? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We should get our terms straightened out again. District jails are those jails operated by The Department of Reform Institutions and the unorganized territories. The hon. member is probably referring to the new regional detention centres we are talking about. We will pay 50 per cent of the cost of construction. The other 50 per cent will be shared by those municipalities entering into the agreement on a formula arrived at by them, which will generally be along the lines I suggested to the previous hon. member—on the basis of the number of inmates usually handled or sent in by that particular municipality.

Mr. Sargent: Is this the policy of the government?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Does the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) agree on this apportionment? To charge 50 per cent of the cost, which you say has been suggested, against real estate again? In other words, you are going back into the old slot; we are charging the cost.

Several hon. members: Vote carried.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment. This, I take it, is a new policy of the government to charge 50 per cent of the cost of these regional jails against counties and municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is really not a method of charging. It is a method of picking up 50 per cent of the cost for which they were completely responsible previous to this. A county is responsible for the construction of its own jail; we are now picking up half the cost.

Mr. Sargent: What makes you think this is a just charge against real estate? I think we should establish now that it is the policy of this government to continue to charge the cost of jails against real estate.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Who said anything about real estate? It has not been mentioned before.

Mr. Sargent: I know it has not. It is time someone did mention it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the hon. member, I do not think that this is a matter under this vote.

Mr. Sargent: It certainly is. We are talking about reform institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member thinks that our new plan, in which we have made, I think, a rather generous offer to pick up 50 per cent of the cost of construction of a new unit, is not a good one, and it will help the local property taxpayer if we do not pick up any of the cost, we will consider it if he cares to put that on the record. We will consider it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, let us not kid ourselves. We do not have a plan. All you are doing is talking.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Listen to who is talking.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister asked his two assistants: "What is the size of these?" How many know the answer? Two hundred, 250, or maybe 100. We do not know. He is just talking.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have pointed out that that would depend on the location. There are some locations which would require a larger unit, and other locations would require a smaller unit, depending on the particular location. If the hon. member would like some samples, and while I do not know whether we have any here, we could provide them.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the leader of the House, these estimates would get along a lot faster if you gave some advice to some of the people in the cheap seats. It seems to me, too, sir, that there are very definite regulations that you do not call people by their first name. Certainly everybody knows him as "Eddie," but in this House he is the hon. member for Grey North. I think I am correct in saying, too, that you do not call the districts of northern Ontario unorganized districts. I think you call them territorial districts.

Mr. Worton: Lesson number one.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I think the remarks of the hon. member for Nipissing are well taken and apply equally to the hon. members of the Opposition as well. Now, let us get on. I was probably interrupting a big point that was being made there.

Mr. McKeough: Not very big.

Mr. Troy: I would say touché, monsieur, we also have sinned.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): But not nearly as much.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: I want to ask a question of the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman. What are the qualifications for employment as a custodial officer in a district jail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, the same requirements as for the balance of our institutions, that is, the reformatories. I went through this yesterday. Incidentally, I do not want to inhibit the hon. members from asking any questions, but really this matter of district jails and so on come under the first vote.

Mr. Troy: And also, with respect, Mr. Minister, under vote 1903, the vote we are now on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And while I am on my feet, I want to apologize to the hon. member if he takes umbrage at the fact that I referred to unorganized territories instead of territorial districts. Being a man from the little village of Forest Hill, near Toronto, I sometimes forget these things.

Mr. Troy: No, I do not take any umbrage. I notice the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) had apparently given a lesson, according to the press, to my hon. leader (Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is carried, I would like to call the attention of the House once more to the need for the halfway houses and the facilities for our work among young people.

I want to bring for the information of the hon. members a report which was brought on February 1, 1965, before the social service committee, and then the Toronto Centre Presbytery of the United Church, by Jean Stacey, the youth worker of Bathurst Street United Church. This was in respect to the need for halfway houses for homeless youth in the Metro area; what he says here, of course, applies not only to Toronto but, in lesser ways, to other centres in the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult enough keeping up with the votes. The hon. member, I suppose, is going to develop the philosophy that we should encourage halfway houses with more grants. This comes under the first vote and we discussed this rather thoroughly. It really does not belong in this vote.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I will leave this and perhaps at some other point bring it before the House.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, obviously I do not wish to prolong this vote unduly. Since we are verging on the finale of this lengthy and informed discussion on reform institutions, I would like to bring part of our discussion yesterday to a close with two or three final observations—on my part at any rate, unless I am otherwise provoked by the hon. Minister—final observations which arise out of some of the discussion yesterday and some of the figures he gave to this House today.

I want to suggest to him and to every hon. member in this House who has any interest in the subject, that the figures he gave some two to three hours ago on the complement of social workers and psychologists in our training schools in the province of Ontario for children under the age of 16, means that we cannot do an effective job in those training schools.

I say to him, with some measure of sorrow, that with the best intentions of the world, the training schools must necessarily fail in their job to some significant degree if they do not have adequate staff. If the hon. Minister says to me, as he is wont to do, that no jurisdiction has adequate staff, then my response is simply that that is not a sufficient rationale. In fact, all that says is that we are operating here at a better sub-standard than other jurisdictions. That obviously cannot satisfy the Opposition, Mr. Chairman.

There were two points made yesterday afternoon which require repetition.

First, the hon. Minister implies that the figures of disturbed children which were raised in this House were unnecessarily extravagant. I want to say to him that the case I read into the record yesterday, although obviously unique of itself, was symptomatic of case histories multiplying into the thousands. Every informed group on this subject—and over the past night I went back and looked at some of the figures—indicates that a three per cent minimum of children in the province fall within this category of needing intensive treatment. That three per cent minimum amounts to something like 80,000, and I for one shall not retreat from that figure.

Second, Mr. Chairman, in a somewhat cavalier way—and I suspect that this transferring of notes from the wings to the hon. Minister is not an efficient way of conducting business—in a somewhat cavalier way it was stated categorically in the House yesterday that there is no treatment for the psychopathic personality. I have also done a little investigation into that particular contention. I have in the interim spoken to some psychiatrists, and indeed to the Warrendale people who were mentioned in this House yesterday.

The facts that emerge are these: the general area of the psychopathic personality is a broad definition of one kind of character disorder. Indeed, psychopathic personality, I am informed, applies primarily to adult personalities and that the children are beset by what are called character and personality disorders of an exceedingly severe and fundamental kind which could, in fact, if given the opportunity, be adequately treated within an intensive treatment milieu prior to the age of 10, 12 or 16.

In fact, that is exactly what we are doing at Thistle town. The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has spoken of what is happening at Thistle town. These severe character disorders are, in fact, to some degree, adequately treated there.

I want to suggest to the hon. Minister that we should not dismiss this area in sweeping fashion. There are treatment milieux available. They should be developed within his department as well as within other departments. I do not think that we in the Opposition should have the ground cut from under us by the sweeping assertion that there is no treatment.

There is only no treatment when no effort has been made. When the channels are closed and the facilities are not available, obviously there cannot be treatment. I say to him again, in closing, that he should develop these centres within his department.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, there is one further question that I would like to ask the hon. Minister. I agree that perhaps the matter of halfway houses may be out of order in this vote and so I have dropped it, but I do want to take the Minister into the area of the detention cells in the Guelph reformatory.

When we were there some time ago we talked to one of the boys incarcerated in one of those cells and we noticed that he was reading a copy of the Bible at the time he was there and, we hope, profiting thereby. As we came out, and were talking, we noticed a pile of Bibles, fairly well worn, in the area.

I did not ask the question at the time, but I wonder whether this is the only reading which is provided for the inmates in the detention cells. I can understand that they might profit greatly from this kind of reading, and also they might find some rather spicy reading in certain parts of the Old Testament too. It seems to me that if the Bible is going to be associated with detention in this way, then it is questionable as to whether the person who is detained is going to develop a very high regard and a deep love for this great book of books. I wonder if the hon. Minister could enlighten us as to whether this is indeed the sole reading that is provided in this detention area?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member will appreciate that Bibles are available to everybody in the institution. There are some institutions where a person who is in detention has other reading privileges taken away from him, as a privilege removed for punishment. This is not standard for everyone in detention, Mr. Chairman.

In respect of detention, privileges removed, and so on, I will repeat again what I said earlier, that there is research being done under Professor John Spencer of the University of Toronto school of social work on this whole matter of discipline. We hope to have a report on all of these aspects: What effect they have, which are good and should be retained, which should be removed, and so on.

Mr. Young: So reading is denied in all cases except for the Bible?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, in the answers the hon. Minister has given in response to questions concerning jails he has referred to regional detention centres. Are we to assume that it is high policy then to do away with this term "jail"?

An hon. member: You asked this three days ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As far as is possible it is our intention to combine as many of the county jails to provide an effective modern unit.

Mr. Nixon: So the term "jail" would no more be used? Is that so?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite possibly, yes. Vote 1903 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR (continued)

On vote 908:

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I was just going to ask one question, and perhaps I can make an observation.

Unlike some of the hon. members in the House, I did not find the hon. Minister's (Mr. Rowntree's) terminating remarks last week too uncharitable. I wish him to know that I did not pretend in my presentation to be opening new ground. I recognize that this has been well covered.

I therefore wondered, in that particular context; is it possible for the hon. Minister at this time to give to this House a sort of systematic outline of areas, proposed areas, for research within the department and how he intends to develop liaison with the federal department?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, with respect to research, this is a very wide subject. There are many aspects of it. In fact, one could assign staff to do nothing but correlate all of the points that are involved and the possibilities. This in itself is a problem, to determine the starting point for an effective research programme in this field.

Now, I would say this, that I think we would all recognize that there are two basic types of research. One category might include the regular accumulation, say, of statistics, and the accumulation of material on certain subjects on a continuing basis to determine trends, and things of that sort. Then there would be special research on an ad hoc basis—a special subject, special areas, that should be tested, looked at in detail and in depth and then a determination made as to whether that subject or area should be dealt with on a continuing basis.

I will be quite frank in saying that at this moment there are many of those areas that are before us which will have to be decided upon.

We have had, in our labour relations board branch, a research operation. That is being brought into the main area of research of the department. We have always had what is called the statistical branch, which has done research work and has had a qualified economist at the head of it until last fall, when she returned to take up some further post-graduate work.

Then I have to correlate. We are talking about available manpower; we are talking about human resources. In the context of the debate the other day with the hon. member, it is in this area that I recognize what he is talking about. The great problem is to try to determine the starting point. In so determining a starting point, I would hope that this is but the beginning of a research in itself. But we must not have this thing—we have to start at some solid point. Let me also say that in dealing with the requirements of The Department of Labour as such, and it is for that department I speak, there are other requirements of a similar nature, but somewhat different, that would apply—I am talking about information—in which The Department of Education would be interested.

We, in the government, would feel that this thing must be analyzed not on the basis of who is going to be responsible for what, because we have very effective and satisfactory liaison and relationships with our colleagues in the senior echelons of the education department. I did not mention economics and development; I should have, because once again there is a third area. There are three main areas that we are talking about and, obviously, there is tremendous overlapping. I would think that the hon. members of this House and I, as the Minister of Labour, would not want to see this duplication, because these studies and this type of work can be an expensive proposition. I think probably an equally important aspect of duplication is that it involves a waste of time, and does not let us get on with the job.

At the moment, I would like to read into the record a statement dealing with my department's programme in relation to automation and technological change. I am sorry if there is repetition in some of this, but probably I should give it to you in toto so that the context is there:

Generally I feel that increased productivity must be encouraged to the fullest extent in Ontario if high employment, full production and purchasing power are to be maintained. We have benefited greatly from technological improvement and rising productivity which have been made possible. The government encourages the acceptance of technological change by management and labour alike. However, it is increasingly evident that the private sector of the economy, particularly management, labour and education, cannot successfully cope with all the complex problems stemming from technological change. When they cannot adjust satisfactorily, the government is left to formulate and adopt policies to minimize any disturbing effect of this growing technology on the individual employers and communities.

For individuals, the most serious effect has tended to be unemployment caused by lack of skills and training. Employers unable to adjust cannot produce as efficiently as their competitors because of obsolete and obsolescent technology and administrative processes. Adverse effects on communities are declines in industry and employment, resulting in financial and social problems.

So I am simply stating here that there is an overflowing effect on all segments of the community and the economy.

With respect to changes in technology, they are resulting in (a) some shortages of skilled workers—for example, in metal working, highly skilled construction, forest and wood products operation, automobile repair and clothing manufacturing; and (b) some automation but little displacement of workers—for example, clerical work, handled by automated electronic data-processing equipment. Up to July of 1962, only 2.4 per cent of the work force in organizations using computers for commercial or business data processing were at all affected—meaning forced to undergo training, transfer to other jobs or lost their jobs. Now for the third category, the results from technology, changes in education and skills demanded of our labour force. Generally, these changes are of a gradual nature and can be combated by a combination of increased broad level education and specialized training, but automation and technological change have created new industries, industries which are wholly based on automation. Thousands of new jobs have greatly increased industrial productivity.

It is our view that we need to expand our knowledge of these items which I have noticed. We need to expand our knowledge on present and future manpower requirements of industry. We have discussed that. We need more information and knowledge on developing trends in production technology. Next, we need changes in skill requirements. Knowledge of the extent and effectiveness of private industry's education and training programmes is required, because in many areas of private industry the technological change is discussed and advanced in co-operation with labour. There are areas where it does not and, of course, they become the exception and much attention is drawn to them. Sometimes there are instances of industries employing large numbers of people—I simply point out that this move forward is part of social or economic change. In many instances it is done on a co-operative basis at the moment.

We need more information on training programmes which private industry has; we need more information on what additional education, training and retraining programmes are going to be suitable. And, of course, as I said earlier this evening—we were talking about that total reservoir of human resources, a phrase which may be lofty in one sense—probably it is the humanitarian description of what we are talking about.

In The Department of Labour's programme with respect to research, I would say that we need greatly expanded research conducted by our own department, expanding our own research department, and its staff, outlining research projects, co-ordinating research with that of others working in this field, and are currently attempting to forecast skill requirements for industries to determine employer attitudes toward and responsibility for industrial training and to evaluate existing incentives for industrial training.

With respect to industrial training itself, we are helping to meet our changing skill requirements in these ways:

1. By greatly increasing the capacity of existing apprenticeship training, restructuring existing apprenticeship programmes and setting up new apprenticeship programmes.

I put it in this fashion because on the one hand we have what may be described as the pure theory of the thing. It has to be brought down to the individual on a practical basis, and that would be exemplified and reflected in the case of our own department by what we make available to an individual who needs this type of either basic training or retraining as the case may be.

2. I think we must provide guidance and funds to aid industry in developing in-plant occupational training and retraining programmes.

It is under this heading that the response from the announcement of the department's reorganization and the revamped apprenticeship branch has brought forth a very substantial number of inquiries. By that I mean something in the order of, as I tried to indicate the other day—and this is my own estimate—something in the order of 100 of what I regard as legitimate inquiries from industry saying that they are in the business of manufacturing this, are located at so and so, have so many employees, our equipment is wearing out. On the one hand where, they ask, do they go from here; and on the other hand they are short of help. In other words, putting the kind of practical problem which I think, in an operative sense, we all have in mind when we think of The Department of Labour.

3. We will work in concert with both labour and management outside the crisis atmosphere. I am covering several factors when I put it in those words, because where the crisis atmosphere exists I think that this is something that just has to be set aside until the climate is more favourable to a calm approach to certain subjects.

Mr. S. Lewis: Or compulsory arbitration.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I had not thought of that in this connection.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. Minister is liable to start thinking about it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not know about that. We are talking about the co-operation that is required between labour and management in an effort to find solutions to problems which cannot be resolved entirely by the collective bargaining process. There will have to be variations probably—as against those that we currently accept as normal or as the vogue, as the case may be. Changes in the approach to collective bargaining, and probably the philosophy of it, so that labour and management will recognize the need for this type of solution to the problem.

4. We will co-ordinate research and expenditure with our provincial and federal agencies in this field.

Now, if I might just stop there for a second I will just complete this. With respect to collective bargaining I would point out that I see in the future increased demands being placed on the conciliation branch, on this very subject alone, which should involve, frankly, retraining of some of the members of our conciliation branch.

We have already commenced and are moving in that direction, one member of our staff having been assigned for a period of weeks last year to instruction with respect to computers. I would think that we would require that type of training within our branch, if for no other reason than to be able to discuss intelligently with the two parties the problems that face them.

Some of the parties—meaning labour and management—are able to bring to the bargaining table men from their own ranks, or their own side, who are trained and who are experts in these fields. But I think even there the middle party—the conciliation branch—must be qualified so that it, as a branch, may keep pace with that particular set of negotiations.

We must improve the functions of the conciliation branch by undertaking research to define issues in dispute and to bring collective experience to bear with respect to the matter. I think we must be able to make available unbiased information to both parties in this whole area to assist them in reaching agreement.

Under a separate heading entirely, I have noted this: I think we must give very careful consideration to the protection of employees against potential economic hazards stemming from technological change, or even changes in any employment pattern which may arise.

I have mentioned the conciliation branch with reference to this general subject of research because within our own staff in the department this is one area that we must look at very closely to see that they are abreast of the current position in these matters and able to take their proper role in the conciliation process.

Now, I would like to make some reference to the federal situation and federal liaison with the provincial Department of Labour. You will understand that from the federal point of view it is the federal Department of Labour which is the administrative branch and assumes responsibility for grants under all the educational programmes, whether they should be original education grants or matters which are operated by our Department of Labour, such as programme 4. Now, when we have interprovincial meetings to discuss these matters, sometimes we are talking with a Department of Education official, but most frequently with Department of Labour representatives.

At the moment, Mr. Chairman, there is pretty much a consensus that the areas we are covering are the areas for which a department of labour in the provincial field in Canada should be responsible.

This, of course, restates what I already said. It simply means that the federal Department of Labour is dealing with education in matters purely relating to the work force.

Our liaison with the federal Department of Labour is excellent. I say that quite frankly. It has been a matter of interest to me to see that this relationship not only is established on a proper communicative basis, but that it is a working liaison. I would think that a period of two to three weeks would not go by without a senior official of our department visiting with the federal Department of Labour at Ottawa. In other words, it is on a regular continuing basis, and in many instances on a most personal and confidential basis.

I must say that there is an overlapping—we were not talking about legislation, we were talking about programmes and getting at this subject of automation—there is an overlapping within the federal government, as I have indicated there could be in our provincial field, but there is also an overlapping between the federal jurisdiction and ours. My view again on this, as with dollars, is that there is so much work to be done that we should steer a careful course so that we are not again duplicating what the federal people are doing. This can be worked out with the federal people. They recognize this principle and we are agreed that the areas to which we will apply ourselves should be areas that are not being covered by them. Then there should be a mutual exchange of information.

On certain studies that have already taken place, they have involved The Department of Economics together with The Department of Labour, working in conjunction with the federal groups, to put forth a joint team. At least two, I think it is three, major surveys are area surveys. Quite frankly, they are but the beginning of an approach. There is enough nucleus out of these three surveys at the moment to tell us something already in this early stage. But this was a joint effort by the federal and the provincial government, and I think it is a good thing. Frankly, I say to the House that this co-operation—and I have no reason to think it will not continue, it will in their interests as much as ours—is going to enable us to open up some new fields faster than one might ordinarily have expected.

To get at all of this, the organization of the blueprint, as we call it, involved complements for our own research branch. There is no point in getting complements and just have bodies; you are better to start to get the thing going on a solid basis under a confident director of research. The total staff of the research branch of The Department of Labour, as authorized at the moment, is 23, and I think that this will give us the basis—more than the basis; it will give us the operation to really move. I say to the House, quite frankly, that there is no time or place in this fast-moving world of change for any guesses as to these matters. They cannot even be calculated risks or guesses at all. They must be based on solid information. If they are not, I think we will be largely wasting our own time, and it is against that kind of approach that I lay strong emphasis on this research bureau.

We were able to select a director this last fall. It takes some weeks to get a new branch going, and get into your estimates. We were encouraged, although I had been informed that a good economist would shy away from our area and might not be interested; but experience has proven that that was not the fact. We have a very fine group of men with great qualifications who applied for this position. The man who was selected was Mr. John R. Kinley. I would like to tell the House a little bit about Mr. Kinley; against what I have said this evening and earlier in the debate, I hope you will agree that he has the qualifications and the practical experience to make a constructive contribution in this field.

I made some reference earlier, which I did not pursue, to the question of pure theory. Pure economics, of course, is a very essential thing. Pure economics has to do with industry, the work force or population, or whatever it may be. Pure theory is a basic requirement, of course. But the kind of economics that we need in our department is practical economics—economics that mean something, that are workable, mean something to an individual, to an employer, to a group of employees, to a labour union, to anybody from the public who may seek advice. It is against that position of practical economics, and the desire to supply and be able to supply and be a source of unbiased information, that I have approached this subject.

Mr. Kinley is with us tonight. Many of you will be dealing with Mr. Kinley. He was born in Port Hillford, Nova Scotia. He obtained his primary and secondary school education in that province and graduated from the Nova Scotia normal school with a teacher's diploma in 1940. He joined the air force in 1941, took a number of courses in radar and navigation, and was actively engaged in maintaining radar equipment and teaching air navigation until 1945.

He then returned to Dalhousie University, where he obtained a BA degree in economics and history, and then pursued his post-graduate studies at the University of Toronto, where he received his MA degree in economics.

From 1949 until the present, he has been actively dealing with labour problems, mainly in the research area, but including planning and carrying out of specific assignments; acting as conciliator in labour-management disputes, administering labour legislation and preparing policy and action recommendations for the national conference board and Canadian National Railways.

But hear this. He has served four years as an industrial officer with The Department of Labour at Ottawa, three years as a survey officer with the central Ontario industrial relations institute and seven years as a research specialist and liaison officer with the national conference board in both Montreal and New York. For the past two years, before joining our staff in January of this year, Mr. Kinley was the research economist of the industrial relations research branch of Canadian National Railways in Montreal.

I do not think I will add any more to what I have said. We are very happy with this appointment. With this kind of appointment and with these kind of qualifications, we should set the pattern for the kind of people we want in The Department of Labour if we are going to make the progress which the people of this province not only expect, but are entitled to have.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has outlined the programme that he is carrying out to qualify labour for industry, or to educate labour in the industry branch. I wonder if the hon. Minister is quite well aware that there is a shortage of a skilled farm labour force in the province. I believe on December 9, 1964, he said that there would be a continued decline in the farm labour force of the province of Ontario.

I might say to the hon. Minister that the national employment service, along with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and his officials, made a great effort in 1964. I understand they are now to overcome the shortage in the farm labour force in this province. I wondered if there was any programme carried out by the hon. Minister's department in regard to training some of the labour force along the lines of the agricultural industry in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In one sense this might well be regarded as an agricultural problem or a problem for The Department of Agriculture, but we do not look at it that way. For some time, we have been exploring and looking into the question of shortage of agricultural workers.

I spoke to a convention of, I think it was, the vegetable growers association, in Toronto early this spring or last December at which time I spoke on this subject of farm labour shortage. I pointed out to them the results of our investigations up to that point and I would say this, that the percentage of the population engaged in agriculture will continue a steady decline. Whatever the situation is at the moment, there will be a continued and a greater shortage of agricultural labour if the trend to move from the farm, the rural area, is continued.

This has been researched against the known figures in the United States and the percentage of the work force in the agricultural field there is much smaller than ours and the obvious conclusion is that we are only beginning to see the outside of the problem which the hon. member so properly raised.

The mobility of labour is involved—this vote is really research—and I think the subject the hon. member raised is so important that if the House will forgive me I would like to speak to it for a moment or two.

The mobility of labour factor, how labour becomes mobile as it is in the United States, for instance, is important. Certain people like to be on the move. A couple of months here, six months there, and so on. But they can move within climatic areas in the United States and make the mobility factor of labour an advantage in the supply of seasonal workers. When it is cold in one area, of course, it is not a crop-picking time or a reaping time, so they go to another part of the United States where it is. In addition to that, they were able to use labour, some years ago, of course, from Cuba; but certainly now from Puerto Rico.

When we look at the conditions which exist in our province, and indeed in the whole of Canada due to the climate, this mobility situation is one which we just do not have the opportunity to make as effective.

Our studies have gone into the question of health, housing accommodation, supervision, wages. It has gone into the thing, I would not say in total depth, but in a great deal of depth. At one of the meetings at which I spoke I said that I did not see any objections from our point of view if they opened the doors of our borders and broadened our national immigration policy to enable some of the seasonally mobile workers from the United States to come in where we have seasonal needs.

Then we had a meeting with some of the agricultural federations. It was a Cabinet meeting at which we received them, and a large part of the time at Cabinet that day was spent on the very subject that the hon. member is discussing. Sometimes we never know the power of our words. Maybe all of us should be very careful about these things; but we were talking about extending our horizons and trying to seek our own solutions, and it was following these meetings that a representative from Ontario went to Jamaica and to the Caribbean to see what arrangements he could make for trying to solve the problem that you and I know is so important. I have not talked to him since his return, but this will be followed up.

I do not know that there is anything I could add to this. There is a great awareness of the problem the hon. member mentioned and quite possibly I think one of the things that will help agriculture is a total—I want to be careful how I describe this—a businessman's approach to agriculture. It is applied to many areas of agriculture today, and there is no question that the extension of compensation to agricultural workers is one of those things that will help put it on a solid basis.

It does not make the cost of farming any cheaper, I will tell you that. In relation to the decreasing number of people available, the solution may well be found in improved and new types of machinery. Some of these new types of machinery, such as potato pickers, which will dig the ground and sort the potatoes, tomato pickers which put them into some kind of package arrangement for marketing all in one step—these machines are available.

Of course, I know only too well that farming generally is not profitable in this province. I think a person with a 100-acre farm is probably knocking his head against a wall and is working for wages, but what kind of wages? They are not even good enough wages to work for. I say that quite frankly. It may be that one of the first questions of automation and technological change with respect to farming equipment is already upon us. The immediate problem is how they are going to finance that equipment so they can get into the modern type of operation.

Of course when I approach this field I am getting a little bit beyond The Department of Labour; but they are all related to this basic problem and it is something in which this government is very much interested.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the hon. Minister. Those of us who are engaged in the agriculture industry do know ourselves that the agriculture industry, with what they get for their product, cannot afford to pay any more than $1.50 an hour. Industry can pay $2.62 and higher than that, and that is one of the reasons why there is a shortage in the farm labour force in the province.

But there is a need for a skilled labour force along certain lines in the agriculture industry. I do appreciate the remarks of the hon. Minister, and I do appreciate the efforts put forth by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in an effort to do something in regard to the labour force that is available in the province for 1965. But I must say that the inexperienced labour force that we had in 1964 has meant a tremendous loss to the agriculture industry, and this is a concern. If there is not something done a good many of those who are in the agricultural field along certain lines, in the cash crops or vegetables, are not going to grow them; that is all there is to it. They will go into some other line.

I was just wondering—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is not the real problem there that we cannot wait until we lose our agricultural production and indeed our agricultural land? The time to put the research programme that we are talking about to work in conjunction with The Department of Agriculture is now, to try—and I think again the first thing is to correlate all the available studies on this continent that have been made on it and then let us try to get somewhere with it.

Mr. Spence: I appreciate the remarks of the hon. Minister. He is quite aware of the situation and I appreciate his remarks.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, under this vote, may I suggest several areas of study to the department? One I would suggest is the effects of the location of government and institutional facilities on a municipality. As it is today, most government institutions are centred in the Toronto area; possibly the decentralization of the department—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think this is a little beyond our research item.

Mr. Newman: If it is, then I will suggest it to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall).

May I suggest another, and that is the effects of tariff and custom regulations and the administrative practices between Canada and the U.S.?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, this is federal; we have no control. We do not control the tariffs of this country.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, this may be quite true; it may be federal, and I did not realize the hon. Minister would look upon this in such a light. I thought that he possibly would be interested in seeing the effects the tariff has had on the communities that—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But that would be The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Newman: Then may I suggest to the hon. Minister that he follow up some of the studies that have already been begun in the community of Windsor? We have had the first study that was instituted by the government, and that was the report of the Windsor economic committee of the Ontario economic council on the Windsor community. This was a study that we had requested as a result of the adverse employment conditions in the local community. I know the hon. Minister is aware of the contents of the report, and I would like to point out only two items in the report—one of them has already been suggested, and the other, possibly, the hon. Minister could look into with the hope of implementing it.

The one is an audit of the community manpower resources. Naturally, this might go into the ambit of the federal department rather than the provincial Department of Labour.

Second is the possibility of establishing an industrial relations research centre at the University of Windsor. We are suggesting that because economic conditions back in our community have been adverse in the past. Today, the pendulum seems to have swung the other way, but even though it may have swung, the number of unemployed in the community is still about the same as it was one year ago. The difference is that the influx of people from various parts of the province has meant a greater overall labour force, but still the same number of people are unemployed. When it comes to the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On that point I would like to remind the hon. member that I know about the report to which he makes reference, a study of the difficulties alleged to exist or seem to exist in the Windsor area. But he must be aware of the special newspaper supplement which was distributed in many of the newspapers of this province last weekend, entitled "Windsor." It was about a 24-page supplement saying that everything is all right, we are back in the jobs; we are in business; good local government, good provincial government; good relations everywhere. It was a pretty happy story of existing prosperity.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I do not deny the report; we concurred in the report. But I still would like to make the hon. Minister aware that the numbers of unemployed are still the same. There is a reason why these people are unemployed; possibly this study that has been conducted by the community, or actually by the Greater Windsor industrial commission in distribution in late 1964, does contain some information that would be most valuable, not only to the department here, but also to all hon. members of the House. The last report was conducted by the federal department, and that was a survey of labour market conditions in Windsor, 1964. This is a case study prepared by the economic council of Canada and undertaken by three professors from the University of Windsor—Professors Horne, Gillen and Helling.

This report is probably the one that is the most valuable of the three from the conclusion it draws.

Mr. Chairman, I will not go into any detail concerning it, but I would bring up the seven points, the summary of the major findings of that report. These are very important.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The study of Windsor is already in progress.

Mr. Newman: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The study of Windsor and employment and so on is presently under way.

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister has another study in addition?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, on our own basis.

Mr. Newman: On your own basis. May I ask the hon. Minister how long will it be before he expects a report?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I referred earlier to the fact that some three areas have been studied and researched. Windsor, I think, will be the next one; it is presently underway. We have got to draw conclusions from it in two fashions. Firstly, conclusions specifically directed to the area. We will use information and studies such as the hon. member has mentioned, but then we must draw total provincial conclusions, as well.

Mr. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I would like to put in these seven recommendations because I think they are of value not only to the Windsor area, but to any area in the province that may suffer from adverse employment conditions.

One is a greater effort to persuade students not to drop out of school until they have exhausted their capacity to learn. That is general knowledge.

The second is better use of the Canadian vocational training programme to improve the employability of persons unemployed temporarily or for longer periods.

Third is more concentrated use by both employers and unemployed of the centralized services of the national employment service.

Fourth, improved efforts to alert unemployed persons to job opportunities outside of the community.

The fifth is the need for revision of the tax incentive programme to attract new industries to the area, so that the programme is better designed to meet both the labour conditions, wage structures and available skills.

Sixth, increased use of in-plant programmes to assist employees to prepare for reclassification of jobs.

The last point is the need for local seminars for employers, trade union leaders, national employment service officials, and Canadian vocational training officers to improve the use and effectiveness of the CBT programmes.

Mr. Chairman, the community has been very favourably affected, to date, by the recent auto trade pact. However, a good study could be conducted at this time concerning the effect of the auto trade pact, not necessarily on the community, but on industry in the area because, as the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) mentioned several days ago, there is concern among certain parts manufacturers that the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is presently being researched by The Department of Economics and Development.

Mr. Newman: Thank you for the information, Mr. Chairman.

Some of these parts manufacturers today have sold their businesses. The big three are purchasing some of these smaller suppliers and, as a result, will concentrate their manufacturing endeavours. A lot of other smaller suppliers will find themselves pushed completely out of the picture.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I shall be very glad to look into those matters that the hon. member has mentioned.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I was quite interested in the remarks of the hon. Minister in regard to the research programme. I think that it is needed and will contribute to some solving of the misunderstandings that we may have in regard to several problems.

I noticed in his prepared text in introducing his estimates that he mentioned one specific area of research, and that is having Professor Curtis, of the industrial relations centre of Queen's University, carry out a complete analysis and study of labour grievances and arbitration procedures in Ontario. Would the hon. Minister elaborate somewhat on the terms of reference and the problem that they are going to attempt to clean up with this study? The reason that it is mentioned in the hon. Minister's text is that it might have some particular application to the problem.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Queen's University—I assume the department of political economy of the department of economics—have for many years had a fairly highly developed branch dealing with labour relations. I had been talking with the principal of Queen's, Dr. Corry, and I understood that Professor Curtis, working under Professor Woods, was interested and intended to do some research work in this area at Queen's. Having in mind the fact that there are a number of other subjects and areas that I think require equally immediate attention, it seemed like an opportunity for us to assist them in their research work by this grant of $5,000 to accelerate the studies and see their recommendations with respect to arbitration procedures.

I think their interest lies largely in arbitration procedures and problems, in the complaints of delays and unavailability of named arbitrators and the question of techniques in handling arbitrations. It seemed to me that this was a desirable area for us to assist and we are going to assign this particular project to them.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, it will be a worthy project because this area is one that vexes those that are involved in it. But what strikes me is the pittance of $5,000 to carry out a complete analysis and study of labour grievances and arbitration procedures in Ontario. Now, what in the world—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member has misread the statement. I pointed out that Queen's University was already going to do this research and in some discussion with them they said that $5,000 by way of a grant from us, together with what they are putting into it, would make a worthwhile study. This is their figure; it is not the total figure involved in the study by any means.

Mr. Gisborn: How much will the whole study cost then?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Of course, I do not think I would want to comment, for obvious reasons, but I will certainly be watching to see how quickly they proceed along with the study.

Mr. Gisborn: I do notice that it says to assist, but I would think that the problem is one that would justify the department and the research branch giving them their heads and saying: Now, whatever the cost is going to be, it is there; and do a real job in this field because it is one that deserves the attention of a man with the ability of Professor Curtis and whatever staff he has to make a real particular project out of an investigation of the arbitration and grievance problem.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I expect to be seeing them in a matter of a couple of weeks to discuss the status of their work and I would be glad to keep that in mind, because I cannot disagree with what the hon. member says.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, before we get off on another part of this subject, I wonder if the hon. Minister would answer one part of the question I put before him previously in his estimates in regard to the human rights code. He was going to get the answers and give them to me before we finished. The specific question was: How many prosecutions had been initiated under section 1; and if subsection 2 had in any way interfered with the procedure of prosecutions under section 1?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No prosecutions; six cases have been settled; two conciliations.

Mr. Gisborn: The question I am trying to get answered is: Did subsection 2 of section 1, in any way interfere, has it anything to do with making void a prosecution under section 1?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer is no; it did not interfere.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on the questions relating to the research department. I read with considerable interest the blueprint that the hon. Minister issued some time ago about this departure in his department. I was concerned with the hon. Minister's remarks when he presented his estimates and indicated that we were interjecting an element of crisis into the discussion of this problem and I tried to find the best way in which—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that my comments—the hon. member is speaking of crisis in automation?

Mr. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: My remarks were intended to be directed to the whole world, not to any person in the House nor to any group. As a matter of principle, what I said I really believe in. I am aware that some people in this House might take another approach to the matter. I just wanted to make that clear.

As to the urgency of research, I believe in that too because I think if we are going to have a competent, modern department it must be based and supported by the best research operation we can get.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. Minister's remarks. I realize that there is an aura of crisis interjected on many occasions into the discussion of automation in any society, but in looking at it and trying to place it in its historic perspective in relation to this particular century I tried my best to phrase it myself and found myself unable to do so. I have a great admiration for a particular author in this field, Georges Friedmann, who has written a remarkable trilogy on the whole problem. I assume that the hon. Minister is aware of it. There are some portions of it which are well worth quoting for the record in order to place this problem into its perspective.

In the preface to his first edition, he states the problem as follows:

Since the beginning of the century the human mind has been increasingly conscience-stricken in the face of its own activity and its own creations and with good reason. The destiny of machine civilization borne of the application of science to society everywhere provokes uneasy speculation exacerbated by the material and moral chaos into which humanity has been plunged by two world wars. Philosophers, writers, journalists and poets express and disseminate this uneasiness. Such subjects of discussion as the following are boldly announced on the walls of all our city buildings: What are we to think of mechanization? Is the machine for man or against him?

The work is in three parts and I again quote from the preface of his first edition to show the intense study which he made of this specific problem of our society over the last many years:

This work constitutes the second part of a trilogy to which I have given the general title of The Machine and Humanism. The subject of the first part, The Crisis of Progress was a study of the crisis in the ideologies of progress in western thought from the end of the 19th century to the eve of World War II. It was therefore concerned primarily with the history of ideas and studied the intellectual and moral repercussions of the adventure in mechanization into which humanity has plunged and in which it risks disaster. The second volume attacks the problems of mechanization themselves, restricting itself to the industrial aspect which, in itself, is a vast and varied field. The investigation and analysis are restricted to the workshops of large-scale industry; that is, to the mutual relations between man and the machines of production, leaving to a third volume, the task of studying as a whole the milieu of development of technical civilization, which also includes the technology of transportation, communication and leisure.

In completing his comments in his preface to the American edition, he states that:

The events of recent years, and above all the atomic arms race, have only increased the doubts and fears to which I drew attention in the first edition of this book. It is evident that amongst the ills from which humanity suffers in the 20th century, one of the most serious is the lack of understanding of the structure and effects of the new environment into which men have been plunged during the last century and a half by the rapid development of a technical civilization. I am well aware of the many imperfections in an individual attempt at an overall view of such complex issues and I hope, therefore, that these problems will gain wide attention and will attract teams of young research workers.

I assume it is within that context that the hon. Minister envisages his research plans for The Department of Labour. He spoke, in introducing his estimates, of the labour force standing, as I understand it at the present time in Ontario, at about 2.5 million people, and that unemployment at the moment is about 3.3 per cent, or some 80,000 persons unemployed within the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Somewhat less than that at the moment.

Mr. Renwick: But it is still a substantial number of people who are unemployed in the province. The Deutsch report, as everyone must now know, indicates the total job opportunity requirement for Canada of 1.5 million jobs. I assume that this roughly approximates the projection of the labour force for Ontario which the hon. Minister presented to this House some time ago, which indicates that by, I think, 1971 there will be about three million people in the labour force in Ontario and, if the unemployment rate is approximately the same, we are speaking of a number of unemployed in the neighbourhood of 100,000 people, in addition to the need to create a further 500,000 opportunities for people to be gainfully employed.

The hon. Minister also stated in his introductory remarks that the creation of jobs must proceed at a rate about twice the actual rate which existed between 1956 and 1963. I comment on the perspective of the problem and about the magnitude of the problem, in terms of the hon. Minister's own figures to this House, to make certain that we do not underestimate in any way its complexity and do not reduce it simply to the problem of matching labour force skills to requirements.

I would like to comment somewhat more deeply on the study to which the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville referred; the study of the labour market conditions in Windsor, not for the purpose of speaking specifically about Windsor, but for the purpose of indicating to the House the kind of problems which are involved simply in the area in which the hon. Minister has cast the problem of matching skills to requirements.

The hon. Minister spoke of geographical mobility. In this study, which was a random one of about 1,000 unemployed persons in the Windsor area, the conclusion of the report is that resources spent in improving geographical mobility will be most effectively used if directed to increasing workers' knowledge of job opportunities outside their own communities.

In terms of the problems presented by the skills of the labour force in Ontario, the conclusion of the report is that this supports a general conclusion that the labour market has performed satisfactorily in moving workers within occupational categories into job openings, but has not performed its expected function of movement from excess supply categories into those with excess demand. There seem to be a number of factors inhibiting such movement. The training and education required to move into the more skilled occupations are extensive, and it is questionable whether the traditional programmes for apprenticeship training in some occupations are not unduly restrictive.

The report then makes its conclusion with respect to the Canadian vocational training programme by stating that even if those persons unemployed for six months are considered alone, enrolment is still not impressive. Within this group, only 15 per cent have enrolled in the courses.

The report goes on to state that of those who did enrol and did take the courses, there was a noticeable improvement in their ability to gain employment following completion of their courses.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think that refers to programme 5 of The Department of Education.

Mr. Renwick: It is reiterated, therefore, that although the effectiveness of these courses could be improved, no person unemployed for any but seasonal or cyclical reasons can justifiably argue that the course would not be helpful.

It goes on to state:

We suggest, however, that the results of the survey in this regard placement might be brought to the attention of those in charge of the programme, and that they in turn should attempt to obtain the aid of employers and trade union officials in improving this record.

The other area which the report deals with and draws a conclusion about is the number of older unemployed persons in the group which was studied, and indicates that of the group within which long-run unemployment is most serious, it would have been expected that this group would have had the highest proportion of enrolment in the programme; the advantages of specialized training would help to offset their age disadvantage. In fact, however, the proportion of those persons in any age group who took courses, especially for the unemployed, declines as the age level increases. It goes on:

This, in turn, together with the prevalence of long-run unemployment among older workers, suggests that one of the most effective policies in reducing unemployment would be a programme designed to persuade the older unemployed of the value of these particular courses.

The final conclusion, which I think is of very great importance at this time—and that has been noted, of course, in the newspaper recently—is the relative ineffectiveness of the national employment service. My concern, of course, is that ever since about 1940, when unemployment became, through the amendment to the Constitution providing for unemployment insurance, entirely a federal responsibility the provincial unemployment services were at that time discontinued.

The result of the study in Windsor is quite startling in that of some 832 persons who were looking for jobs and who were asked how they found their jobs:

Two hundred and ninety-eight persons heard of the job opening through friends or close relatives, being 37 per cent; 296 persons applied directly at the plants, for 37 per cent; 160 persons were informed of the job opening by the national employment service, which is a mere 13 per cent; and 78 persons saw an advertisement in the newspaper, accounting for the remaining ten per cent.

The conclusion of the study, which I think deserves to be recorded, is that:

The most efficient method in terms of time, costs and suitability of employee selected for the particular job opening is surely that of a central labour exchange. The knock on any door and the use of personal contacts approaches are haphazard methods of fitting job applicants to existing jobs compared to the method of selecting applicant and openings by a comparison of the qualifications and requirements of each. It is fairly clear, however, that the attitudes of employers are impeding the employment service in carrying out its proper function.

Now, undoubtedly the hon. Minister is well aware of those particular conclusions. But they do illustrate the extreme complexity of providing for the kind of in-plant training in which the hon. Minister is interested, so that a person may not just move from one job with the same skill to another job, but so that the person will be able to have the kind of training which will permit him to transfer his skill into a different occupation.

My understanding is that rather than have a simple regrading of persons performing semi-skilled functions over a period of time, it is going to be essential that this in-plant training programme provide a basic education in an occupational, vocational sense so that a person having that basic training and being employed in one particular task will find that he can transfer his skills into a different field. I think the studies have indicated that a person who has a sound basic training and a basic skill qualification is much more able to transfer that skill, even into a relatively unrelated field and carry on with his continuing employment in our society.

I would also assume that the time has long gone by when it is taken for granted that there is an occupational aptitude that an individual person has with which he must stick for the rest of his life. The purpose that this research branch will serve in guiding the form which in-plant training will take will be to provide occupational guidance for persons in the labour force so that they will be able to transfer their skills into openings into our society successively, not just once in the course of a working lifetime but a number of times during their lives. It would seem to me there is going to have to be almost continual occupational guidance for persons engaged in our particular complex society.

Again, because it accords with the viewpoint which we have here and which I am sure the hon. Minister has, I would quote from the book to which I referred originally, in which Georges Friedmann states:

The organization of transfers in a truly rational economy should be the object of permanent action by public authorities, constantly renewed and perfected according to the changes in occupation and the nation's needs.

I assume that we are not speaking of different things. I am attempting to state simply my reactions to what I believe to be the hon. Minister's programme for this particular branch of his department.

Vote 908 agreed to.

On vote 909:

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I had undertaken to have a debate on compensation at the end of the estimates.

Mr. Bryden: Before we go into compensation, Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question with regard to vote 909?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, I am sorry, yes.

Mr. Bryden: This is quite a small question, but I was wondering what the department does with money that is no doubt accumulated in the fund on account of books never being cashed?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer is at the moment it is held in trust and I presume that at an appropriate time it will go into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Bryden: None of it has been confiscated as yet, as far as you know, or escheated to the Crown, or whatever the term is?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, not to my knowledge.

Vote 909, the amount is $6.5 million, is authorization to pay out against the presentation of the books. The hon. member has raised an interesting point. I would be happy to look into that and I will speak to the hon. member about it.

Mr. Bryden: While the hon. Minister is looking into it, perhaps he might also find out how much money has accumulated which appears will never be claimed.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I will be glad to.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, before we go into workmen's compensation, the hon. Minister might be good enough to just give me a moment and perhaps answer a question.

During the estimates and dealing with pieces of legislation in regard to The Department of Labour, hon. members have often referred to the select committee's report and pointed out what it said and what it did not say. I would like to ask the hon. Minister with regard to the one recommendation, No. 49, which recommended that a select committee be appointed and sit every five years to review and examine the operations of the Act and its administration: I wonder if the hon. Minister has in the past seven years since the last committee reported given any consideration to perhaps having a committee sit again to look into some of the problems that have been dealt with in the past couple of years?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are referring now to labour relations. I remember the recommendation quite well. It is not my present intention to call for that review. As the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald) so well and ably said the other day, there were times even in his career when one may have agreed to something at one time but at a later time, on further reflection, was not prepared to go along with it. I think that applies to all of us.

Now I do not say I am against reviewing The Labour Relations Act, but frankly the last two and a half years we have been engaged in trying to smooth out and go over the legislation which applies. This is currently still being done by me, as the Minister, and my efforts in that respect have not ended.

Vote 909 agreed to.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, before we go to workmen's compensation, may I ask the hon. Minister whether he is in a position to reply to a series of questions that I raised on the second vote on apprenticeship?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I am and I am of two minds whether it is desirable to answer them here in the House. I have an analysis of five pages which I could read in. All of the allegations are not supported. There is an explanation for most of them.

I would say this, though, that you will remember the reference to—I think it was a blue card—Mr. Wolfe himself was the recipient of a blue card and then got his certificate via that method. It appears that it is against this system that he complains.

Mr. MacDonald: On that point, as I understand it, originally it was clearly understood that a blue card was an intermediate stage until you wrote your examinations; now, apparently, some people have had them for a long time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is still basically an intermediate factor.

Mr. MacDonald: Even for five years?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There are situations and allowances that have to be made. I do not think that rigidity factors should be established in this field; I think that some tolerance and understanding must be applied to take care of individual needs; we spend a good deal of time in the Legislature trying to establish individual rights.

But on this point, there was a question of an advertisement. Let me give you an example. Remember the ad which said: "For work in a garage. No mechanic's certificate needed"? The explanation for that is that the man was wanted to work in the parts department, and to wash trucks. And it was a legitimate advertisement. The man was not to work on, I am instructed, the repair of motor vehicles. He was to work in the stock room and/or the wash rack.

There is an explanation. I had intended to send a copy of this to the hon. member, and I would be glad to do it. Frankly, it is in the tenor of the remarks I have just made.

Mr. MacDonald: I assume it is a reply to that lengthy letter that I quoted?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is part of the investigation.

Mr. MacDonald: I will make one brief comment on this. While I was sharply critical of what I think has been a tendency on the part of the government not to enforce its regulations, I am not unmindful of the difficulties of moving into this field. Ever since I raised this last week I have had a fair flow of mail on the issue. I remember speaking to somebody who said they had had considerable difficulty with some make of imported car. They could not get it serviced at most garages they had formerly dealt with, but they found one garage. One day, they happened to be in this garage having their car attended to, when suddenly somebody appeared at the door and they said half of the staff just vanished, almost into the wood. All those who were talking English immediately started to talk another language. I am not going to identify it, but they went into their shell, so to speak. Then, when the inspector disappeared, these people came back.

This kind of situation exists and what worries me, on this and in so many other fields, is that if you have a law, I think it has to be lived up to, generally speaking. There may be the odd exception, but it has to be lived up to, and I still submit to the hon. Minister, without any further argument, that I am persuaded that there is considerable violation of the law in the auto mechanics field—more than can be justified.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I take it you are going to let us deal with workmen's compensation at this point?

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to spend much time in regard to workmen's compensation. But certainly there are some changes that would be desirable in regard to people that are hurt in the plants. I think two of the most vexing problems are the need to upgrade pensions—we have talked about this at some length from some 10, 20, 30 years ago—and the big gap, the big vexing problem that has been raised lately—that the employed person's rate is reduced when he is declared fit for light work by the doctor and the employer will not find work for him. When that happens, the rate he is getting, 75 per cent is the usual, is then cut by 50 per cent. This is the biggest gap. I read a little piece in the paper—I was not able to get to the commission hearing. I understand that the compensation board was before the committee on commissions, and I believe this subject was covered. But I did see a piece in the paper by the present chairman—I believe it is Mr. Legge—that he was giving consideration to this vexing problem of what happens to the injured person when he is reported for light work and there is no light work for him. This is the biggest gap, and I hope there will be a lot of consideration given to this point. I think it is realistic to say that until he goes back to work, he should be maintained at the 75 per cent of his earnings.

There will likely be other hon. members who will raise some criticism of the contents of the Act, and maybe of its administration as well.

But before I sit down, I want to congratulate some of the people in the compensation department with whom I have found it necessary to deal. They have been most courteous and prompt in their answering and looking after the problems to the best of their ability, in keeping with the provisions of the Act. I mention Mr. Farquharson, Mr. McLeod, Mr. Simpson and Mr. Stan Crisp, who I understand is not in the particular claims department now; he may have been promoted. When we criticize the department, it is in good faith; we are trying to do our best to bring the Act up to date and do a better job for the injured workmen. I do feel that credit should be given to a department of this nature, where I have found, and I know that other members of my party have found, that in processing claims and trying to get a little more speed on a claim from the department, we have had the most prompt and courteous attention.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: May I express a word of thanks for the words of commendation from the hon. member? The workmen's compensation board is a very valuable and very important operation, dealing as it does with trust moneys which are not government funds, as such, but for which the board is a trustee. We are very proud of the operation, but we are continually interested in improving its operation wherever possible.

There are two gentlemen sitting at the table here, and I would think hon. members of the House might be interested in seeing them and knowing who they are, if they do not already. The gentleman on my right is Mr. George Poole, the secretary of the compensation board itself, and who is an experienced and well-informed man in connection with these matters. On my left is Mr. Allan MacDonald, who was formerly the comptroller and is now the treasurer responsible for the financial side of the board. These two gentlemen are representative of the type of senior official who may be found at the board.

This would be, I think, an appropriate time for me to make reference to Mr. Eugene Sparrow, who was chairman of the compensation board from 1948 until the end of 1964, some 16 years. That is a fairly long period of time. Mr. Sparrow retired from business to take on the chairmanship of the board and has served with distinction ever since. As a matter of fact, Mr. Sparrow has been known and recognized throughout the continent as an authority with respect to these matters; I think I have already indicated the interest of other jurisdictions in the type of operation that we have in Ontario.

This arises from the fact that where this type of legislation does not exist, the courts are used to bring cases against fellow employees or against employers at considerable cost, delay and frequently without achieving the kind of social result that society requires in this day and age. Accordingly, people from these other areas which do not have this type of legislation are frequent visitors to the board's head office and Mr. Sparrow is constantly in demand in connection with advising these other jurisdictions. It is a matter of some interest that this should exist and I think it is a matter of which we should be proud.

Mr. Sparrow suffered a serious heart attack last fall and after some consideration determined that it was desirable in his own interests to retire from the position to less onerous responsibilities. But I would like on behalf of the government, and indeed this Legislature, to extend and to record a word of appreciation for the very fine contribution that Mr. Sparrow has given to this province.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring up two items under workmen's compensation.

The first is: Back in 1953 the widow's allowance, I think, was raised from $50 to $75. When any individual on pension requires additional assistance, municipalities provide supplementary assistance. When it comes to workmen's compensation, a widow receiving only $75 a month gets no additional assistance whatsoever. Has the compensation board ever considered following the policy of The Department of Public Welfare in giving another $20 supplementary in case of need?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In trying to answer that question I do not want to appear to be picayune about it, but I say this: An award by the board to a claimant, whether it be a widow or an injured workman, is compensation for lost income based on a claim which is compensable under the Act. It has to do with wages. It does not take into consideration and is not determined by welfare grants from any other government, municipality or whatever it may be. I suggest that the withdrawal—I think the hon. member mentioned a municipal award or allowance—of other payments because compensation was being received is a matter that is to be entirely determined by that municipality.

In other words they have said if you are going to get compensation and the amount reaches a certain level, or depending on the number of dependants or children in the family, then there is no eligibility for the certain welfare allowance. I think the determination of the welfare allowance must stand on its own feet as it is outside the board's jurisdiction. It is a matter of interest to that person, I do not think it is the board's matter.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is 1953 since these allowances were raised to $75. That is 12 years ago, Mr. Chairman. The cost of living in the meantime has risen substantially. Is not the workmen's compensation considering an upward revision at this time of the $75, to possibly $100?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think it is within my own period as Minister that the present levels were reached. Frankly, I have not considered increasing that base at this session of the Legislature. Certain other major adjustments were advanced in other areas, but I do not think there is any proposal or amendment with respect to the matter the hon. member mentions.

Mr. Newman: May I suggest to the hon. Minister then for the ensuing year that he consider this, seriously consider increasing the allowance from $75 to some other figure?

The next point I would like to bring up is: Frequently an individual injured during his employment suffers from total disability. He receives an award from the department, and let us assume for the want of a figure it is $75 a month. While he was employed the industry paid for his hospitalization, paid for his medical, paid for other fringe benefits. He is now on a total disability pension. The award, as I mentioned previously, is $75. From that he now must pay his medical, his hospitalization and this leaves him without the $75, because when he was employed the fringe benefits were considered part of his wages.

Now, when it comes to receiving compensation, he must pay for medical services, he must pay for hospitalization, he is no longer being paid on that same basis. It is a real hardship to him to have to take from his meagre $75 the moneys required to pay medical and hospitalization services.

Is the board considering including medical and hospitalization payments to persons on total disability?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer to the question is no, the board is not going to contribute under that name. But under the amendments to the Act, which are presently before this Legislature, the minimum pension for a total disability is increased from $75 to $100 and in determining that increase the fact that fringe benefits to cover the area we are talking about are not covered as such, was taken into account in determining the hospital or fringe benefits to cover the area we are talking about, and are not covered as such, that fact was taken into account in determining the 33.3 per cent increase which was provided.

Mr. Newman: May I tell the hon. Minister, then, that an individual on a pension allowance, receiving $75 a month, generally also received from The Department of Public Welfare, a medical card and a hospital treatment card. There is one policy when it comes to a pension received from one department of government, but now when it comes to an individual who is totally incapacitated, no longer can work, there is no consideration shown him concerning medical and hospitalization. I think that both medical and hospital—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This has been taken into account in the $25 a month increase from $75 to $100.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Minister, surely you do not consider $100 a month sufficient to allow an individual to survive on today's high cost of living.

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, under this vote of the workmen's compensation board, I would like to say a few words and also express my appreciation to the board for the fine co-operation which I have received, coming as I do from a highly industrialized area in which we do have quite a large number of claims.

I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the hon. Minister, that the workmen's compensation board, as has already been mentioned, appeared before the government commission and I would say that a very thorough discussion of the workmen's compensation problems were gone into in that commission. I think that I might well say in the absence of the chairman, that the new board chairman, Mr. Legge, certainly proved to the government commission on that occasion that he is very genuinely interested in the problems that beset the workmen's compensation board. I feel that we can be assured that he will do a very good job in his new position.

One of the problems, of course, that was discussed at some length, and I think the major problem which has already been mentioned by the hon. member for Wentworth East, is that of injured workmen being returned to this light work category of job. The chairman himself admitted that this is one of the major problems with which the board is faced, and it is a problem which they are going to attempt to attack to the very best of their ability. But it does continue to be a very difficult problem to solve because there are many ramifications in regard to this particular item.

One point that I brought up in the government commission, which I would like to reiterate here because it is a problem, is that of multiplicity of forms as far as the workmen's compensation board is concerned. I have run into this problem several times; there are quite a large number of forms which must be made out when a man is making a claim. One of the big difficulties I have found has been the delay of payments to the claimant because, in some cases, the physician is too busy to make out the rather extensive forms that are necessary before the payments are forwarded to the claimant.

This matter, I would point out, was dealt with at the commission meeting. I was assured again by Mr. Legge that the matter was being looked into and that a streamlining of these forms would be carried out. I would certainly request, through you to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that this matter be continued with and that every effort be made to streamline the forms.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, if I understand it correctly, now that it is compulsory to have workmen's compensation for the farm labour force in the province of Ontario, will benefits be the same and the payments the same as any other industry in the province of Ontario to the agriculture industry?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am sorry; the effective date, did you say?

Mr. Spence: No, will the payments and the benefits be the same as in any other industry in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, they will.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, along that line—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: And may I say this, that the flue-cured tobacco growers association have been contacted to enable them to make their views known.

Mr. Nixon: I am delighted to hear that, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, through you, sir, if it is possible that the agriculture industry, like some other industries, be divided into categories when the premium is set with respect to it. Is that possible?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is theoretically possible, but it may be undesirable in a practical way.

Mr. Nixon: That is your considered opinion, is it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, that is the fact.

Mr. Nixon: I would like, then, to say to the hon. Minister that it appears to me, and perhaps in consultation with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, he might be convinced of this, that certain endeavours in agriculture are more risky, physically, not financially, than others. Speaking on behalf of my friends in the Ontario flue-cured tobacco marketing board, they feel that their supporters, and those who contribute to their organization, are carrying on an aspect of the agriculture industry that is somewhat less risky than those who might be working with heavy power machines. I would ask the hon. Minister if his officials might consider the categorizing of the industry; that it might, in fact, not be as bad as he would predict?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not think the hon. member understood my answer to his first question.

Mr. Nixon: That may be.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I said it is theoretically possible to have more than one category in an industry, but may not be practically desirable. Those are the facts. That applies to any situation.

In this case, I am quite aware that picking apples at the top of the ladder takes you into the same category as a man who operates dangerous machinery, as against a person picking a crop from the ground. There are two categories which are available to us with respect to agriculture, and a decision has not yet been made as to the form of approach, whether it will be a single all-inclusive industry at one rate, or whether there would be two rates. I am aware of what you advance; quite frankly, I must say that I am impressed by the argument which you advance. I will certainly have it in mind when this matter comes back to me for a decision.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, in the case of the commutation of a pension, if the final decision is in his hands, or does it rest with the compensation board?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It rest with the board. As a matter of experience, the board has found that it is an undesirable practice, in the broad sense, to commute. The person seeking the commutation, which means to secure a lump sum, frequently, and in the large preponderance of the cases, lives to regret it in later years and to complain about it, and regret that he took that step. However, probably in two categories does the board consider such requests. Firstly, in the category of small pensions, running in the area of $10 or $15 a month or something in that area, which obviously indicates a minor incapacity on the part of the workman.

Secondly, in special circumstances, through the remainder. Those circumstances are investigated in depth and in detail in order that the bona fides of the request, having in mind such vital and pertinent questions as: "What are you going to do with this lump sum?" say of $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000, or something of that order. During my period as Minister there have been a number of the smaller items that have been automatically commuted and two or three, to my knowledge, of the larger ones. There were special circumstances existing—I think in one case there was a large family involved and the mother was ill and they required a house of their own to meet the domestic situation that existed there. I give the hon. member that as a type of situation.

Mr. Nixon: Yes. I do not want to labour this, but at the committee meeting the chairman pointed out to me that the Act does give the board a paternalistic responsibility in commutation. I am interested to hear from the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that it is not often that commutation takes place. It seems to me, however, that in a case of dealing with adults, surely the responsibility should be left to them, that is to the workmen applying, to some extent. After all, if the commutation is made they will have no recourse as far as—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I cannot accept the hon. member's proposition on that point, because the whole fund operates on an investment basis. If everybody was commuted out we would be in great difficulty on the financial side of the fund, and the stability.

It requires investment of the moneys which it has to its credit to earn. The hon. member will understand the capitalization and investment factor of the money there. This is a major side to it. However, on the point of the man's rights, I can see it in some cases, but in general I think it is desirable to have the protective—the workman is being best protected on that payment basis.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the department has ever taken into consideration, in arriving at the amount of money the individual is to be paid as compensation, the matter of fringe benefits, because fringe benefits are practically one-third of an individual's salary in certain types of employment.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Fringe benefits were dealt with.

Mr. Newman: I did not hear the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We dealt with fringe benefits a few moments ago. I explained that fringe benefits as such, and under that name, are not items taken into account.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the income tax department requires the individual to report moneys paid on his behalf for certain fringe benefits, so they are considered as part of his remuneration.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am instructed that the income tax—I am talking now about something about which I have no immediate knowledge—I am instructed that the income tax department only requires the information which the hon. member has mentioned to be declared on an income tax return in the event of a shared contribution involving the Ontario hospital services commission.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there are two matters that I would like to raise with the hon. Minister regarding The Workmen's Compensation Act. They are in the nature of anomalies I would say. They are matters that can be quite important to specific individuals, although fortunately they do not affect a large number of claimants under the Act.

The first relates to the possibility of taking third party action when an automobile accident is involved. I believe it is the normal procedure that a workman driving a truck or a car in the course of his employment who is involved in an accident in which some person not connected in any way with The Workmen's Compensation Act is considered to be at fault, can choose an option of suing that person. The anomaly arises if the other person involved in the accident, who may be entirely at fault, happens to be also an employee under The Workmen's Compensation Act. In that case the first workman cannot opt, as I understand it. I have run into two or three cases recently where he cannot opt to sue that person rather than claim under the Act. Of course, he can sue or take other appropriate action with regard to the damage that might happen to his car, but as far as personal injury is concerned he does not have this option.

What is happening, as far as I can see, is that insurance companies are getting out from under what might very well be significant claims for damages and gaily bucking them off to the workmen's compensation board. I would suggest that the hon. Minister might consider an amendment to apply third party liability in this particular case too.

As a general rule I do not believe in any option to sue where it is a matter of an employee of another employer covered by the compensation Act, but here consideration might be taken to amending the law to make this particular exception.

I do not know if the hon. Minister wants to make any comments before I go on to my other point—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would look forward to a discussion with the hon. member for Woodbine on this point, but for the moment I would simply say that the inability to sue the other party in an accident only exists under these circumstances. Obviously the first qualification is whether the accident occurred when both men were employed and whether the accident involved claims under the compensation board; and second, the inability to sue exists only where both parties come under schedule 1.

If one party comes under schedule 1 and the other under schedule 2, then there is no prohibition against the action being brought; but where both individuals are under schedule 1, it is prohibited and this has to do with avoiding a multiplicity of lawsuits, incurring costs and getting the matter straightened up as quickly as possible.

Mr. Bryden: It may be coincidence, but I have had three cases of this come to my attention in the past few months.

The other point that I want to raise, in a preliminary way, relates to industrial deafness. I believe trade unions have been discussing this with the board recently. I do not know if the board is in a position to indicate what progress had been made in considering the matter.

I realize that this departs from the basic principle of the Act that compensation is payable on the basis of loss of earnings. I think cases of industrial deafness can occur with no loss of earnings at all, but a man—I believe that papermills are particularly bad for this, the noise level is very high in them and men can spend most of their lives in them and come out at retirement age stone deaf, not able to hear anything.

I realize their deafness has not really affected their earning capacity. On the other hand, it is quite a severe disability and it seems to me that this might be a case where an exception to the underlying principle of the Act might be considered.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I can understand that problem and I think I can see where deafness as such, when you consider it, just does not seem to fit into some of the other considerations which normally apply.

Representations have been made to the board on this subject. I think I can say this, that there are opposing viewpoints on the subject, even in the employee groups. Why, I do not know. In any event as a result of these representations, this matter is presently under review.

I might at this point make reference, in answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Oshawa about return to work and light work, and the declaration that a man, as far as the board is concerned, is fit to return to work and when he goes back to the plant they say, No, you are not fit to work. You have a conflict of views and all plants do not have light work to which they can assign the man for a period of two or three weeks pending his complete return to eligibility for heavy duty. This is a very important matter and I think the first thing that I asked the new chairman, Mr. Legge, to take under advisement was the study of this particular situation. Both the hon. member for Wentworth East and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Ewen) are interested in this particular problem, as is the hon. member for Oshawa.

I have had some recent discussions with the hon. member for Oshawa and I hope that we will have a report on this factor in the not-too-distant future.

As to too many forms, I would say that I do not think any of us in business today, or in government, want to see business or the operation of life complicated by too much paper. I would be glad to have a look at the point that the hon. member for Oshawa raised to see what paper work is involved.

However, I would say this as well: These are trust moneys and I would think that we would want at all times to protect the moneys and see that the claims are compensable and therefore under the Act before marking them for payment. But I will speak to the hon. member for Oshawa after I have had a look at that matter.

Mr. Walker: I would just like to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the commission meeting, we did practically get a commitment from Mr. Legge that he was in agreement with the idea I was presenting, and he gave us his assurance that he would deal with it and try to streamline it, if possible.

I was wondering, Mr. Minister, if I might be so bold as to suggest this. One hon. member has already asked me this question—I see Mr. Legge is now here. I wonder if the hon. Minister would like to introduce Mr. Legge to the House?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On the question of paper work, you have succeeded in nailing the chairman down at the committee. Unbeknown to me that had taken place; you now have my commitment as well.

Mr. Walker: That is what I was trying to get, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Having made reference to Mr. Sparrow following his retirement, the question of a chairman for the compensation board was taken into consideration. We looked for a man with certain qualifications that we felt were required in this position. At the time an appointment was being made, we determined upon Mr. Bruce Legge, who is here sitting at the legislative counsel's desk this evening. He took office effective January 1 of this year. Mr. Legge brings to this office some experience at length and in detail with respect to claim work.

He is a barrister and solicitor by profession, but for some years has been the senior pension advocate for the federal government in the armed forces of this country and, accordingly, understands many of the problems and procedures which face people when coming before boards having to do with claims and pensions.

He is applying himself at the moment, of course, to an understanding of detailed operations of the board, and we look forward to a happy and a successful chairmanship under his direction.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I have two short questions to the hon. Minister, the first is one for information.

Would an individual taking retraining under schedule 4, if he gets hurt in industry, be covered by workmen's compensation?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes. There had to be some guide lines established with respect to the training programmes, and the requirement for workmen's compensation is that the apprentice or trainee be on the payroll of an employer to be eligible for compensation. If he were injured during the course of his on-the-job training, if he is on the payroll of the firm, then compensation would be payable. If an injury took place during the course of a lecture or during weeks when classroom training was being enjoyed, then he would not be eligible.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Minister, let us take an actual case—an individual retraining for machine-shop practice. He is being paid by the federal authorities on the basis that they have established, is injured while working at plant X. Would that individual receive compensation?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am instructed that the answer is, no.

Mr. Newman: No. May I then recommend to the hon. Minister that various points brought up by the members here would lead only to a need for some type of study committee to look into the workmen's compensation board, with the eventual idea of either bringing it up to date or modifying it to cover the new problems that have arisen here? This will arise as a result of the automated future in which we are going to live.

I would like to ask one other question of the hon. Minister; that is, does the workmen's compensation board allocate funds to the construction safety association?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes. Not only the construction safety association, but all seven safety associations receive their budget from board funds.

Mr. Newman: I would like to bring this to the hon. Minister's attention and ask for his comments, then this will complete any remarks I have to make.

In the past several days in the city of Windsor, the Ontario provincial conference of bricklayers, masons and plasterers met and one of the resolutions they have passed was that the workmen's compensation board should stop allocating money to the construction safety association, because the association has no enforcement powers. Would the hon. Minister care to comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am amazed that is even raised, I tell you frankly. The Department of Labour has enforcement powers; we have an enforcement branch. The municipal inspectors all have enforcement powers and the construction safety association as a group—all of the safety associations, not just construction safety—have inspectors in the field. Their efforts are directed to education, and if you remember the report from the labour safety council, it had to do with safety education on the job. This is the area that was under study.

In this group, these people work closely; they communicate with each other, and work hand in hand. Where charges are indicated, I know of no occasion where any delay has been involved.

Mr. Newman: And would they themselves lay charges, were they to find some infringement?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think that they must be laid through the enforcement branch. That is one reason why, when certain types of accidents take place, immediate notification to the department is required.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): On that point, there are seven safety associations; but they are all employer associations, are they not?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not know. I suppose in the context which you are using you could call them employer associations. They are incorporated, non-profit organizations and historically have been employer-oriented.

Mr. Troy: As far as the workmen's compensation board is concerned, this money is provided to these associations to carry on this safety work? I do not know just how it could be done, but it seems to me it would be much better if the board had more control, so that there would be some representation as far as labour is concerned. I have heard, not too often, that that is one complaint—that the employee has nothing to say about these associations.

I must say that we have already had compliments for members of the board. The one with whom I have been dealing is the vice-chairman, Mr. Cauley. It happened that he knew me when I was much younger and was a star at—the hon. member for Essex North is not here; he sort of ridicules this—but when I was a star football player a number of years ago and—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Troy: He happened to know me in those days, so that was an entrée into the box office of the vice-chairman. I must say that in most cases I have had before the board, I have had good relations and a fair amount of success. Of course, one cannot blame the one who is injured and is getting compensation for thinking sometimes that he is getting a deal that is not too good. I say again that as far as these associations are concerned, I think it would be better if there was some employee representation somehow—but, of course, that would change the whole concept.

I am very much interested in—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just a minute. We are talking about two or three things all at once; the hon. member is talking about the board and he is talking about a construction safety association—let us deal with them one at a time.

The board itself has a labour member on it as the vice-chairman, Mr. Cauley.

Mr. Troy: On the board, yes.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On the board, and the board directs the whole operation, including the safety association. And over and above that, there is an Ontario labour safety council, which is made up of some seven or nine members. Apart from the chairman, Mr. T. A. Rice, the rest of the membership is equally divided between labour and management. On that important committee is Mr. Douglas Hamilton, the secretary-treasurer of the Ontario federation of labour who is very active with respect to it.

The question that is before us, and I am sure that this is the area about which the hon. member is talking, has to do with the report of the labour safety council about this area of supervision by the board and the relationship between the board and the association. It is that subject, the report of that board, that is before me at the moment and in short order I hope that I will be in a position to announce the policy with respect to the area about which the hon. member is talking and the future of the Ontario labour safety council.

Mr. Troy: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I hope I never lose the benefit of it.

Mr. Troy: I am concerned with just what this amendment will do for cases. I know one in which I have been interested, and others have written me about their problems when they heard I was interested in that one.

Those who lost, say, a limb, in the depression days, in the 'thirties—I just wonder what effect this amendment will have on them. I know one chap in my own riding who worked for a lumber company in the bush in the Soo area early in 1930. He lost a leg and his compensation at the present time is, I think, $12 or $13 or $13.50 a month. How would he benefit?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is really a matter for legislation under the readings of the bill. However, the point is, I would assume from what the hon. member said to me, that this accident took place some considerable time ago. It may have been at a time when the basis of an award was 55 per cent of the salary. It might have been, although I do not think so, when the basis was 66.6 per cent.

The present basis is 75 per cent and under the legislation Bill No. 31, which has had third reading now, on compensation all those 55 per cent people who are pensioners on that basis and all those who are 66.6 per cent, are lifted up and will be 75 per cent. This is an $11 million package.

If the hon. member will give me the file number I will get the details and tell him what increase will be applicable in the case of his friend.

Mr. Troy: Of course, the tragic part about it is that in those depression years, there were very low wages. This is a problem, too, and because of his disability he is unable to take full advantage of this burgeoning economy.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Labour.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday when we reconvene I would like to deal with second readings of the government bills on the order paper and then we will go to the estimates of The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Following The Department of Energy and Resources Management, what comes next?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I announced this last Friday; The Department of Economics and Development.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would indicate whether it is his intention to return to the Budget debate again before Easter.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will check with the whips and find out how many debaters we have. If there are many who want to speak, I will find time for them.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Some are waiting in the wings.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is not the information I have had, but I will be delighted to bring them on.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.55 o'clock p.m.

No. 70

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, April 8, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, April 8, 1965

Report, standing committee on natural resources, wildlife and mining, Mr. Rollins	2055
Loan and Trust Corporations Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2055
Rule Against Perpetuities, bill to modify, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2055
Accumulations Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2055
Trustee Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2055
Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2055
Tabling answers to questions on the order paper, Mr Roberts	2058
Trustee Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2066
Proceedings Against the Crown Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2066
Coroners Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2066
Private Investigators and Security Guards Act, 1965, bill intituled, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2069
Community Centres Act, bill to amend, Mr. Stewart, second reading	2070
Junior Farmer Establishment Act, bill to amend, Mr. Stewart, second reading	2070
Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, 1961-1962, bill to amend, Mr. Haskett, second reading	2070
Brucellosis Act, 1965, bill to amend, Mr. Stewart, second reading	2070
Live Stock Community Sales Act, bill to amend, Mr. Stewart, second reading	2072
Corporations Act, bill to amend, Mr. Yaremko, second reading	2072
Estimates, Department of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Simonett	2072
Recess, 6 o'clock	2088

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, students from the following schools: In the west gallery, Norman Ingram public school, Don Mills; and in the east gallery, J. M. Denyes public school, Milton, and Lincoln county secondary school.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. C. T. Rollins (Hastings East), from the standing committee on natural resources, wildlife and mining, presented the committee's report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. 42, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE LOAN AND TRUST CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, by way of a brief explanation to the House, I might say that a bill has been passed by the Parliament at Ottawa respecting loan and trust corporations. The bill was No. C-123, as I recall, and was passed very recently. Generally, it extended the limits of borrowing by loan and trust companies on mortgages and on debentures and in other manners. This bill now introduced in this House would match or parallel the provisions in the federal Act.

THE RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to modify The Rule against Perpetuities.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have three companion bills which I hope to introduce, and then speak to the four.

THE ACCUMULATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Accumulations Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, The Perpetuities Act and the three associated bills which I have just introduced are brought before this House as the result of the first report of the Ontario law reform commission.

I am sure the hon. members will recall that the then Attorney General (Mr. Cass), at the last session of the Legislature, introduced a bill which established this commission. The chairman, Hon. J. C. McRuer, has been actively engaged in the work of the commission since his appointment. This report of the commission on the law relating to perpetuities and accumulations represents extensive research and deliberations of the members of the commission and its advisers.

I am tabling, with these bills, the report of the commission. Since the matter is quite involved, and I am sure lawyer members of the House will appreciate that statement, I would suggest that a careful study of the report would materially assist in understanding the bills.

In introducing these bills, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that it is not my intention to ask this House to proceed with the passage of the bills at the present session. The principles involved are very important in the disposition of both real and personal properties within our province. I would hope that all persons interested in this area of our law would consider this proposed legislation and the report of the commission in order that their views may be made known to the Ontario law reform commission, prior to the next session of this Legislature. In this way, we may be assured that the important principles involved will be thoroughly considered by all persons who have knowledge of the subject; ultimately, any constructive suggestions may be engrossed in the legislation.

The rule against perpetuities is very briefly stated, thus:

No interest is good unless it must vest, if at all, not later than 21 years after some life in being at the time of the creation of the interest.

The purpose of the rule at the time of its inception many years ago was to ensure that real property would not be rendered completely inalienable by various restrictions upon alienation. Courts of the day considered that it was not in the public interest to completely fetter the title to property for generations to come. The changing needs of our society have indicated that, while there is still a necessity for some rule against perpetuities, there is, at the same time, a need for a modification of the rule so that practical applications may not be thwarted.

The bills which I have introduced are designed to continue the present authority of the rule, namely, the authority of a life in being plus 21 years, since this gives a balance between the desires and intentions of the present generation and the desires of some future generations who might wish to have the free alienation of the property.

The bills, however, will revise and modify the rule so as to simplify the drafting of the instruments which deal with the alienation of property, and to protect, as far as possible, the intentions of the testator.

Many phases and applications of the rule are considered in the commission's report and, in turn, are reflected in the bills which I have introduced. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these brief comments may serve to introduce the subject matter to those persons who may wish to consider the proposals and perhaps submit constructive comments to the Ontario law reform commission. Additional copies of the report may be obtained upon request of the secretary of the commission.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree), of which he has had notice and it is as follows:

Is the hon. Minister satisfied that there were adequate safety precautions at the Canadian national exhibition grounds in the attempt to raise a flag yesterday? And does the hon. Minister feel these precautions were observed?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this accident is under investigation at the moment and I am therefore not in a position to venture the opinions that the hon. member is seeking. I would say, however, that it is my understanding that an inquest is to be held to inquire into the entire circumstances of the matter.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the hon. Minister would permit a supplementary question and it is this: Does he have regulations that cover the safety belts that are worn?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, this is part of the information about which I have asked for details from my own department.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), which is as follows:

Why did the government not call for tenders on the sale of the Sigmund Samuel house? The second part is: What was the net amount obtained by the government after paying all real estate commissions?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the question as I have it here is not quite as the hon. member asked. The question I have is: "Did the government not call for tenders on the sale of the Sigmund Samuel residence?" The answer is "no." And: "What was the net amount obtained by the government after paying all real estate commissions?" The answer is $112,224. In reply to his question as he did word it today, I think the answer is in last week's Hansard quite plainly.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Land and Forests (Mr. Roberts).

Is it the government's intention to proceed with the use of the chemical Bidrin to control Dutch elm disease in light of the fact it is so highly toxic to wildlife and humans?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Essex South, as recently as yesterday a conference and demonstration took place within the precincts of the University of Toronto, just a few hundred yards from this House. At that conference were a large number of skilled and knowledgeable professional tree experts, including two senior professional staff members of The Department of Lands and Forests, who have been closely associated with the studies on the Dutch elm disease.

It is only a year or so since some hon. members opposite were berating the government and my department in particular for not having an immediate cure. Now that this new chemical Bidrin has appeared, the hon. gentleman asking this question has so framed the question that it would pretty well indicate he does not have very much desire for its use.

However, I think the House will be interested in a short description of the position as it is in relation to a very difficult problem. To the extent that the competent personnel of The Department of Lands and Forests have examined this chemical and seen its use demonstrated, I can say that they are very favourably impressed. It is the intention of the department to initiate at once, certain field studies on elms on Crown land, which work will be under very close scrutiny and with such security measures taken as may be desirable. This would mean that experts, by means of the special device known as the applicator, would then inject the chemical into the tree, which would be watched for the prescribed period thereafter to assure that the chemical has been properly absorbed into the tree.

The applicator is really the feature that has brought this along. The actual chemical itself has been known for some years, but the method of handling it and getting it into the tree has been the real problem. This invention of recent months has made it now possible to use a series of metal tubes around the circumference of the tree, about five feet from the ground, and about five inches apart, and to use plastic capsules containing small quantities of the chemical. The perforation takes place against the metal of the series of tubes and the chemical flows into the tree in that manner.

I am told that the elm bark beetle, which is the carrier of this disease, when attacking a tree not previously infested or diseased, will not penetrate the bark sufficiently to infect the tree with the Dutch elm disease before being itself killed, if this chemical is used. On the evidence so far available to our department experts, the hazard to birds is negligible. However, this feature will of course be watched very carefully during the trials.

The important point that I want to stress, from the information given to me, is that the chemical, once properly injected into the tree, is carried into the sap stream throughout the tree and remains there until it becomes ineffective, in about a 30-day period. Moreover, in our climate there is only one month in the year in which this chemical could be used, or would be used, for all practical purposes and that is the month of May. Let me emphasize that the view of this department is that this chemical should be handled only by experts. I further understand that the Shell Oil Company, which I believe has the sole selling rights on this chemical and this mechanical equipment which goes with it, will certainly be taking these precautions as, of course, this department will be taking them.

I would like to point out that there is a limited supply of this chemical available at the present time, sufficient for field trials but not yet in quantities for what might be termed general use.

Mr. Paterson: Might I ask a supplementary question of the hon. Minister? Recently, I was at a meeting concerning Trees Unlimited and some of the gentlemen there were indicating that certain municipalities had been offered the use of this chemical in fighting this disease. I would like to ask, is the hon. Minister's department going to lend assistance in this matter or prohibit the use in any manner, or just leave it to the discretion of the individual municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: As I say, there is a limited quantity available. This, of course, has been cleared under The Pesticides Act with The Department of Health, I understand, and there will be a sort of licensing arrangement with the people who use it. It may be that at the municipal level there may be some licensing in that sense to handle it, but our department is, as I say, making these field tests and we do so with a fair amount of confidence that this is going to be something really worthwhile.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to table a further 14 answers to questions appearing on the order paper, Nos. 36, 54, 55, 70, 71, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 79, 80, 82 and 105.

The hon. Prime Minister tabled answers to questions on the order paper as follows:

36. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) What studies have been done as to the operations of crime laboratories in other jurisdictions? (b) If any such have been done, what improvements have been made to Ontario's crime laboratory as a result of such studies?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) 1954, Indiana state laboratory—study of the breathalyzer. (b) Breathalyzer developed in Indiana state laboratory adopted in Ontario.

(a) 1954, State laboratory, Atlanta—study of the operation of a spectrograph to compare with our own operations. (b) It has been found that our operation is much more superior and was based on the experience of the FBI.

(a) 1954, RCMP laboratory, Ottawa—study of the firearms section. (b) The establishment of our own firearms section was based on this study.

(a) 1956, New York state laboratory, Albany, N.Y.—study of the use of laundry marks for the detection of crime. (b) Laundry marks files were instituted as a result of this study. These files were turned over by the laboratory to the Ontario provincial police, which is now reorganizing this file for use throughout the province.

(a) 1956, FBI laboratory, Washington, D.C.—study of the methods of the identification of soils and infrared analysis, especially as applied to paint. (b) Both of these techniques have been adopted in the provincial laboratory and further studies are being continued in the identification of soil, which should expand this work to give greater detail.

(a) 1958, RCMP laboratory, Regina, Sask.—Review of toxicological methods used by this laboratory and study of organization of that laboratory. (b) This study did not offer anything to the improvement of our methods and our organization.

(a) 1958, FBI laboratory, Washington—General study of organization and methods of the work of this laboratory. (b) The study indicated that our methods and organization coincides with that used in Washington.

(a) 1958, FBI laboratory, Washington—Study of techniques in infrared spectroscopy. (b) The techniques have been introduced in our laboratory and since have become routine.

(a) 1958, Quebec provincial laboratory, Montreal—Study of toxicological methods, organization of the laboratory and the question of criminal vs. civil activities regarding laboratory personnel. (b) Most of the information was found very useful and has been adopted.

(a) 1959, FBI laboratory, Washington—Study of methods used in the toxicology section. (b) A large library was developed from preliminary information obtained on this visit and has since been used here.

(a) 1959, FBI laboratory, Washington—Study and discussion regarding the development of a method of production of tool marks similar to that used in the West Berlin laboratory. (b) Results of this study adopted in our laboratory.

(a) 1959, New York city police laboratory—Additional studies on bomb disposal equipment. (b) Some of this equipment has been adopted for use in our laboratory.

(a) 1960, Quebec provincial laboratory, Montreal—Study of bomb disposal methods. (b) The study indicated that we have developed much more efficient methods, techniques and training in this field in our own laboratory.

(a) 1960, New York city laboratory—Study of bomb disposal technique. (b) No new or better developments have been observed than those used in our laboratory.

(a) 1960, New York medical examiner's office—Discussions of the organization of pathology and toxicology. (b) We have been unable to implement the methods used in New York; however, our toxicological methods have many advantages over those found in New York.

(a) 1962, Home Office laboratory, Nottingham—Study of the techniques of the identification of fibres. (b) We have adopted the results of these studies in part. Full implementation of this technique depends on the purchase of rather expensive equipment and the availability of competent staff.

(a) 1962, Home Office laboratory, Harrogate—Study of the files of infrared data on compounds of interest to toxicology. (b)

As a result of this study, we have extended our files to include these and many other materials and have purchased a complete set of reference data in this general area.

(a) 1962, Home Office laboratory, Preston—Organization of the laboratory. (b) As a result of this study, we have established a proper relationship between the experts and technicians on the laboratory staff.

(a) 1962, Home Office laboratory, Bristol—Exchange of information on gas chromatography. (b) No new information obtained.

(a) 1962, Scotland Yard laboratory, London—Study of the methods of identification of bloodstains. (b) As a result of this study, Mr. H. J. Funk was sent to Scotland Yard laboratory to continue studies in this field (see below).

(a) 1962, Laboratory of the French Sûreté, Paris—Study of the organization of the laboratory and the position of the experts in court, including a demonstration of case material. (b) This study confirmed our working arrangements.

(a) 1962, Paris municipal laboratory—Study of techniques of bomb disposal. (b) The study was useful for improvement of our methods.

(a) 1962, Forensic laboratory, Marseilles—Organization study of laboratory with special emphasis on work in pathology. (b) This study led to improvements in our approach to the organization of our pathology section.

(a) 1962, Forensic laboratory, Geneva, Switzerland—Review of toxicological services. (b) No new techniques were observed in the operation of this laboratory.

(a) 1962, City laboratory, Basle—Further study of the identification of fibres and the technique of the collection of surface fibres. (b) Up to the present, we have been unable to adopt this technique mainly because of lack of appropriate expensive equipment.

(a) 1962, Laboratory of the criminal police department, Federal Ministry of the Interior, Vienna—Study of the organization methods used by this laboratory. (b) It has been found that this is one of the most developed criminal laboratories. It will take a number of years to reach the level obtained in this laboratory. The extensive use of X-ray fluorescent analysis is being introduced in our laboratory during the current year.

(a) 1962, Forensic laboratory, Munich—Study of the organization of the laboratory in the methods of identification of bones and other remains. (b) As a result of this study, we found that our staff is much more advanced in this field.

(a) 1962, State police laboratory, Wiesbaden, Germany—Study of the techniques for determining metal residues in shooting cases. (b) We have been unable as yet to develop this study further in our laboratory.

(a) 1962, US army laboratory, Frankfurt—General review of the organization and operation of this laboratory. (b) This study has shown that we have nothing new to find in the way of techniques.

(a) 1962, Forensic laboratory, Le Hague—Study of techniques of identification of forgeries in paintings and works of art. (b) Obtained data and techniques have been used in a recent case of forgery of works of a Canadian artist.

(a) 1962, medical examiner's laboratory, New York—Study of the polagraphic analysis of drugs. (b) The results of this study have been adopted and developed further in our laboratory.

(a) 1963, San Francisco laboratory—Study of the method of identification of tool marks with a new device called "striagraph." (b) This method appears to us to be impractical in some respects but we are continuing basic research in this area.

(a) 1963, Scotland Yard laboratory, London—Continuation of study for identification through bloodstains. (b) We have adopted a sensitive method for the detection of semen and a micro method for identifying a fraction in bloodstains, and both of these methods are now in use.

(a) 1963, Home Office laboratory, Nottingham—Seeking information on techniques of sectioning wood samples. (b) This method is now in use at our laboratory.

(a) 1963, State laboratory, Baton Rouge, La.—Investigation of advanced techniques of gas chromatographic analysis of drugs. (b) This method has been adopted by us and has improved the analytical work in the toxicology section.

(a) 1963, Los Angeles crime detection laboratory—Investigation of an electromagnetic arrangement for restoring serial numbers. (b) This method is in the process of investigation at our laboratory.

(a) 1963, Dade county public safety department, Miami—Study of bomb disposal techniques. (b) The result of the study has been incorporated in our techniques.

(a) 1963, FBI laboratory, Washington—Investigation of methods in the examination of soils and other crystalline materials. (b) As a result of this study, we have been able to develop techniques for soil examination and are currently surveying this whole problem.

(a) 1963, Scotland Yard laboratory, London—General study in the field of organic chemistry. (b) Nothing was learned that would add to the work already being done in our organic chemistry section of the laboratory.

(a) 1964, FBI laboratory in Washington—Study of internal security methods and continuity of exhibits within the laboratory. (b) The methods applied in Washington are being currently introduced in our laboratory.

(a) 1964, Detroit police laboratory—Study of improved techniques for the restoration of serial numbers. (b) The new techniques used by the Detroit laboratory have been introduced in our work.

(a) 1964, FBI laboratory, Washington—Study of visualization of alterations in documents and techniques of sterilization of glassware, and also of display techniques for public visits to the laboratory. (b) The results of this study have been partly adopted.

(a) 1964, San Francisco laboratory—Survey of personnel, equipment, techniques and population serviced. (b) The resultant material of this survey is now under study in our laboratory.

(a) 1964, Oakland police department laboratory—Review of the organization of this laboratory. (b) The material obtained from this study will be further reviewed as to its usefulness in the organization of our laboratory.

(a) 1964, Santa Clara county police laboratory and Los Angeles police department laboratory—Study of the organization of the laboratory in relation to the population serviced. (b) The results of these studies are now under review.

(a) 1964, Orange county sheriff's office laboratory, Santa Ana, Calif.—Study of organization and techniques employed, and the relationship of total laboratory staff to case load and population. (b) The information obtained from this study provides valuable assistance in laboratory planning.

54. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: What amalgamations, if any, of police forces have taken place in Ontario in the years 1963 and 1964, and what are the names of the municipalities affected?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

1963: None. 1964: None.

55. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: How many new police forces have been created in Ontario in each of the years 1963 and 1964, and in which municipalities have they been created?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

1963: None.

1964: Four—the township of Schreiber in the district of Thunder Bay; the township of Gloucester in the county of Carleton; the township of King in the county of York; the township of Whitchurch in the county of York.

70. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) Have any complaints been received from any registrar of deeds or master of titles in Ontario about the difficulty of staffing registry offices or land titles offices in Ontario? (b) If so, from which registry and land titles offices did they originate? (c) If so, how many of such complaints related to salary levels? (d) Have any steps been taken in 1963 or 1964 to review such salary levels? (e) What changes have been made in such salary levels in each of the years 1963 and 1964?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) Yes.

(b) Registry office of East and West York in Toronto; registry and land titles office in Sault Ste. Marie; registry and land titles office in Kenora; land titles office for the county of York in Toronto; registry and land titles office in Sudbury; registry and land titles office in North Bay.

(c) Four.

(d) Yes—both in 1963 and 1964.

The staff of the land titles branch in Toronto and of the local registry and land titles offices in northern provisional districts are appointed under The Public Service Act, 1961-62, and were subject to the re-classification and salary revision programme conducted by the civil service commission. All salaries and classifications of clerical staff in the above-mentioned offices have been revised upward, effective September 1, 1962, during the years 1963 and 1964.

The salaries of local registry offices and land titles offices in counties are paid out of office fees and are subject to an annual review prior to April 1 each year. Irrespective of this, a general review of classification and salaries in these offices is now under way.

(e) Land titles branch in Toronto and local registry and land titles offices in northern provisional districts—In accordance with the civil service commission classification and salary revisions, the clerical staff of these offices received an average of six to ten per cent increase in salary levels in 1963, effective from September 1, 1962. The executive staff of the land titles branch in Toronto received, in 1964, a salary revision which amounted to approximately five per cent increase in salary levels, effective April 1, 1964. The salary ranges of local masters of titles and registrars of deeds (northern provisional districts) are now under review by the civil service commission.

Local land titles and registry offices in counties—The salaries of local masters of titles and registrars of deeds, including the salaries of staff employed in such offices, were adjusted by annual increments amounting from three to five per cent, effective April 1, 1963, and again on April 1, 1964. All salary ranges of the above-mentioned staff are now under review by The Department of the Attorney General and the civil service commission.

71. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: 1. What is the average length of time required to issue a certificate of title from the date of application until the land is registered in the land titles office: (a) in all land titles offices in Ontario, (b) in the land titles office, Toronto? 2. Have any complaints been received about the length of time so required? 3. What are the reasons for such a length of time? 4. What steps have been taken to remedy this situation?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

1. (a) One to two months, depending on completeness of the submission and complexity of application. (b) One to five months, depending on completeness of the submission and type of application.

2. Yes—in the form of written, telephone and personal inquiries at the land titles office.

3. (i) A marked increase in volume between the years 1963 and 1964, of: registration of documents under The Land Titles Act, 15.8 per cent; "first applications," 14 per cent; request for approval of plans under The Boundaries Act, The Certification of Titles Act and The Land Titles Act, 31 per cent; number of applications under The Certification of Titles Act, 15 per cent; number of certificates issued under The Certification of Titles Act, 53 per cent; number of units contained in municipal applications for "first registration," 1000 per cent.

(ii) Extension of The Land Titles Act to the county of Welland, the city of Welland and the city of Niagara Falls, effective January 1, 1964; to the county of Essex, the city of Windsor and the town of Riverside, effective September 1, 1964.

(iii) Submission of faulty surveys, which require amending to meet with code of standards.

(iv) Failure by some lawyers to file applications together or immediately following the filing of plans for approval.

(v) Change in the nature of first applications. Prior to the years 1963-1964, the majority of applications had been related to land divisions which could be searched fairly quickly, whereas land titles offices are now receiving a greater number of land assemblies often involving as many as 50 or more separate properties. In the case of old city properties where there has been a considerable number of dealings with them, the search of a single application may take as long as four weeks or more to complete.

(vi) Applications generally are becoming more complex in connection with the increasing number of development and re-development programmes.

4. The land titles branch in Toronto: In July, 1964, the Attorney General authorized the employment of additional staff of 20 and paid overtime work for existing staff of this branch in order to liquidate the backlog of applications.

In September, 1964, a detailed audit of the branch was made by the audit and methods and procedures staff of the department. As a result of this audit, the procedures of the branch were streamlined and the Treasury board approved the addition of 21 members to the complement of the branch. The recruitment of this additional staff is now under way and the casual staff, temporarily engaged on the authority of the Attorney General, is either replaced by more competent staff or transferred to the regular staff if qualified and competent.

Land titles offices outside of Metropolitan Toronto: During 1964, the director of the land titles branch, who supervises all land titles offices, ordered the senior members of his staff to visit local land titles offices to advise and train the staff of the local offices in the administration of The Land Titles Act and the establishment of efficient procedures.

The following offices were visited for this purpose: Fort William, Gore Bay, L'Original, Milton, North Bay, Ottawa, Parry Sound, Port Arthur, St. Catharines, St. Thomas, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, Welland, Whitby, Windsor.

During 1964, the director of the land titles branch issued several procedural guides in order to assist local masters, e.g., "The Procedural Guide under The Expropriation Procedures Act."

The director of the land titles branch held, in 1964, one meeting of all local masters of titles at Fort William. The purpose of this meeting was the review of overall policies and local office administration.

73. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: 1. (a) Does the province of Ontario exercise any supervisory jurisdiction over expenditures made by municipal emergency measures organizations in Ontario? (b) If so, how is such supervisory jurisdiction exercised? 2. (a) Has the Attorney General questioned any expenditures of municipal emergency measures organizations during each of the years 1963 and 1964? (b) If so, how many such expenditures and of which organizations were such questions asked? 3. How many original decisions made by municipal emergency measures organizations have been changed as a result of inquiry or suggestion by this department?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

1. (a) Yes. (b) Review and approval of estimates with regard to individual projects under the federal provincial assistance programme; internal audit carried on by the emergency measures branch; post-expenditure audit carried on by the provincial auditor and the federal audit service.

2. (a) Yes. (b) In 1963: 147; in 1964: 130.

The questions were asked of the following municipal emergency measures organizations: Atikokan, Brant county, Bruce county, Carleton county, Dufferin county, Elgin county, Essex county, Fort Frances, Fort William, Frontenac county, Grey county, Halton county, Hamilton, Huron county, Kapuskasing area, Kenora area, Kent, Kirkland Lake area, Lambton county, united counties of Leeds and Grenville, united counties of Lincoln and Haldimand, Middlesex county, Norfolk county, North Bay; united counties of Northumberland and Durham, Ontario county, Peel county, Perth county, Peterborough county, Porcupine area, Port Arthur-Shuniah-Oliver, united counties of Prescott and Russell, Quinte area, Renfrew county, Sault Ste.

Marie area, Simcoe county, united counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, Metropolitan Toronto, Waterloo county, Welland county, Wellington county, Wentworth county, Woodstock, York county.

3. Seventy-seven.

74. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) Will the Attorney General advise the purpose of the emergency measures organization's multi-coloured billboards displayed in Metropolitan Toronto in recent months? (b) Were these billboards approved by his department either as to the amount to be spent or to the text that appears thereon? (c) What was the total cost of these billboards? (d) How many such billboards were used?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) The displaying of billboards forms a part of the national programme with the purpose of maintaining a public awareness of emergency services, its aims and activities.

(b) The expenditure for the billboards was approved within the financial assistance programme by the provincial and federal governments. The design of the billboards was approved by the Metropolitan Toronto emergency measures committee.

(c) $6,000 (The cost of art work only).

(d) 1962: 4; 1963: 8; 1964: 20.

75. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: Was there any metropolitan-wide emergency measures organization exercise in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in 1964? (a) If so, what did it involve? (b) If so, how many persons took part in such exercise? (c) If so, what did they do?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable.

76. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) Were the alarm systems set up by any emergency measures organizations tested in Ontario in 1964? (b) If so, how many such alarm systems were tested? (c) If so, how many such tests indicated that the alarm system was in satisfactory working order? (d) Where such tests indicated that the alarm systems were not in satisfactory working order, what steps have been taken to remedy the defects? (e) Is there any regular inspection of such alarm systems, and how is it organized?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) The alarm systems in all provinces in Canada were set up by the federal Department of National Defence, which is solely responsible for the installation, maintenance, control and use of such systems. This responsibility is not shared with provincial and municipal emergency measures organizations.

(b) (c) (d) and (e) The federal Department of National Defence does not furnish the provincial emergency measures organizations with the information requested in the above questions.

78. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) What has happened to the signs prepared by Metropolitan Toronto emergency measures organization designating evacuation routes? (b) Is it intended that the signs be posted on the highways in or around the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto? (c) What was the total cost of these signs? (d) What has been the total cost paid for storage of these signs to January 20, 1965?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) Voluntary dispersal route signs are located at the Metropolitan Toronto traffic police station No. 5. The police dispersal plan envisages these signs only as part of the dispersal programme. Plans are in being to man these routes, if required, with regular and auxiliary police.

(b) Under present planning, these signs are to be erected, in the event of deterioration in the international situation, on posts already installed.

(c) $4,884.45.

(d) None.

79. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) Does the Attorney General still recommend the construction of shelters for protection either from bombs or blast in the event of a national emergency such as war? (b) If so, what is being done to encourage the building of more shelters, (i) by private citizens, (ii) by government or government agencies? (c) Will any of the new buildings in the Queen's Park complex, which are planned or now under construction, have built into them either bomb shelters or blast shelters? (d) If so, how many persons would be accommodated in such shelters?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) No programme for the construction of shelters for protection either from "bombs or blasts" has ever been developed or encouraged in Canada, including Ontario.

(b) Not applicable.

(c) Not applicable.

(d) Not applicable.

Note: The federal government had initiated and carries out a programme of construction of "fallout shelters" to provide protection against radiation. This programme is strongly recommended and encouraged by the Attorney General.

The Ontario emergency measures organization conducts an extensive public information programme encouraging the building of fallout shelters by private citizens, industry, government and government agencies.

The new buildings in the Queen's Park complex, which are planned and are now under construction, will have built into them appropriate "fallout shelters" as a protection against radiation from radioactive fallout. It has not yet been determined how many persons would be accommodated in shelters provided in this complex.

80. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: How many shelters have been built in Ontario since the emergency measures organization began to function?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

There are no records available as to the number of private fallout shelters already constructed in family homes.

However, a shielding analysis survey of all large buildings in the province is progressing. Thus far, these surveys indicate that communal shelter space now exists which is capable of accommodating 1,855,400 people. Records pertaining to these surveys are being maintained as to the location of the building, its protection factor and space capacity. These records are in the possession of the local municipal authority concerned, and the emergency measures branch of The Department of the Attorney General maintains an up-to-date record of all surveys made in the province.

82. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) How many federal-provincial meetings on emergency measures planning have been held in the year 1964; (b) What were the results of such meetings; (c) What plans are there for similar meetings in 1965?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) 87.

(b) The municipal and federal responsibilities in emergency supply planning were clarified.

The allocation of responsibility of the control of engineering and construction resources was resolved.

Fifty-five (55) provincial government officials took part in a series of meetings designed to train them in emergency planning, methods of organization and techniques of operation.

Responsibility for provision of emergency housing was allocated to the Ontario housing corporation.

Training methods and standards were examined and updated.

Provincial and federal staff members were assigned their duties at the (Ontario) regional emergency government headquarters (REGHQ).

Regulations and procedures in connection with the emergency measures financial assistance programme were reviewed, updated, and approved for publication.

A planning committee was established to study and recommend policy and procedures for the operation of emergency broadcasting system.

A survey was made of existing buildings to determine suitable accommodation for the establishment of seven zone emergency government headquarters (ZEGHQs).

The radiological defence programme was reviewed and updated.

The method of handling and controlling radioactive sources (for training) was determined, as was that for the control, maintenance, and repair of operational radiation detection equipment.

A review was made of the programme which is underway regarding the survey and assessment of publicly owned buildings (federal-provincial-municipal) to determine radiation protection factors in order to establish the number of shelter spaces available in the province.

The emergency welfare services programme was reviewed and updated.

The emergency health services programme was reviewed and updated.

The federal and provincial departments of agriculture studied methods and procedures relating to the safeguarding of livestock and farm produce.

The emergency communications system was reviewed and the system extended.

Engineers and architects were given instruction in advanced shielding analysis.

"Government in an Emergency"—Federal, provincial and municipal was studied to determine common procedures and policy for presentation to the forthcoming Dominion-provincial ministers' conference on emergency measures' matters, which is scheduled for May, 1965.

An exercise was held in No. 2 zone emergency government headquarters to test the effectiveness of plans for operational control by federal and provincial officials; and,

An emergency planning guide for government departments, boards and commissions was developed, published and distributed to all senior officials who would have responsibilities in either a natural or national emergency.

(c) Educating provincial and municipal officials in the techniques and procedures necessary for the development of emergency plans.

Continuing the training of government officials in their responsibilities at region and zone emergency government headquarters.

Exercising the municipal emergency government headquarters within a zone.

Studying a communal fallout shelter programme.

Developing and publishing a "Municipal Guide for Emergency Planning."

Studying all of the aspects of natural emergency to determine methods whereby natural emergencies can be dealt with effectively.

Developing a standard procedure for the operation of the regional emergency government headquarters.

Educating Ontario mayors, reeves and wardens as to their responsibilities in emergency government, and,

To continue the development of the basic emergency services, namely, fire, police, health, welfare, engineering, utilities, radiological defence and rescue.

-
105. Mr. Young: Inquiry of the Ministry: 1. How many grants have been made to municipalities under the emergency measures financial assistance programme with respect to the purchase of additional self-propelled motorized fire pumpers for the training of auxiliary firefighters and for use in the event of an emergency? 2. (a) What was the amount of each tender for each fire pumper, and (b) what were the names of the companies making such tenders? 3. What are the names of the companies awarded the contracts and at what price? 4. What was the amount of the emergency measures grant in each case?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

1. Eighteen.
2. (a) Municipal authorities are responsible for calling tenders in accordance with local tender policy and procedure. (b) Not applicable.

3. Amount of approved tender

Amount of approved tender	Company	Municipality
$ 23,900	King Seagrave	City of Brantford
22,254	King Seagrave	Twp. of Brantford
18,400	American Marsh	Town of Port Elgin
18,000	LaFrance Foamite	City of Belleville
18,261	King Seagrave	Town of Carleton Place
11,655	American Marsh	Twp. of Caledon
16,240	King Seagrave	Twp. of Bromley
28,600	King Seagrave	City of Kitchener
14,664	American Marsh	Village of New Dundee
18,000	Mack	City of Cornwall
18,778	C. E. Hickey & Sons	Town of Chelmsford
18,000	Mack	City of Hamilton
18,000	American Marsh	Twp. of Osnabruck
21,737	King Seagrave	Town of Tecumseh
19,566	King Seagrave	Twp. of Whitney
18,000	American Marsh	Town of Palmerston
15,820	C. E. Hickey & Sons	Town of Almonte
18,000	King Seagrave	Town of Port Hope

Grants

4.	Federal (30%)	Provincial (15%)
City of Brantford	$ 5,400.00	$ 2,700.00
Twp. of Brantford	5,400.00	2,700.00
Town of Port Elgin	5,400.00	2,700.00
City of Belleville	5,400.00	2,700.00
Town of Carleton Place	5,400.00	2,700.00
Twp. of Caledon	3,496.50	1,748.25
Twp. of Bromley	4,872.00	2,436.00
City of Kitchener	5,400.00	2,700.00
Village of New Dundee	4,399.20	2,199.60
City of Cornwall	5,400.00	2,700.00
Town of Chelmsford	5,400.00	2,700.00
City of Hamilton	5,400.00	2,700.00
Twp. of Osnabruck	5,400.00	2,700.00
Town of Tecumseh	5,400.00	2,700.00
Twp. of Whitney	5,400.00	2,700.00
Town of Palmerston	5,400.00	2,700.00
Town of Almonte	4,746.00	2,373.00
Town of Port Hope	5,400.00	2,700.00
	$93,113.70	$46,556.85

Note: The amounts indicated are subject to minor adjustments following the receipt of final claims.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE CROWN ACT, 1962-1963

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Proceedings Against the Crown Act, 1962-1963.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORONERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 72, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, with all of the discussion that we have had in recent weeks in the province about coroners and their functions, I would have hoped that by the time the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) was prepared to bring before this House a bill with some amendments, and some of these are quite substantial, insofar as coroners are concerned, that we would have had a real opportunity to examine the whole problem concerning coroners and their methods of carrying on in the province of Ontario.

There are serious questions that have arisen. The discussions concerning Dr. Shulman are matters of very grave public importance. I do not think anyone can doubt, sir, that perhaps most of the things Dr. Shulman has done are for the great good of the province of Ontario; they have added substantially to the protection of its citizens. They have helped to establish new procedures which will prevent, to some extent, it is hoped, death by accident, and that sort of thing. They have brought a clean light and a new broom to many of our institutions. They have tidied up procedures that in the past have been sloppy; and, by and large, they have brought a brand-new approach to this whole office.

However, it must be obvious to anyone who can read the newspapers that there has been substantial conflict between the approach that the chief coroner—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. What has this to do with the principle of this bill?

Mr. Singer: I think it has a great deal to do with the principle.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I asked the Speaker for his ruling.

Mr. Singer: I will explain to the Speaker, then. I think this has a great deal to do with the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, because if The Coroners Act is going to have substantial amendments, I would have thought, and I am very disappointed, in the fact that there is not a real method of wrestling with the problems that are presented to this office.

Here is a bill of major importance amending The Coroners Act, which has not been amended in a major way in recent years. With all this discussion, I would have thought that the government would have seen fit to bring forward the sort of legislation that would have resolved in the public mind the type of discussion going on.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think my remarks are absolutely in order. With your permission, I will proceed, sir.

Mr. Speaker: You may proceed until I say otherwise.

Mr. Singer: I would have hoped—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the hon. member is not speaking to the principle of the bill. I would remind him, and I think it is very pertinent to this discussion, that when I introduced this bill to amend The Coroners Act on first reading I pointed out that the whole subject had been referred to the law reform commission, and that it was being studied and that these amendments were, in a sense, minor in that they cleared up some areas of doubt as to jurisdiction. I think, surely, it should have satisfied the hon. member that we have what I consider as our continuing research facility in the laws of this province dealing with the matter; that the proper thing to do is to allow that research to be completed. It should not take too long for that to be done and the report to come forward.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), speaking on another matter and referring to a couple of the commissions that are sitting, said that we seem to have a state of suspension arising in the affairs of the province of Ontario because we cannot act in relation to Metro Toronto until the Goldenberg report comes in. We cannot act in relation to financial relations until the Smith report comes in about tax relations, and now it seems the government has discovered a new way of carrying on the state of suspension. Whenever anything comes up that seems to be controversial in the legal sense, we have a brand-new body called the law reform commission, which is duly investigating and so we are not supposed to discuss it.

Mr. Speaker, with great respect to my friend, the hon. Attorney General, and to my friend, the hon. Prime Minister, I think that if we are going to have what I believe to be the first series of serious amendments to The Coroners Act, the government should be prepared at this stage to explain to us some of the reasons behind the apparent conflict that exists—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I want again to rise on a point of order. This is completely out of order. There are many areas of debate in this House where the hon. member can express his opinion on this matter, but on second reading of any bill, I submit, he must stay to the principle of the bill and the principle of the sections of the bill. Certainly this is not one of them.

Mr. Speaker: After looking at the bill, I would like to inform the member that it consists of some 16 sections, each of which carries a principle with it. I think, in all fairness, on second reading, he should stick to the principles involved in these various sections and that there will be plenty of opportunity for him to discuss the other matter which he has embarked upon during the estimates of The Department of the Attorney General.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I will, of course, accept your ruling, but I am disappointed that the government at this time does not see fit to get into this sort of method.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): It is embarrassing.

Mr. Singer: It is very embarrassing. Here is a matter that is current. There is a bill before the House, and I thought that this would have been an opportunity the government would have welcomed. However, as I say, sir, I will accept your ruling and we will not argue any more on that.

Insofar as the various sections are concerned here, I would hope that the hon. Attorney General will explain to us, at some length, the new duties and responsibilities, if there are any in this Act—I am rather inclined to think they are extended to the chief coroner of the province of Ontario—and how, in context, that affects other people who perform similar duties across the province. I think that is within the general principle of the bill.

I notice it is made abundantly clear in this bill what is supposed to happen to the recommendations that come forward. Perhaps, from this bill, or from some of the explanation that can be given to us, the procedure that is used—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Have you read this bill?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I have; indeed I have.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would not think so, but I will take your word for it.

Mr. Singer: —the procedure that is followed or going to be followed in connection with such recommendations. Then there is a section that deals with the intervention in an investigation and the right of the Crown attorney and the hon. Attorney General to order intervention being retained. The supervising coroner is given authority to intervene. What is going to be the role of the local coroner, and to what extent, once the supervising coroner does intervene? I think this is something that should be made abundantly clear.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Sir, trying to live within the four walls of your ruling, I am wondering why it is deemed necessary that the supervising coroner should have all of these additional powers that were not deemed necessary before.

This, I suppose, is as close as I can get to a real examination of the whole performance of the coroner's office and the whole system of conducting coroner's inquests.

As I say, sir, I do not want to run foul of your ruling; perhaps the hon. Attorney General can throw some light on it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker—I think I said this when I introduced the bill on first reading—this bill does not bring about any major changes or amendments to The Coroners Act. As I said then, and repeat here today, our policy was to make use of the excellent service we have in the law reform commission to give us some advice and some study on this field of coroners' inquests.

While I cannot put my hand on it at the moment, because it is in last year's Hansard, which I do not have here today, the hon. member for Downsview was then saying: "Why does the Attorney General not use the research facilities which we could provide" in the law field, from the universities and so on." I think he said it again and again. This is what I am doing; this is what the government is doing. We are using those research facilities.

Earlier today I tabled the first report from the law reform commission, which was set up less than a year ago. It is now undertaking a study in the coroners' field. I think the field is not so large nor so extended that it will take a long time; therefore, in doing what might almost be called housekeeping amendments, this is all we undertook in this bill this year.

The principle of the bill, and I must speak to that, is set out—if the hon. members have the bill before them—in the explanatory notes for the sections, which say all that should need to be said about the intent, the purpose and the principle of this bill.

I do not know just what it is that puzzles the hon. member for Downsview, but I can perhaps answer him in general terms. There are some areas in the Act where there is not a clarification of the jurisdiction or authority of the supervising coroner, and occasions arose where coroners throughout the province were acting, while it was not clear who should give them direction, who should intervene, and who should provide them with advice and—

Mr. Singer: There have been conflicts—misunderstandings.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not stress the conflict, because actually, as I said in this House about a week ago, the conflict, which seems to have been a great field of play for some newspapers, arose out of pure speculation on their part and not from anything said by the Attorney General or, as far as I know, by any member of the government.

However, this bill was designed before there was any such publicity—

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Misinterpretation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart:—such publicity as we have had in the last few days. This bill was designed some weeks ago and was designed simply to smooth the road and to clarify the procedures that coroners should follow throughout the province in carrying out inquests. That is the principle of the bill.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, there is one small point that I would like to draw attention to in dealing with the principle of this bill, which has many principles in view of the various clauses.

I am rather intrigued by the underlying principle involved in the amendment in section 10.

I am wondering out loud, sir, whether this does not acknowledge that the supervising coroner recognized that he lacked necessary powers and that he did not realize that as a result of the inquest which has raised so many question marks in the Guelph reformatory—because it states here in the explanatory note—"the supervising coroner is added as one who is authorized to require the attendance of witnesses at an inquest, in addition to the Crown attorney and counsel for the Attorney General as at present."

In other words, presumably even after Dr. Cotnam's office had been informed that it was felt some key witnesses would not be called for that particular inquest, I judge that he did not have the power to do anything about it, other than to pass word on. Now he does have the power and in the future he will be so warned that he can conceivably move into the picture and make certain that witnesses are called if he does not feel that the authorities at the local scene are going to do so. Am I correct?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This, Mr. Speaker, serves very well to clarify what I have been saying and I appreciate the hon. member referring particularly to section 10.

Here was one situation which we found to be existing: Coroners in various districts of the province, some of them being new to the work or being recent appointments, and some of them being inexperienced, in more than one instance were failing to conduct their inquests to the thorough extent that we felt they should be conducted. They were failing, perhaps, to summon a witness, and after the inquest had been concluded, these things would come to the attention of The Department of the Attorney General and I may say to the House that in several instances I have found myself signing instructions for a further inquest to be conducted.

As I say, the whole tenor of the Act was to get the supervising coroner in there; one experienced, capable official who has a serious responsibility to see that these things are done. As a consequence, we have added him in section 10 to see that he has authority to call the proper number of witnesses if he feels that the proper number have not been summoned. This is in addition to the residual authority which we have left there and which the counsel for the Attorney General and the Crown attorney in the district have.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS AND SECURITY GUARDS ACT, 1965

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 73, The Private Investigators and Security Guards Act, 1965.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in principle I think this is a good bill and I believe that private investigators and security guards should be kept under government regulations and government licensing and should abide by certain government standards.

I hope that I am not going to embarrass my friend, the hon. Attorney General on this, but there was a thought at one time, let me put it this way, that perhaps some control over armament, means of identification, uniforms and so on, of these guards, might well be undertaken in this sort of bill. There are powers to pass regulations here. There is no direct reference to this, but I think there are powers—am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I believe so.

Mr. Singer: I do not see anything specifically in the bill dealing with these particular subjects and I would have thought that they could have formed a valid section of the bill. Is it within the contemplation of the department that this matter is going to be reviewed? I know that there was discussion about it and at one time some people, in any event, thought that this could be a good part of such a bill. I would think that it is a very important thing that this type of control should in fact be exercised.

What I have in mind, Mr. Speaker, is this: I have noticed in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto that we have some investigating agencies which have very fancily painted cars, revolving lights on their roofs, and fancy uniforms. You see them in the movies, you see them among the Texas Rangers, you see men walking around with leather holsters open at the side with revolvers sticking out and wearing belts and tri-cornered hats. They look very impressive, and one begins to wonder just what army they belong to and if they are a part and parcel of our law enforcement authority. I think this sort of thing is bound to cause confusion in the mind of the average citizen who is familiar with these things, if he sees a person proceeding apparently in a business-like way dressed in this manner. The average citizen might tend to think that this person is clothed with some governmental authority, perhaps as a policeman or that sort of thing. I think this has caused some considerable concern in the minds of many people and I would have hoped to see some method of bringing this practice, which I do not think is a proper one, under proper control.

We have police forces and they have certain rights and duties and responsibilities; they are uniformed, they can be armed, and the use of their arms and so on is controlled in definite ways. But I do object very strongly to having private investigative agencies, or protection agencies, or security agencies, giving the appearance at least that they are part of an established law enforcement arm of government, and I would have hoped to have seen this sort of thing brought under some review and control in this Act.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I might say on this particular point would be that there is nothing in this Act as here before the House on the question of defining and describing and limiting the uniform which may be worn by someone who would be licensed under this Act. Possibly that might be worthy of consideration. I would say that if it were found wise and necessary, there would be authority in the regulation section, which is 35, item (j), so that it could be covered in that manner.

I am quite prepared to admit that possibly a better way to regulate is by legislation. I am prepared to admit that general principle, but I think perhaps that one would enter with great temerity on the business of trying to define in an Act the uniforms of certain organizations which have been worn and established and to which people have become accustomed, or to legislate them out of existence or delimit them in legislation. Since this is a new Act insofar as the security guards or the private investigators are concerned, I think we might perhaps try out our regulatory powers that the Act will provide and see how they work. Then if we find they are not sufficient, or if they are too broad, or if they are ill-used in the opinion of the House, the Act could be amended.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Attorney General shares with me the concern I have expressed. I am not particularly concerned about the uniforms—we have Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, lodge brothers and Lions and so on, all with their own uniforms—but when one adds to a military-appearing uniform, a revolver carried in an open holster, this perhaps adds something sinister in its implications.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member has already spoken once in this debate.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, if I could follow up on this, it would seem to me that the point my hon. colleague was stressing is the fact of the sinister influence which a uniform could provide, particularly if you have a firearm carried with it. I think the thing we would be interested in, is whether there is any way by legislation whereby one could ask for the exclusion of firearms from these uniforms.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney General can only speak once in concluding the debate. I was going to throw in a question before he rose.

Mr. Speaker: Sometimes, if I think there is a contribution to the debate, the chair allows a bit of flexibility. In this case I thought there was some contribution to the question-and-answer discussion of the two members, and that is why I was allowing some flexibility.

Mr. Thompson: I asked the hon. Attorney General, but perhaps the hon. Prime Minister would answer it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for York South might be permitted to ask his question and then perhaps I could answer both.

Mr. MacDonald: It is very brief. Will this bill in its broader context now include railway police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would say yes—without looking at the bill, but from my memory of it. I think it has certain regulatory powers over railway police.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, might I just inquire if this bill will go to the committee before final reading?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps this is a bill which should go to the committee on legal and municipal bills.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COMMUNITY CENTRES ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves second reading of Bill No. 78, An Act to amend The Community Centres Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUNIOR FARMER ESTABLISHMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 82, An Act to amend The Junior Farmer Establishment Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT CLAIMS ACT, 1961-1962

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves second reading of Bill No. 86, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BRUCELLOSIS ACT, 1965

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 91, An Act to amend The Brucellosis Act, 1965.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I just have a few comments on Bill No. 91.

The import of this bill, as I understand it, is to remove from the present Act the compulsory aspect of making farmers vaccinate their female calves. This is a vaccination, of course, against brucellosis, Bang's disease, as we have known it for some time. This disease has certainly caused the livestock industry, and in particular the cattle industry, a great deal of money and it has been concerned with it for many years, as has The Department of Agriculture.

The Brucellosis Act was brought in, as I recall, in 1956, and it made the vaccination of female calves mandatory or compulsory. We progressed for some while up to the point that the brucellosis eradication programme was brought in, I believe, in 1958. This programme was instituted by the federal Department of Agriculture and it was designed to confine this disease even further to small areas.

Under this programme, testing is done in a brucellosis control area and once it is established, as I understand it, the percentage of the cattle infected does not exceed one per cent of the total cattle population, and the percentage of herds infected does not exceed five per cent of the total herds. The area is certified for a period of three years.

I believe that the testing has been completed in all of the province. I believe the northern areas were the last parts of the province where testing was done and to my knowledge this was completed a few months ago. So we have the entire province certified for a period of three years.

It seems to me, however, that we no sooner accomplish this, than the hon. Minister of Agriculture brings into being a bill to remove the compulsory aspect from calf-hood vaccination, making it a completely voluntary thing. I have serious doubts about the timing. I do not have serious doubts about the bill being brought in, let us say, two or three years hence, but I do have serious doubts about it being brought in at this particular time and perhaps I would just elaborate on them.

I would have thought that a waiting period would have been desirable—call it waiting period, incubation period, or whatever you like. I think it would have been desirable, to have this waiting period after the certification, to see if any serious outbreaks would occur, and if they did occur, of course, to clean them up, and also to have extra time in which the eradication of the disease would be completed to a greater extent, or very close to it.

The import requirements of several of the states in the US demand that all female cattle for breeding purposes be officially vaccinated. The cattle export business has made a real contribution to the industry in this province, and has certainly enhanced the economic atmosphere of the industry in the province of Ontario, because it has meant more money.

It seems to me that unless something has been cleared with our friends to the south, I am wondering if we will run into problems in exporting cattle to some of these states in the United States if this bill is brought into being, passed and implemented.

It is my understanding that in Sweden the livestock industry has reached the point where it is not mandatory to vaccinate female calves. That country is now in a position to say to the importers of their cattle that it is free from brucellosis to the extent that it does not even have to vaccinate for it. I would think that in the minds of the importers of Swedish cattle, this would certainly enhance Sweden's position because it implies the health standards of animals are very high, and that the importers would subsequently be safe in buying cattle from them, from a health standpoint.

If this is so, I think it is desirable for the cattle industry in the province, and eventually in the whole country. However, I come back to the point that I made near the beginning of my remarks, when I said that I am not sure about the timing. I think that we should have waited perhaps two or three years before we removed the compulsory aspect of the calfhood vaccination.

For instance, if an outbreak were to occur, the health of animals branch in Ottawa of The Department of Agriculture would quarantine the affected area and would subsequently order the cleaning of the buildings and the slaughtering of the affected animals. If this happens, and we hope it will not, with increasing frequency, I think that perhaps in the minds of some of our cattle importers we might be placed in a position where they would doubt our health standards and be inclined to reject our cattle, as opposed to Swedish cattle or cattle from another country where they felt the health standards were perhaps a little higher than here. I hope that would not happen, but I mention it as a possibility. Up until this point, livestock producers in the province of Ontario have been noted for the exceptionally high quality of their livestock, in terms both of quality and health. I would not want to see those two things decline insofar as this bill is concerned.

So as far as our party is concerned, we will vote for this bill, but I reiterate the point, that I would like to see a delay. I would like to ask my hon. friend if he would consider a delay of even a year, until we see what happens so far as our certified brucellosis areas are concerned. We will vote for the bill, but I ask my hon. friend if he would give consideration to that particular aspect of it.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I appreciate the comments that have been made by my hon. friend. As a livestock breeder myself, these are matters that have come to my attention and have been of concern to me; I think they would be of concern to all livestock people in Ontario.

The progress that has been made in the eradication of brucellosis has been, as my hon. friend suggests, remarkable in the three years it has really been in operation. As he says, Ontario has been declared a bucellosis-free area. With this thought in mind, the federal government made the suggestion to us that we should put this on a voluntary, rather than a compulsory, basis.

In the face of this, it might seem peculiar why the suggestion was made; frankly, I asked why it was their proposal. The simple fact is that many livestock farmers are not too particular about the date of vaccination. In many instances, these calves are vaccinated at a period beyond the time when they will clean up to clear them for a blood test that may be required for export; in fact, we have had cases of female stock that has been sold for export, but when it came to blood-test them, they showed doubtful or even positive results, because of the vaccination. Yet you would know there was no trace of brucellosis in that herd whatever. So some cattle have not gone to export sales that might have.

Now, you may well ask: How will making this voluntary correct the situation? We have stipulated in this Act, and in the regulations that will be prescribed in the Act—if you will notice in sections 4, 5 and 6, the age limits that can be prescribed in the regulations—that no veterinarian can vaccinate the animal, other than between the ages of four and ten months, I believe. I am not exactly sure of that, but I think that is the time we said. So this would mean, then, that the animals should clear up before the time of blood test for export purposes.

Along with this, I think my hon. friend will agree that literally thousands of female feeder cattle come into the province from western Canada as feeder calves every year; it has been required that they all be vaccinated and, indeed, all female stock under the Act was required, by law, to be vaccinated.

Actually, this has been quite a waste because inevitably a lot of these calves are never let out of the feed lot; they are sent right to the slaughterhouse. It seems quite an encumbrance on those farmers who are required to vaccinate these cattle and for the government to pay a veterinarian to do it.

I think that while this may be of concern to my hon. friends, and rightly so, we have looked into all these aspects of the matter and it has been thoroughly discussed with the federal health of animals branch of the government of Canada. There is complete unanimity that since Canada has approached the stage of being brucellosis-free, there should be no reason why we should maintain a compulsory aspect toward brucellosis vaccination; that is why the bill is being introduced.

We could, of course, as my hon. friend suggested, delay the implementation of the bill for a year, but, frankly, I do not think that we would be any more certain in a year's time that there would not be an outbreak than we are today. There has not been any outbreak. It has been a remarkably successful campaign, so I would think that we should proceed with this as it is. I feel that the livestock industry is well protected by the clause which is in this new bill.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LIVE STOCK COMMUNITY SALES ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 92, An Act to amend The Live Stock Community Sales Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) moves second reading of Bill No. 93, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 52nd order. House in committee of supply. Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Chairman, The Department of Energy and Resources Management was established by this Legislature one year ago. It brings together those programmes of the government dealing with energy, water and conservation. It administers The Energy Act, The Ontario Energy Board Act, The Conservation Authorities Act and The Parks Assistance Act. Three government commissions and one board—the Ontario northland transportation commission, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, the Ontario water resources commission and the Ontario energy board—are responsible to the Minister of this department. In January, 1965, The Gasoline Handling Act was transferred from the Treasury to this department for administration.

The rapid expansion of Ontario's industry continues to demand increasing amounts of energy. As a result, sales of natural gas in Ontario recorded new peaks last year. Several oil refineries constructed additions to their plants to satisfy demands for refinery products. The propane industry expanded at an unprecedented rate, and new and larger thermal generating stations for the production of electricity were required.

While oil maintains its lead as a supplier of energy for our needs, competition from other fuels is continuing to increase. The market divides itself as follows: oil, 50.3 per cent; coal, 27.4 per cent; natural gas, 14.9 per cent; and electricity, 7.4 per cent.

It is of great importance that Ontario be assured of a secure and abundant energy supply to maintain its economic health.

It is interesting to note that last year, industrial gas customers, who represent about one per cent of the total of 640,000 gas customers, consumed approximately 50 per cent of all the natural gas distributed in the province.

Trans Canada Pipelines, our supplier of western natural gas, installed several new compressor stations in Ontario to help meet the increased demand. Much of our winter gas is brought to Ontario in the summer and stored in our underground natural gas reservoirs in southern and southwestern Ontario. During the past 12 months the storage capacity in Lambton county was increased by approximately 42 billion cubic feet by the Tecumseh Gas Company's storage pools. The designation of an additional gas storage area has been recommended by the Ontario energy board in Humberstone township, in Welland county. This will provide additional storage close to a market in the Niagara peninsula.

The national energy board at Ottawa and the federal power commission in Washington approved the application by the Union Gas Company of Canada to import from the United States 15.5 billion cubic feet of gas per year for 12 years, commencing in 1964. This quantity includes 5.5 billion cubic feet approved under previous import contracts.

The biggest single development in the propane industry was a contract signed between the British American Oil Company and Caland Ore. Under this contract, 20 million gallons of propane per year will be supplied to Caland's pelletizing plant at Atikokan. The propane will be transported from BA's Alberta plants by rail in jumbo tank cars; each will be capable of carrying 27,000 gallons, and storage on site will be in 50,000-gallon storage tanks. This makes Caland Ore the largest user of propane for non-petrochemical use in Canada, and indicates the future possibilities for this type of energy for some of Ontario's industry.

In keeping with the rapid expansion in the use of fuels, this department, through The Energy Act, has played a leading part in assuring Ontario citizens that these fuels are being handled and used in a safe manner. In this regard, we are very pleased to note that accidents with natural gas, which were of concern a few years ago, decreased last year. I would like to compliment the gas distributors and contractors, as well as the gas fitters employed in the industry, on this achievement.

Last year, inspectors of the energy branch inspected the property and plant of every propane distributor and, where necessary, advised the owners of changes required to conform with regulations. Follow-up inspections were made to offer further assistance.

Last year I promised the Legislature that we would start examining and registering fuel-oil fitters in the province. Since that time we have worked closely with various organizations to develop a workable and feasible programme in this regard. I am glad to report that the first examinations were held in the last week of March. We are being assisted in this programme by the oil heating association, the provincial institute of trades, and the industry itself.

In our programme of regulation and inspection respecting these three fuels, we are following identical approaches. We are offering a programme of help and education to both the distributor and the fitters to make them aware of the necessary standards, the regulations to be followed and the codes for installation. Our staff has also been engaged in a continuing programme to develop better standards and improved codes. The whole programme, taken together, has contributed to a high degree of understanding of the safety demands.

The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer), vice-chairman, Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, will report later on the activities of the commission in the past year. However, I would like to say a few words about nuclear power. Ontario has taken the lead in the development of nuclear power in Canada. This was not our choice, but was forced on us by nature; while other provinces still have abundant hydraulic power available, Ontario is fast coming to the end of its hydraulic resources. In order to be able to keep supplying the electric power to our growing industry, we have to turn to other resources. The major one for future development is nuclear energy. Demand for uranium is increasing all over the world and, if the forecasts are right, we expect to see uranium mining in Ontario working with increasing capacity by 1970, if not earlier.

Canada's heavy-water moderated reactor concept is studied with great interest by many nations in the world. Construction at the Douglas Point nuclear power plant is nearly complete, well within schedule and well within cost estimates. At Rolphton, on the Ottawa River, the prototype of Douglas Point is now operating and feeding electric power into the Ontario hydro grid. Valuable experience is gained there to help the men who, in the near future, will operate Douglas Point.

Now we have started on the next phase. In order to meet the demand for energy in the 1970s, it was decided to build a larger nuclear-powered electricity-generating plant. After considerable negotiation, commenced two years ago, the governments of Canada and Ontario, and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, jointly agreed to finance a 1,000-megawatt station. The site selected is in Pickering township, east of Metropolitan Toronto on Lake Ontario, on land owned by Ontario Hydro. On November 25 last year approval in principle was received from the atomic energy control board for construction on this site. I am, therefore, asking approval for $1,800,000 to aid the construction of this plant in 1965. It is planned to have the first 500-megawatt reactor ready to deliver power to the hydro grid by 1970, and a second similar sized one by 1971. It is possible that installation of additional reactors will increase the capacity of the plant to 3,000 megawatt electrical energy by 1975, which would make it the largest nuclear power plant in the world. Ontario Hydro will be responsible for the construction of the plant, while AECL will act as consulting engineers.

We are sure that the two plants, Douglas Point and Pickering, will demonstrate to the world that the Canadian concept of heavy-water reactors is a logical and economical answer to the energy needs of the power-hungry world.

During the year, exploration and drilling operations continued at a normal pace. Last month, in the northerly corner of Dunwich township, Elgin county, there was an oil discovery which appears to be of commercial significance. Another well on the north side of the Thames River in Ekfrid township, Middlesex county, about two miles away, also found oil. The oil in both wells comes from rock of Cambrian age, at a depth of about 3,600 feet. Coming after many months without any significant discoveries, these encouraging Cambrian tests are most gratifying to this department and will serve to maintain the interest of the various companies in exploring these deepest oil- and gas-bearing rock formations in the province.

Since 1857, more than 50,000 wells have been drilled in Ontario in search of oil and gas, of which about 4,000 are now in production. Many of the other 46,000 wells, particularly those drilled prior to World War I, present a serious problem. Many of them were improperly plugged, or not plugged at all. Some of them are a hazard, or a public nuisance, or a source of pollution. As new subdivisions are created, more of these old unplugged wells fall into one or other of the aforementioned categories. It is our duty to require that such old wells be plugged. Where owners of these wells are known, the responsibility for plugging rests with them. But in many cases, the responsible owner of such wells cannot be traced, and the landowner is unaware of the problem that he has inherited. In such cases, and where the landowner is a private individual, he will be assessed only a portion of the cost, and the province will have to pay the balance. This is a problem of some magnitude, and the costs are increasing. This situation will continue for many years until all the undesirable wells are properly abandoned.

All field activities, including the drilling and plugging of all oil and gas wells, are closely supervised by the inspectors of the drilling and production division, in order to ensure conservation of our oil and gas resources, to prevent pollution, to protect the interests of the landowner, and to provide safe working conditions.

Ontario has introduced studies to determine the use of computers in gas and oil exploration activities. After successfully completing a six-month pilot study, the project was initiated for a three-year period in September of 1964. By the summer of this year, the first computer-produced maps will be available to industry. These will be basic geological maps, with the interpretation left to the individual company geologist. The availability of such information will enhance the province's position as an area for active exploration which could lead to the discovery of more oil and gas reserves. This, in turn, could result in an increase in potential gas storage capacity, a matter of great importance to Ontario.

The Ontario energy board had a busy year. Two hundred and fifty three applications for hearings were filed, compared to 87 in the previous year. This reflects mainly the increase in pipeline construction and its resultant hearings and application for authority to expropriate. The board's annual report has been tabled in this House, and every hon. member will have a chance to study it. I would like to mention that the board completed a major rate hearing during this past year, the joint rate application of the Northern Ontario Natural Gas Company and its wholly-owned subsidiary, the Twin City Gas Company. The decision and order in this case is in printed form and sets out in detail how the board has treated the various items in the rate base. Another rate case, that of Lakehead natural gas, is presently before the board and will be concluded later this year. The board's annual report mentions that there was no intervention by any of the municipalities served by these companies. But I want to assure this House that before a hearing commences, and during the hearing, the specialists of the board—that is, the energy returns officer and his staff, and the board engineer—carry out a complete and impartial examination of all the pertinent facts, including the companies' books of accounts.

In the matter of gas storage, three new pools were utilized during the past year, thus bringing to nine the total number in Ontario being used for this purpose; we now have in this province a total working storage capacity of 90 billion cubic feet. As mentioned earlier, during the year the Crowland pool in the Niagara peninsula was designated as a storage area. Injection into this pool will begin this summer.

I am pleased to tell you that the gas storage report prepared by the Ontario energy board, referred to in the last session of the Legislature, was accepted by the government and released last August. This report sets out basic principles which are intended to serve as a guide to both the landowners and the storage operators in negotiating or renegotiating the amount of annual storage payments. The report also deals with oil and gas lease agreements and The Gas and Oil Leases Act.

In order to keep up with the rapid expansion of natural gas as a source of energy, there has been a vast increase in pipeline construction.

The first section of a 142-mile 34-inch transmission line was undertaken and completed from the storage area in Dawn township to the city of London. The second portion will be constructed and in operation by the fall of this year. Eventually, the line will terminate at a point near Oakville.

The board, in order to ensure the highest standards of construction, has a professional engineer, experienced in pipeline construction, who acts as liaison officer between the landowners, the construction company and the company which will operate the line.

May I briefly comment on matters affecting our freshwater supplies and conservation in general.

For the past year, a policy to allow an increase in water reservoir construction has been undertaken. The policy was established to allow conservation authorities to speed construction as quickly as possible. Provincial participation was increased from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. If local authorities request it, the province has agreed to pay the full cost of reservoir construction and to allow a three-year interest-free pay-back period with a further ten-year pay-back period with interest determined at the time the project is approved. Under this policy, announced in April, 1964, two reservoirs are now under construction, nine are in the advanced planning stage, and a further 20 are in preliminary planning.

While the policy was made available to organized conservation authorities, it was extended to include a municipality or a group of municipalities lying outside a conservation authority. There are two areas in Ontario where, after many weeks of successful negotiations locally, projects are now ready to proceed. One is a project for water supply for the town of Trenton and another for the town of Alexandria.

While this policy is scheduled to terminate in December, 1966, water reservoir requirements will be fully assessed next year. A decision will then be made whether or not, and in what form, a further programme might be continued.

I am happy to say that the provincial farm pond policy, announced last April, has been well received by the agricultural producers across Ontario. This allows for the payment of 50 per cent of the pond construction costs when a private landowner indicates the water is to be stored to aid agricultural enterprises. Since November 1, 1963, 496 ponds have been constructed, costing $411,089.24. Of this amount, $159,302.37 has been paid directly to farmers in subsidies. The average subsidy was $317.85. One hundred and eighteen landowners received $500, the maximum amount of the subsidy.

A unique feature of this programme is that while the policy determination and the moneys required are the responsibility of this department, the programme's administration has been undertaken by The Department of Agriculture with its offices and staff throughout all counties and districts in Ontario. We feel that any duplication of staff and administration expenses which might have occurred has been eliminated.

During the year, the province has initiated active participation in the international hydrologic decade, a project of the United Nations educational, scientific and cultural organization—UNESCO—and has participation of 18 countries. It embodies scientific and research programmes designed to increase our knowledge of the freshwater supplies in the world and to encourage an increase in the number of hydrologists for work in the years ahead.

Provincial government agencies, universities, and many of the related research organizations of the federal government are embodied in a Canadian national committee through which the Canadian programme will be designed. Ontario already has 21 projects accepted by the Canadian committee and designated as decade projects. Extra funds are being provided by the province to the Ontario water resources commission, and to other Ontario government departments undertaking projects.

As indicated, this will basically be a ten-year programme. It is anticipated that some projects will be completed short of the ten-year period, while others commencing later in the decade will run beyond the 1975 period.

The province has been, and is continuing to be, concerned with water levels in our lakes and rivers. Of particular concern to the public are the fluctuating levels of the Great Lakes. In 1952, this Legislature established a select committee to study and report on the effect of high water; today, and for some months past, the problem has been the low levels. However, while Ontario has a longer borderline on the Great Lakes than any of the neighbouring states, the concern for lake level control is international in nature.

So that we might be more informed, and have a common understanding of our joint problems, the province invited the province of Quebec and the bordering states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Minnesota and Illinois to Ontario in June, 1964. At this conference, a common area of understanding among the states and provinces was reached, and co-operation offered to the federal governments of Canada and the USA to place the problem before the international joint commission. Those matters which have been referred to it by the government of Canada and the United States are set out as domestic water supply and sanitation; navigation; water for power and industry; flood control; agriculture; fish and wildlife; recreation; and other beneficial public purposes. The commission has already had a preliminary meeting in Toronto in January of this year.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): One meeting, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: One meeting, sir. Formal hearings will be held later this year.

Water quality is a matter of concern to a large section of our population. The Ontario water resources commission continues to play an increasingly active part in helping to decrease the incidence of water pollution. This, of necessity, requires many years to achieve. It requires the understanding and co-operation of our industrial community, as well as our citizens generally who, perhaps thoughtlessly sometimes, bring about pollution of our fresh-water lakes and streams. A more detailed outline of the commission's programme of water supply by pipeline and water pollution control will be given by the vice-chairman of the Ontario water resources commission, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root). May I add that the government is proud to report the progress being made by the Ontario water resources commission with the construction of the 48-inch water supply pipeline from Lake Huron to London. This is the first venture of a large-diameter water pipeline in Ontario. It is the largest and longest pumped-water transmission system in Canada.

Under The Parks Assistance Act, which comes under the jurisdiction of this department, a total of 38 municipalities have received assistance for the acquisition and development of municipal parks and camping grounds. These total 2,600 acres. Grants amounting to $209,800 were approved in the fiscal year 1964 to 24 municipalities. For 1965-66, $300,000 has been requested for this purpose.

Since January of this year, two new conservation authorities were established—the Cataraqui region conservation authority in the Kingston-Brockville area, and the Kettle Creek conservation authority which includes parts of Elgin and Middlesex counties. This brings to 34 the number of authorities established in Ontario since 1946. One on the Black River, which includes parts of the counties of Ontario and Victoria and the districts of Haliburton and Muskoka, is under consideration.

Authorities have been active in the water reservoir construction programme about which I spoke earlier. In addition, those authorities with flood control agreements negotiated with the province and with the federal government in 1961 have been active in large-scale flood control and water conservation programmes. On the Humber River, the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority completed the construction of the Clairville dam at the northwest part of the city. The upper Thames River conservation authority finished the construction of the Mitchell and Stratford dams, and the Wildwood dam near St. Mary's is essentially completed.

Conservation authorities own 73,000 acres of authority forests, areas submarginal for agriculture, which are being returned to productive forest to aid the economy of rural areas and to build additional forest industry for the future. In addition, the authorities own approximately 34,000 acres of conservation lands consisting largely of flood plains, lands subject to erosion. Although the provision of recreational areas is a secondary activity with conservation authorities, more than 5,000 acres of these lands have been found suitable for this purpose, and attendance in these areas has risen from 70,000 in 1957 to nearly 2 million in 1964.

Total money provided for grants in the fiscal year 1964 to all authorities for all conservation projects were $8,310,000. Of this amount, 73 per cent was budgeted for grants for various water conservation projects—large and small dams, channel improvements and flood-plain land purchases. $2,430,000 of this latter expenditure was, or will be, recovered from the federal government under The Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act.

For the 1965-66 fiscal year, the authorities have requested grants totalling $10.5 million, of which 85 per cent has been requested for water conservation. It is anticipated that over $3.25 million of this will be recovered from the federal government.

In 1964, eight conservation surveys were carried out by the staff of the conservation authorities branch, and eight conservation reports were issued for the guidance of authorities in formulating their programmes. This summer, again, eight surveys are planned. In addition to the above reports, the first two studies were issued in a new series, analyzing specific flood and drought situations in the province.

Since the responsibility for conservation authorities came to this department, I am continually impressed with the large numbers of people in Ontario who are involved in the work and promotion of conservation and who give much of their time willingly and free. I am impressed, too, with the wide range of interests of the people associated with conservation work. The many facets of conservation bring together men and women with a wide range of interest and training, all dedicated to create an understanding of our province's total potential for future generations to use and enjoy.

In order to more fully allow this interest to work in concert with the government's programmes and policies, a conservation authorities council was established during the year. This is made up of members of the departmental staff and conservation authority chairmen representing authorities throughout Ontario. At their regular meetings, programmes and problems of mutual interest are discussed. By this method, a more complete understanding is achieved.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my sincere appreciation, not only to the hon. members of this Legislature, with whom I have had a lot of dealings during the past year, but also to the staff of The Department of Energy and Resources Management; members of the Ontario water resources commission and staff; members of the 34 conservation authorities; members of the Ontario northland transportation commission and its employees; and the staff of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission and the Ontario energy board, for their co-operation and support.

On vote 601:

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I have been given the onerous duty of leading off for my party in the debate on the estimates of The Department of Energy and Resources Management, which still may be called an infant department.

I listened with some interest to the hon. Minister, and probably I could say that the song is over, but the melody lingers on. We move, apparently from my study of government action here, only after a crisis reaches us and not before. I agree with him that there are many dedicated people across this province who are doing a very fine task, voluntarily, with conservation authorities. I agree, in view of the somewhat reduced funds, or meagre funds, that are put into the water resources commission for research and other projects, that they too are doing a very good job.

But I realize, Mr. Chairman, the responsibility has been placed on me today, and while my research has not been as complete as I would like to have it, nevertheless I think I can present to this House some pertinent observations on certain problems facing the agencies for which this hon. Minister reports. The hon. Minister reports for the energy board, Hydro, the Ontario water resources commission, and the Ontario Northland Railway. Not all resources, renewable or otherwise, come under this department, but probably that is all to the good.

My comments on Hydro shall be relatively brief. The hon. member for Muskoka, who acts as the vice-chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, reports on that agency to the House and no doubt the hon. members will have an opportunity to question him on Hydro policies. Of course, as an entity apart from the Legislature, we have little control over Hydro, even though it is a creature of the Legislature, and since the bonds of the commission are guaranteed by the province of Ontario, we as hon. members of the Legislature are definitely involved in this operation.

But I find that both Hydro and the Ontario municipal electric association are very jealous of their autonomy, and it seems to me there should be more liaison, more communication, between Hydro and the Legislature and that Hydro should occasionally descend from its ivory tower. I can remember full well when I sat on a select committee on expropriation procedures and Hydro officials appeared before the committee to answer complaints of the high-handed methods which were used by Hydro in its expropriation procedures. Hydro's watchword seemed to be, "Well, the line must go through." I have been pleased to hear from my very good friend, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) that apparently these attitudes are changed, which is also all to the good.

Hydro rates, naturally, are of very serious concern to everybody in this province—industry, commerce and the residents of our communities—and the formula to me is a very complicated one. It is an engineering one, which, to a layman like me, is quite complex. I remember when the former Minister of Energy and Resources Management, who doubled in brass, I think, for other departments, spoke several hours in this House and gave us all the criteria of how rates were established, but even now, as the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) said last year in his presentation, I still do not understand the rural rate. I was talking to a farmer in my riding last weekend. He came to see me about other matters but I was finding out just what his living expenses were, among them hydro. He puts $55 to $57 every three months on a farm, which is about $18 a month, and I do not think he had all the amenities of life either.

However, there are hon. members in my party and in the Opposition who are much more conversant with hydro and gas and energy, so I will pass over those.

The hon. Minister mentioned the annual report of the energy board. I have not had a chance to look at it as I just received it during his speech, but I am glad to note that the hon. Minister referred to various sources of energy in this province and that his department is seeking, seriously and assiduously, now sources of power.

As you very well know, in this province we have been favoured by nature in having great sources of hydro-electric power. I think now, though, that we have probably reached the end—to some extent, certainly—unless we go north nearly to Hudson Bay and the far reaches of this province. I am sure it would be a very expensive proposition to construct plants there and to transport power the long distance down to southern Ontario. So we have to have other sources of power, and the other sources that Hydro uses at the present time are thermal. As the hon. Minister mentioned, it is turning nuclear energy into hydro at the plant at Rolphoton and it also has coal-burning stations.

I agree with him that we have a wonderful opportunity in this province in the development of power from atomic energy. I recall, too, the statement made in this House in 1963 by the member who then represented Riverdale, when he offered a challenge, not only to the Legislature but also to the people of Ontario, in the development of that great resource that we have in Ontario. We are rich producers of uranium, which is the source of atomic power. At that time he said, and the present Minister repeated it today, that the CANDU plant at Point Douglas, as he called it then—I do not know if it is the same name now—would be in operation this year. It will be—I think the word is "critical"—this year, and I hope it CANDU—that is a pun.

But the hon. Minister also referred to the new plant that will be in operation near Pickering on Lake Ontario in 1970. As I think of this new plant, I think of the last election when Minister after Minister came up to the little town of Mattawa and they were quite concerned about having the plant on the Ottawa River near that town, and told the residents there that their requests would be considered—and, of course, they had requests from all over the province. After the election was over, I brought a delegation down to see the general chairman of Hydro, Mr. Ross Strike, and he said that under no consideration would there be any such thing as an atomic plant at Mattawa, or any place so far removed not only from the industrial complex of this province, but also from a source of water as the Ottawa River. As you know, an atomic plant takes a tremendous amount of water and that is why one is on Lake Huron and the other on Lake Ontario.

At that time the then member for Riverdale said we should be spending $100 million a year on atomic power plants. I believe my memory serves me right when I say that I think it is going to cost six or seven mills for that plant. Then there will be another reduction in cost because of the new plant at Pickering, and so on with succeeding plants. As you learn from experience, so you build a plant and then you learn from it just how you can improve. Then, no doubt, there will be great improvements in technology in the next five years, so that possibly in a very short time, in the foreseeable future, we will be able to produce energy for our power system in Ontario by atomic power, even cheaper than by coal. Therefore, I am glad to note that the hon. Minister has emphasized the use of atomic power in this province, because we have an abundance of uranium and certainly if these plants are successful it will also mean that we can sell prototypes, or the knowledge that we have, to other countries and also supply these countries with our types of equipment. I urge, again, just as the former leader of my party urged the government years ago, to get seriously into the construction of atomic energy plants.

I want to touch briefly, before I go into the main body of my address, on the Ontario Northland Railway, which also reports to the hon. Minister. Recently in this House we had estimates presented for the Ontario Northland of somewhere in the amount of $800,000. The bulk of that, I understand, was to pay a deficit on the line to Moosonee.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that unless some major strike can be made in that area and unless there is an abundant source of wealth generated near the Moosonee line, that line of railway be torn up and a road extended from Fraserdale to Moosonee—I repeat, unless something is developed that can produce a profit or produce business for the railway. I believe it is about 110 miles from Fraserdale to Moosonee. I think it would be much cheaper to build a road, or to use the railway roadbed, and it would be cheaper transportation, too, probably. If the line is losing money like that then I think some consideration should be given.

In addition, the railway is going to have to come to this government and ask for money in the millions to rebuild the line. Along much of that line, traffic has to go at about 30 miles an hour owing to reconstruction, new steel, and so on, so that this will have to be considered very seriously.

There is another thing, too. With the opening already of the Adams mine, with the assurance that there will be a tremendous development in the Porcupine area by the Texas Gulf interests, with the development in the Timagami area—the new Dofasco development there which will be in production in a couple of years—with the possibility also of other sources of revenue and other sources of business on a large scale opening up on the ONR, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Ontario Northland, if not at the moment, will very soon be a big business. Consequently, I suggest that the office of the chairman of the commission of the ONR should be a full-time office or a full-time job, and that that position should have a salary commensurate with that of the chairman of the ONR. Unfortunately, the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston), who is now the chairman of the ONR, is not here today. I do not know what his idea is, but it seems to me the railway is becoming a big business.

The chairman is the controller and—unfortunately, too, well I know—the general manager of the railroad. He is a very estimable gentleman, but he is a communications man with a background mostly in communications. While communications are important in the operation of a railroad, they are not the prime asset. I think anybody who is not at all prejudiced will tell you that the ONR operated at its best when Mr. Arthur Cavanagh was the general manager. He was a railroader. He had been a superintendent with the CNR and after he left the ONR he became superintendent of certain railroads in the development areas in the province of Quebec.

There are two things, then, that I point out about the ONR. I think that the chairman of the commission should be on full time with commensurate salary naturally, and while I know the general manager, I think it would be much better to have on that line a senior official who knows the operation of a railroad.

I am concerned now, Mr. Chairman, with one of our very basic resources, so vital to the life of man and beast, and that is water. I think there is a song, “Pure Water” or “Sweet Water.”

An hon. member: “Cool Water.”

Mr. Troy: “Cool, Clear Water.”

While federal and provincial and state jurisdictions are hesitant—or have been hesitant; there seems to be a little more movement on now—in their steps to move as far as our water supply is concerned, there are still some bright minds who have bright visions over the unique reservoir, that body of water known as the Great Lakes. The early missionaries who came to this country called the Great Lakes “Les Mers des Eaux Douces”—“The Seas of Sweet Water.” I am sure if the missionaries and explorers were to retrace their steps today and go over that magnificent gift of God to North America, they would call it “Les Mers des Eaux Corruptus”—“The Seas of Polluted Water,” no longer sweet water.

On these lakes rode the explorers, Brûlé and Champlain, Nicolet and LaSalle, and, incidentally, all of them passed by the site of the city in which I live. They passed up the Ottawa, the Mattawa, and then via a succession of lakes, portages, Lake Nipissing, down the French River, on to Georgian Bay, into the great reaches beyond. I do not want to make this a little history lesson, but as you know they sought beyond the sea, that last sea that would lead them to the riches of the Orient.

Now today, 350 years later, we in this province are on another quest. It is less daring, but more realistic; less dramatic, but even more ambitious than the quest of the early explorers. In a sentence, we seek human control over the waters of that great inland basin, fed mostly by waters from this province. Too long have we taken our natural resources for granted, too long we have fiddled away just like Nero, and too long we have been quiescent and submissive to the vagaries of nature, which is the source, of course, and the provider of these waters. For about five years now, and certainly quite seriously this last year, the levels of the lakes, with the possible exception of Lake Superior, have dropped to their lowest levels in a century.

The effect on our neighbours to the south has been tremendous in many ways. Navigation has suffered from reduced cargoes—a drop of one inch, it is said, in the lake level costs our lake carriers from 60 to 100 tons per trip. You can imagine the monetary loss that is aggregated in a season's operation. Many industries, of course, depend on water transportation to keep competitive, such as the chemical industry, the cement industries, the fuel oil industry and those that fabricate iron. These are just a few.

Our own power plants have been sorely affected. It is said that in the last year, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission lost a considerable number of hours compared to the average year. The figure is said to be 4.5 million megawatts. To replace this loss of power it had to use thermal power at a cost, I am informed, of about $16 million.

Our tourist operators and our cottagers along the lakes were sorely afflicted. Launching ramps in many areas were absolutely useless and the beaches on our lakes looked like Minas Basin when the tide is out. For those who do not know, I will inform you that Minas Basin is at the head of the Bay of Fundy.

Who can truly estimate the loss of the habitat of our wildlife? The marshes for our fur-bearing animals, the mink and the muskrat; the spawning areas for our fish; the fens for our game birds—all these have suffered. So have potable water supplied to our homes and our factories, facilities in the harbours that dot our lakeshores and owners of riparian land—the list goes on and on.

The 1964 cost of the damage caused by this vagary of nature runs, it is said, between $100 million and $200 million. I have touched only so far on water supply. I shall leave until later the other and maybe even more serious problem that affects not only the Great Lakes but the myriad of lakes and streams that dot our province.

What is the answer? If the water trough becomes dry, what do you do? You just pump some water into it and fill up the trough. Then the obvious solution is to replenish the lakes, but where are we going to get the water? Mr. Thomas Kierans and his associates, and those of his disciples, answer: "Reverse the flow of the rivers that flow northward to Hudson Bay and James Bay." Those who believe in a divinity that shapes our ends say, "Well, let us pray for rain." And the non-believers, well, they kismet.

But if the prayer of the federal Minister of Natural Resources and Northern Affairs, and the prayers of others were answered bountifully as we put our artificial methods into operation, then what? An almost equal evil—floods. We saw what happened in earlier years, those of us who used to visit the Niagara area in the days before the war, when we used to go down there in the summer to the militia camps. We have seen what happened in the 1950s as floods and erosion cut into the cliffs and the beaches. The monetary loss was heavy, running into many millions.

So, Mr. Chairman, we are on the horns of a dilemma. But there is another answer or solution to our impasse: Qualified engineers say it is technically feasible to regulate the flow of the lakes just as we have regulated the flow of our rivers for centuries. Lake Superior and Lake Ontario are already controlled to an extent, but if new supplies were added we would be a prey to the whims of nature because we have no control over precipitation, over the fall of snow or rain. I believe the hon. member for Grey North, when conditions were very serious in his area last year, called on the rainmaker to bring down the rain to feed the parched—

Mr. Sargent: I had to call on somebody!

Mr. Troy: At best, controls would reduce the extremes in the rise and fall of waters. The army corps of engineers, that very fine organization of the US forces, reports that its studies have revealed that the corps could reduce the range of fluctuation of Lakes Huron and Michigan to 4.2 feet, and to 3.2 feet in Lake Erie. I am informed that the corps, for the last 12 years, has been studying this problem of control to ascertain if the project would be feasibly economical, but the pessimists, who outnumber the optimists, say no.

The visionaries—and thank goodness we have some in our land, too—have other ideas. Most spectacular and radical is the gigantic plan of Thomas W. Kierans, the Sudbury engineer who was no doubt one of those whom Tennyson envisaged in that poem of his, “Locksley Hall.” Mr. Kierans, who, I understand, will address the hon. members of this Legislature on May 5—I do not know if the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has announced that, but it was announced on the air—

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Three weeks ago!

Mr. Troy: On May 5. Was it announced definitely here? I know he was coming, but did the hon. Prime Minister announce the date? It was reported last Friday, I think.

For the past six years, Mr. Kierans and his brother Kevin, a colonel in the Canadian army, have developed and promoted the grand replenishment and northern development project.

Last December, in the city of North Bay, Mr. Kierans outlined his plan to an audience drawn from wide areas of Ontario; included in its number was Mr. Albert J. Meserow, Chicago lawyer and past chairman of the Great Lakes commission. Even the most sceptical were impressed by Mr. Kierans' presentation, and I am certain he will impress even the most sceptical in this House. As Mr. Kierans and others have pointed out, both in and out of this assembly, the increase in populations in subsequent decades, if not in the immediate future, will accentuate the demands for more and more water from the Great Lakes. The cost, it has been said, is estimated at $2 billion; nevertheless, that is not too large a sum for a great country like ours.

Historically, the Great Lakes were the artery through which the explorers and the pioneers forged their way into the west. Today, the bulk of Canada's population and her industry, as well as half the industry of the United States, is served by the Great Lakes system. All these increases in the years ahead increase the need for water. From the rivers that flow into James Bay we can get an inexhaustible supply of fresh potable water to replenish the Great Lakes. Some of the details are—ten years to build a water trade route from the Great Lakes to open up northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec; an alternate route for the St. Lawrence Seaway by way of Georgian Bay, the French River, Lake Nipissing, the Mattawa, the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence to the sea; expansion of the tourist and recreational areas; and flood control on connecting rivers.

Mr. Kierans' scheme envisages forming a great lake fed by the waters of the Harricanaw and five other rivers that flow in from the province of Quebec. The sum is staggering—$2 billion—but it is expected that it would be written off in 50 years from the sale of water and power. Staggering, but a far cry from the scheme that the Parson Engineering firm of Los Angeles is working on now to bring water in from the Canadian Rockies to inland America. The scheme is called the Nawpaw project—it would cost $200 billion. When you think of $200 billion, it seems a tremendous amount of money, but I understand that is what the United States is going to pay to send a man up to Mars. Which do you think is priority—sending a man to Mars, or ensuring that parts of America have water? Who in this House would say 20 years ago that a human being would float in space? Who would say that we would see the moon on TV, even if we did not see the man up there?

Who would say, a few years ago, that we would see on the TV screens events as they happened in the farthestmost parts of the world? In the progress we have made in the past 20 years, these schemes are not fantastic; they are not staggering. Think of the money already spent by the United States with rockets that hardly get off the ground; they are pooped off a few feet up.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is that word parliamentary?

Mr. Troy: What a sorry world it would be if we had no visionaries. Some day I hope those who follow us in the next century can repeat in truth that passage from one of Ruskin's works: “Look what our fathers have done for us” but make it something worthwhile. I am sure all in this chamber look forward to this modern Mr. da Vinci or Galileo as he comes here next month to speak to the House.

In the meantime, we had a statement by the hon. Prime Minister of this province in January about the international joint commission and we also had further reference to it by the hon. Minister in his presentation. On the commission are three representatives from Canada and a like number from the United States. Under the instructions from the two federal governments, they will study water level problems to estimate the cost of regulation of the lakes and decide the benefits that would accrue to both countries. It will be, possibly, five years before they report. But replenishment, regardless of where it comes from, is strictly a Canadian project and one of the goals, naturally, is American money, American dollars. It will be one of the resource products that we can sell to the United States, just as we sell pulpwood, gold and other things.

But I do not know what the province is doing, what steps we have taken at federal-provincial levels to discuss replenishment. I noticed, I think, in the statement of the leader of this House in January that there had been no discussion of the Kierans scheme at that meeting that they held, nor any discussions with Premier Lesage and the federal government in regard to the possibility or the feasibility of the Kierans scheme. Or, if any steps have been taken, what progress had been made. As far as I know, the hon. Prime Minister has not taken the House into his confidence.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Kierans is coming down here. A date has been arranged for him to come and meet on a Wednesday, instead of having the usual caucus on that day. He will be here to explain the scheme to all the members.

Mr. Troy: I know that, sir. I referred to that earlier, but I wondered if this government had any communications, or had any of these federal-provincial conferences been held? This scheme has been mentioned in this House for several years, and I wondered if any of the federal-provincial conferences had any discussion about the replenishment of water, because it is not just last year that drought happened. It reached its crisis proportions, of course, last summer, but the cycle had been low for some time. Dr. Langford of the University of Toronto and the Great Lakes institute has said he has another idea; he says:

We have not finished the seaway job yet. We have too much invested in the seaway to leave the flow of water up to nature; we should build further remedial structures down the system that would maintain the level of the lakes and ensure a constant navigable draft at Montreal—because it, too, is affected by the low water.

Why has this not been done in view of the crisis? Is it money—or lack of it? Is that the reason? One of the things too, is that there is no single authority. If there was just one authority that could give the word, probably something could be done, but with the federal government, the province of Ontario, the provincial government of Quebec, the federal government of the United States, and all the states along the border. Because they are natural resources, the Great Lakes come under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario in the realms of water and in the realms of fisheries and power. As navigable waters they come under the control of the federal authorities and the seaway authority; across the line in similar manner as Ontario. The bordering states have jurisdiction, and the federal government of the United States has certain rights. Then, to cap it all, we have this international joint commission.

To regulate, use, re-use or reserve our waters by natural storage, or to fill the basin by reversing the natural flow of rivers, is the $64 question. As I mentioned before, $2 billion, I guess it is the $2 billion question. In the meantime, no computer, no soothsayer can say and tell us how much water this area of the North American continent will need in the year 2,000. The least informed can say plenty. In my opinion, the powers that be will have to get their heads together and either agree on a plan or let nature take its course. In one way or another they will have to make a decision soon; may the wisdom of Solomon guide them.

I am touching on conservation. From the earliest settlements to the present time, the attitude of the majority of our people in this great big land you hear mentioned on TV was that our space and our natural wealth were inexhaustible. We thought we had been given the horn of plenty, and our people would not listen to the few who cried out warnings. In our private little worlds we did not become excited by falling water tables, so long as water flowed when we turned on our taps in the bathroom. We did not hang our heads in despair as the lumber barons slashed into our forests and shrank our timber supplies, so long as we could get some shelving for our kitchens. We were little concerned as our cities encroached on the rich farm lands and as the living space in our metropolitan areas dwindled, so long as we could buy homes an hour's ride from our jobs in office or factory. We seek to balance our own budgets, we hope that the governments at all levels will balance theirs; but only a minority is apparently interested that this province will move towards a balanced account of its natural wealth.

We cannot blame it all on the pioneers. It would serve no purpose now because hindsight, as you know, is always better than foresight. Like others in countless ages before, we exploited our virgin forests, denuded our watersheds with fire and axe, used the ploughshare in many sections of this province where only trees could grow, paid the price through frugal living, blasted dreams and finally abandoned farms; you see them in many sections.

It is not too late, though, to repair the damage, but government must take a strong line because we are slowly approaching the point of no return. We have been ruthless in our attitude towards the natural world; most repelling in our march to progress has been the poisoning of our lakes and streams, followed by the extinction of fish and other living creatures—every living creature in some areas, except algae and putrefactive bacteria. We have squandered thus one of our most important recreational resources. The garbage and refuse of our advanced society chokes our rivers; industrial and sewage pollution poisons our lakes; water is dangerous to drink and the old swimming hole of our youth is banned.

My friend and colleague from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) tells me that you cannot possibly swim in the Detroit River; raw sewage from both Windsor and Detroit goes into it.

I am told, too, that along Lake Erie, further to the east, people cannot swim; all you get there is floating toilet paper. Imagine what the condition is.

We have a sewage plant at Nipissing. I remember when I first came to Nipissing you could go swimming in the summertime. Now, right near the sewage plant it is banned; a little further down in West Farris a youngster fell through the ice during the winter. He came up saturated with oil. It is said that the oil has come from the agency which the hon. Minister controls, the ONR.

We have conditions like that everywhere. True, the water resources commission, in its short years of existence, attacked many of the problems with vigour. The main objectives of the commission, since its inception eight years ago, have been to assist municipalities and industry to obtain adequate and safe water, and to protect our water resources against pollution. They have been faced with a formidable task, because much of the damage had been done long before the commission was created. We have always thought we were in a land of plenty; as I said, that we had the cornucopia here. But conservation is the effort that is made to the end that we have a continual balance between natural supply and human need, fulfilling our present needs while we are assuring that there will be sufficient reserve for those who come after. My travels across this province have convinced me that we do not have people with consciousness of conservation. I do not think that, by and large, the government has, either. In my brief period in this House the conservation branch has moved from pillar to post. How can you get continuity of policy? I thought the ideal place for it was in The Department of Lands and Forests, the main concern of which is with our renewable resources—our forests, our soil, our water, our fish and wildlife and those aesthetic reserves which we find in the natural beauty of our streams and in the world of nature. In fact, in my opinion, because of the fact that water and air and the world of nature will play an increasingly important role as we approach another century, there should be a department of conservation. But for the nonce, The Department of Energy and Resources Management is the department responsible for conservation of our resources.

There is need, and I think great need, for basic research in pollution problems. Examination of the report of the water resources commission confirms this need. Here are some of the facts.

One study on taste- and odour-producing substances in water started last January. It had to be halted in June, because the bacteriologist working on it resigned. He had not been replaced at the end of the year 1964.

The number of requests for viral studies in drinking water, recreational water, streams and lakes indicated that some monitoring facilities would be required, according to the report. But the Ontario water resources commission is not equipped for such studies, and does not have a virologist to carry them out. The biology branch has a staff of four biologists and one technician, not nearly enough to cope adequately with the problems rising from the effects of pollution in water. They do a very good job in day-to-day testing of water, but it is obvious that the water resources commission does not have enough biological researchers.

A number of special projects of interest was undertaken during the year, it says in the report. Because of scuba-diving ability of some members of the branch staff, a request was made for an inspection and repair of the sampling pipe installed in Lake Huron at Grand Bend. I suppose they were scuba divers, but still they were important specialists. It seems to me that the necessary repairs could have been done by somebody else, but it seems absurd to use these as scuba divers when it could have been repair men.

Turning to the industrial waste branch, we find this statement in the annual report:

The continuing large-scale industrial growth in Ontario, impressive in all types of industry but most noteworthy in the chemical industry, continued to outstrip the capabilities of the branch to provide complete field coverage. In addition to the establishment of new industries, continuing change in processes and production in existing plants give rise to increasing water use and continuing introduction of new waste components for which treatment controls were not always readily available.

These are strong words in a government report. They certainly support the charge we have made that this government is dangerously neglecting—and it has been made before—the result on our water resources of unchecked and increasing industrial pollution. The OWRC's own statistics show this. Of 477 inspections of discharge of industrial waste into surface waters, the industrial wastes branch found 311 discharges unsatisfactory—only 166 satisfactory. Two industries alone, pulp and paper, and, of course, the uranium mining industry, which hit the front pages last fall when radioactive contamination of the Elliot Lake-Serpent River area was discovered, present problems in research and development of waste treatment techniques which would tax the resources of the best endowed research establishment.

The problems are insuperable with the kind of research and scientific staff that this government allows the water resources commission. All evidence indicates that the commission's research scientists and technicians are able, dedicated and hard working; in light of their very small numbers, they do well. But more must be done. Both the division of laboratories and the division of research in the OWRC must be strengthened and expanded. We want no cut-back on construction of water treatment and water supply plants and equipment. This work is vital and must be carried on at full speed. Though we have urged revisions of financial arrangements to ease burdens on municipalities and to make it economically feasible for certain industries to treat their wastes, we earnestly require an expansion of research staff and facilities.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the stakes are too high to lose a bacteriologist and not replace him, or to have four biologists spending their time in scuba equipment, inspecting pipes, unable to undertake studies of virus contamination because there is no biologist, and have the commission's own report admit that industrial pollution problems are getting out of hand.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind the hon. members of the hon. Provincial Treasurer's (Mr. Allan's) remark in his Budget early in this session. At that time, he said that to combat water pollution resulting from industrial waste, the commission is planning to intensify research into methods of treating wastes and to provide greater surveillance and control of industrial pollution.

Dr. Vance, the chairman of the commission, has stated to the committee, and in a release, that the government intends to launch a five-year programme to reduce pollution caused by our pulp and paper industry. Both basic scientific research and, perhaps, even investigation of the kind of equipment needed, will undoubtedly be involved in this programme. It is good that to this extent, at least, the government is taking steps to live up to its promise, but, Mr. Chairman, this project is being started too late. With a five-year schedule it will be too slow in being brought to completion.

In a speech on the Budget earlier in this session, my hon. leader (Mr. Thompson) outlined a programme whereby a combination of government loans and stricter enforcement practices could be used to eliminate industrial pollution of our water resources. At that time he said that such a crash programme would ensure that all industrial wastes going into the waterways or municipal sewage systems would meet approved purity standards within five years. He believes, and so do I, that we have the ways and means and the obligation to clean up all industrial pollution within the foreseeable future.

You will note, too, that the hon. Minister is planning to implement a fraction of the programme—that is, the pulp and paper industry. Perhaps he will spend another five years with the petro-chemical industry, then a further five years with the rest of the chemical industry, and five years with the steel mills. Then, by the time all the industrial pollution is cleared, it will be 2000.

Mr. MacDonald: You will not be around.

Mr. Troy: I will not be around. I will be in a happier land.

I believe we should warn him that if this is to be the pacing of his attack on this problem, by the time he has solved it, we will not have any pure water left in the province to worry about.

Do you remember Coleridge's Rime of the Ancient Mariner: "Water, water everywhere and not a drop to drink"?

In this connection, I feel obliged to remind the House again of the warnings of Professor Langford of the Great Lakes institute. I believe, incidentally, that his budget was reduced this year. The professor has given us clear warning of the race against time we are involved in. He has said that we have ten years to clean up pollution of the Great Lakes. Ten years. If we have not solved the problem by then, water in the lakes will be changed beyond any hope of recovery—changed to what Professor Langford describes as "dead water, unpleasant-smelling and tasting."

I notice that one of the photographs in the bulletin of the conservation council shows a lovely young lady by the lakeshore, picking up some of the algae washed up on the beach. Her hand is at her nose. Probably she should have had a mask on, because of the smell.

My point, Mr. Chairman, is essentially a simple one. Increasing quantities of complex industrial wastes are being added to our water supplies which have a damaging effect on the quality of our water. The deterioration of the quality of the water will have, as yet, unmeasured effect on all the life processes of all our living creatures. We must have a crash programme to reduce and, if possible, eliminate, the dumping of these industrial wastes. But this programme, Mr. Chairman, is only possible and effective when it is built on a sound foundation of basic research into the technology of removing industrial waste from water at its source; research into the ecological effects of industrial wastes which are not removed; and research into the water cycle itself and the role it plays in the life processes and the shaping of our natural environment.

There is a clear and obvious need for extended research. We should have continuous communication with other lands, and with the country to the south of us where they are spending millions on research into all phases of water. The perspective as was pointed out by the hon. Minister, is a global one. A case in point—many of you will remember that book of Rachael Carson, The Silent Spring. Miss Carson argued that we are dangerously contaminating our natural environment through the indiscriminate use of insecticides and herbicides. I noticed in one of the articles in the Christian Science Monitor this week about penguins in the Antarctic. It has been discovered that there is a very significant concentration of DDT in their bodies. They live thousands of miles away from the nearest users of DDT; clearly, it has entered the cycle of natural life on this planet with results that no one can accurately foresee, but which all agree must be harmful.

I fully recognize in this House that we cannot take on the preservation of the Antarctic penguins, but fine game birds have vanished because of these pesticides. We can, and must, take on the preservation of the wildlife of this province. We must upgrade our research; one step again, I repeat, is to provide more research capability to the commission.

Water consumption by industry is about four times the amount required for public and private use. By 1985 this rate will likely double and by the year 2,000 Ontario may be consuming 80 per cent of her available water supplies. The Ontario water resources commission reports indicate that there is a high degree of pollution in our rivers and lakes systems:

Many of these impurities cannot be treated by our present sewage plants. Moreover, many of these impurities are hazardous to both human and animal life. It is recognized that most of the complex wastes are created by industry. It is evident, too, that the authorities have problems in persuading industries to invest in treatment facilities to ease the load of the public plants when these are available.

There are compelling reasons, then, for the government of Ontario to take a more positive action. Direct incentive should be given to industries so that they will instal treatment facilities at their plants.

Pollutants can in many instances be treated more scientifically and economically at the source, thus reducing to a major extent the degree of pollution in the water courses of the province.

To encourage industries to instal equipment for treatment, incentive should be given. The federal government also should be approached to share in these concessions over a certain period of years, just as they give assistance now to certain depressed areas.

If industry is reluctant to co-operate with municipal and provincial jurisdictions—

No doubt, I suppose, because there is no profit to them to reclaim these wastes and dispose of them; but if they are not treated at the source then these contaminants must be treated by public facilities at the expense of the taxpayer. That takes time and money and years to build and will cost millions.

Expert evidence convinces me that if wastes are treated by individual industries these advantages will result: Reduction of overall cost to the taxpayer and quicker reduction of industrial wastes.

In looking at the latest report of the conservation council of Ontario, I find that they also have a number of very fine suggestions regarding pollution. No doubt the hon. Minister has read it and no doubt the members of the water resources commission have read it as well as many hon. members of this House.

These arguments of the conservation council just confirm the arguments that I am presenting here.

I do not want to imply that all industry is at fault. The conservation council reports that outstanding achievements have been made by the St. Clair River research committee, composed of representatives of the major industries of the Sarnia area and other industries have been singled out for commendation in this water pollution report.

It is apparent, Mr. Chairman, that the need for effective and continual co-ordination between government and industry exists. It is further evident that more effective liaison must be established and maintained by all those who are engaged in industry.

While the Ontario water resources commission has done a very effective job, as hon. members will notice from the report, there are certain deficiencies. The hon. Minister had mentioned about the hydrologic decade and I just notice here that there is a very fine article here in the monthly letter of the Royal Bank of Canada on Canada's involvement in this study. I think I will read just one paragraph from this letter which also emphasizes the problem:

Above all, no time must be lost. Deterioration of our water supply is proceeding at a disconcerting speed. The challenge to protect human life by saving this most vital resource may no longer be deferred.

It seems to me, then, that since all nations, or many nations are engaged in this particular international hydrologic decade that I conclude my remarks here with that eastern proverb which says: "To survive, all must join hands."

So we on all sides of the House must join hands. We in the province of Ontario must join hands with Quebec and the federal government and with agencies to the south of us. And if we do, possibly we will have some success.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of important agencies now encompassed by this department and quite a range of important activities. Some of them will be introduced more fully by other members and therefore I propose in my introductory statement to the estimates to leave discussion of virtually all till later, except for one topic which I shall try to deal with in three varying aspects.

In the dying hours of the long session of the House of Commons which concluded last week a political storm broke over the federal government's tactic of introducing a $1 estimate, the net effect of which would have been, in one case, to wipe out the existence of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. As has been pointed out editorially, this was just a sneaky way of trying to change legislation by means of estimates rather than by an amending Act.

This is of concern to us because we in the Ontario Legislature are involved too. Instead of trying to write off this sorry chapter in our history by the sneaky technique adopted by the federal government, or by the equally evasive technique of simply ignoring the whole situation, which this government has done, I think the time is appropriate to review what has happened.

In 1956 the Ontario Legislature passed Bill No. 91, An Act of facilitate the introduction into Ontario of natural gas from Alberta by means of an all Canadian pipe line. Under this legislation, the hon. Provincial Treasurer was authorized to loan up to $35 million to share in the cost of building the northern Ontario link with the pipe lines in the west. The federal government set up the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation to build the link and then rent it to Trans-Canada Pipe Line which did not fulfill its earlier commitment to build the whole line.

Among the many extraordinary features of this rental agreement with Trans-Canada was an option to buy the northern Ontario link on very favourable terms at any time within 25 years.

Some months ago, I happened to recall this whole episode and inquired as to what, if anything, had happened in the interval. The 1963 annual report of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Corporation had just become available in printed form. You can imagine my surprise to discover that, without even a whisper of publicity, Trans-Canada had already exercised its option on May 29, 1963, and bought the northern Ontario link which had been built with public moneys. Since better than 75 per cent. of that money had been provided by the people of Ontario through either their federal or provincial government, it is interesting to examine what a bonanza Trans-Canada acquired.

The total cost of the northern Ontario link was $129,856,316. The rental agreement was a remarkably generous one. A calculation was made as to what rental would be required to meet the interest and the administrative costs and this was fixed at 3.5 per cent of the capitalization. If perchance the rentals actually fell below this figure, there was no further obligation on the company to provide even enough to meet the minimum required amortization payments, in addition to interest and administration costs. But if perchance the rental exceeded the 3.5 per cent because of the volume of gas going through the line, then the excess would be used to reduce the price at which Trans-Canada might ultimately buy the Ontario link.

When Trans-Canada exercised its option on May 29, 1963, it had paid $41,110,773 in rental. Of this figure, in view of the agreement I just outlined, $19,627,330 was applied to yield the 3.5 per cent return on investment and the remaining $21,483,443 was applied to amortizing the capital costs. As a result, Trans-Canada picked up the northern Ontario link for a mere $108,372,873. In short, the net result of this deal was that the public Treasury of Canada provided money at the ridiculously low interest rate of 3.5 per cent to the multi-millionaire Texans who had originally joined forces to form the Trans-Canada Pipe Line Company. Indeed, when the company refused to build the northern Ontario link through the most difficult and least profitable area, it will be recalled that the Liberal government built the line through northern Ontario. But in addition to that, the Liberal government of the day in Ottawa even advanced some $80 million to build the line through the easy stretch across the prairies. Furthermore, Trans-Canada did not pay the original cost of construction, which was approximately $129 million; instead, they got the line in 1963 for only $108 million when, as a developed and thriving project, it was no doubt worth $200 million or more.

It may be a little late in the day, but I think this Legislature and the people of Ontario are entitled to know how much, if any, of the $35 million authorized by Bill No. 91 in 1956 was advanced by the Ontario Provincial Treasurer. I would ask the hon. Minister to give us that figure and a report of what amount was finally repaid to the province when Trans-Canada exercised its option in May, 1963, and took over the northern Ontario link.

In view of the manner in which the public Treasury, both federally and provincially, was used for the benefit of a private interest—to make matters worse, it was American private interests who had welched on their original commitment—I think it is interesting to recall the statements made in the House of Commons by two leading Tories of the day. In the heat of that famous pipeline debate on June 4, 1956, George Drew, then leader of the federal Conservatives, said on third reading of the bill:

Do you want to go ahead with the pipeline? All right, if you are determined to follow the course of going ahead with the pipeline through a Crown corporation, go ahead with it, but expand the Crown corporation and give that Crown corporation the power to build the whole line from the Alberta boundary right through to the east. That is what I said on March 15 and I repeat it.

Donald Fleming, on June 5, 1956, added his voice:

Well, sir, it now seems we are narrowed down to a choice between two courses, the government's iniquitous proposal to hand over to Trans-Canada Pipe Line Limited great sums of money to help them out, or public construction of the whole line.

I will only add that the proposal was even more iniquitous than Donald Fleming realized; subsequent events have proven even greater sums than he could have known had been handed over to Trans-Canada.

This is a magnificent example of modern, free enterprise, where the risks are taken by the public Treasury and the profits are taken by the promoters, through the co-operation of their friends in political office.

But this was only the beginning of the story. Here in Ontario, it became a matter of public policy that most, if not all, of the new distribution franchises should go to Northern Ontario Natural Gas. What they did not get directly through assignment by an agency of the Crown—the fuel board, now the energy board—they have acquired by buying the controlling interest in later years. Early in the development, Twin-City ceased to be an independent company, which claimed the support of the people of the northwest, from Dryden to the Lakehead to Nipigon and Geraldton. Controlling interest was bought out by NONG and the same thing has happened, or is likely to happen, according to newspaper reports, to Lakeland in eastern Ontario. NONG was placed in this highly favourable position through this government's policy.

Therefore, I have two questions to ask and I would like to put them to the hon. Minister in connection with this company. First, a report of March 24, 1965, indicates that the profits of NONG have risen by 50 per cent to $2,350,000 in the 12 months ending February 28 of this year, with only a 12 per cent increase in the gross revenues which had reached the figure of $24,719,000. What explanation can the hon. Minister give for a 50 per cent increase in profits, while gross sales are going up only 12 per cent?

Furthermore, since there is a limit of about seven per cent placed on the profits of public utilities engaged in gas distribution, one can only conclude, in light of this 50 per cent increase in profits, that NONG must have been losing money hand over fist a year ago, or else it is making money hand over fist today.

Has the seven per cent limit on the profits of public utilities, which enjoy a monopoly franchise granted by this government, now gone by the board altogether?

Secondly, there is another development in the gas distribution field that I draw to the attention of the hon. Minister and seek his comment. Subscribers must now buy more cubic feet of gas to produce the same heat, at least in some areas throughout the north serviced by NONG. Within recent years, the federal government granted permission for the construction of a plant at Empress, Alberta, on the Trans-Canada pipe line for the purpose of extracting some of the high Btu propane gases from natural gas. This plant went into operation last year. I acknowledge that the gas which Trans-Canada has contracted to supply to NONG and other distributors in Ontario must have a Btu content of only 1,000, and that it never dropped below that figure. But before the Empress plant went into operation, I am informed that the Btu content was as high as 1,084; since then it has varied with lower figures—1,011 Btu in September, 1964; 1,023 in December, 1964. This lowering of the Btu content of gas has the effect of raising the price to the consumer, because he needs more gas to get the same heat. I am wondering whether, in view of these changes, this is not an appropriate topic for a hearing before the energy board, either provincially or federally. Quite frankly, I am not certain which one of them would hold jurisdiction, or whether they would not be joint jurisdictions to some extent.

Furthermore, who is pocketing the added profit from the propane gas taken off by the plant at Empress, Alberta? Do they all go to Trans-Canada or are some of them shared with Ontario distributors? If the latter, I suggest it may throw some light on why the profits of NONG jumped 50 per cent while the gross consumption was only going up 12 per cent.

Having reviewed this gas pipeline situation at both the Trans-Canada and the provincial distribution levels, let me turn now to the remaining area where this government has just about completed the handing over of another valuable natural asset to private interests. I refer to gas storage. Last year I touched on this, and let me recall the salient points for hon. members. Union Gas has been in the field for a long time and some years ago it was granted rights to 76 billion cubic feet storage space in Lambton county. In part, because of the advantages arising from buying gas at off-peak periods and storing it for sale at peak periods, it is significant to note that Union's residential rate in south-western Ontario is $1.07 per 1,000 cubic feet, compared with $1.35 per 1,000 cubic feet charged by Consumers' Gas in the Metropolitan area. But a few years ago, through a subsidiary, Ontario Natural Gas Storage and Pipeline Limited, Union built a pipeline from the Dawn storage basins to Oakville, so that it is linked now not only with Trans-Canada but with the major markets of the Golden Horseshoe. Union has now looped this line. With transmission charges of 8 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and storage charges of 17 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, this has proven to be a very lucrative venture.

Indeed, sir, in the prospectus which was filed by the Ontario Natural Gas Storage and Pipeline Company in 1958, it was anticipated that at the end of five years—by 1962—gross profits of $3,638,000 would be expected on capital stock of only $9,510,000. That is a profit of 38 per cent on money invested. In these early years, Consumers' Gas was using the Union subsidiary's storage areas in Lambton county to some extent, but the comments of top Consumers' spokesmen was that the cost was too high for more extensive use of Lambton storage.

Mr. Chairman, I see that the government House leader is anxiously waiting for supper, so I will conclude my remarks after 8.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, April 8, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, April 8, 1965

Estimates, Department of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Simonett, continued	2091
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2119

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

(continued)

On vote 601:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment hour I was discussing the development of the use of storage facilities in the province of Ontario, recalling that Union Gas had used it for a considerable time and a few years ago, through a subsidiary known as Ontario Natural Gas Storage and Pipe Line Limited, they had built a link from the Dawn storage basin through to Oakville, so they were tying in with the Trans-Canada line and with the big market in the Golden Horseshoe. I was pointing out that this had proved to be a very lucrative business with an 8 cents per 1,000 cubic foot transmission charge through this line and a 17 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for storage. Within a few years, they have now looped the line.

In these early years, Consumers' Gas was using the Union subsidiary storage areas in Lambton county to some extent, but the comments of some of the top officials of Consumers' was that the cost was too high for more extensive use of Lambton storage. Apparently, Mr. Chairman, if the costs are too prohibitive to pay it to others, they become more acceptable if they are paid to themselves. So, within the past year or so, Consumers' Gas has entered into partnership with Imperial Oil to set up its own subsidiary, known as Tecumseh Gas Storage Limited, with a 12.5-mile link from the three storage pools of Kimball-Colinville, Seckerton and Corunna, out in Lambton county, over to the nearest point on the line of Ontario Natural Gas Storage and Pipe Line Ltd., through to Oakville. These three pools have a capacity of 56 billion cubic feet, of which some 40 billion is a working storage. I notice the hon. Minister this afternoon had that figure up to 42 billion as a working storage.

The Ontario energy board has awarded rights to this last remaining major storage capacity to Tecumseh.

At the moment, not only is Consumers' Gas Company a 50 per cent-owner in Tecumseh, but it is the sole customer, with a contract which indicates its intention to increase stored gas from seven billion to 30 billion in a ten-year period. That means that after the ten-year period, there will still be another ten billion working storage to reach the available maximum of 40 billion in their storage pools.

Through its continuing arrangements with Union's subsidiary from Dawn through to Oakville, Consumers' Gas is now in a position to use storage to the greatest extent possible. In doing so, the previously prohibitive costs have become tolerable, not because they are any less, but because Consumers' Gas, like Union Gas, is now in a position to share in this lucrative auxiliary income and pass on the costs to the residential, commercial and industrial consumers.

I went down to the energy board offices a couple of days ago and read through the transcript and the exhibits filed on the occasion of Tecumseh's hearing for its franchise to build this 12.5-mile link from its field gathering system in the three pools which have been assigned to it over to the Union Gas system at Dawn.

It was interesting to note that the most vigorous opposition to the Tecumseh bid came from Trans-Canada, which obviously did not want to be cut out completely from the last of these major unassigned storage pools, particularly at a time when Trans-Canada is about to loop its line with another that is planned for a more direct route through the United States to the Sarnia area, where it can tie in with the vast storage system of Lambton county and its capacity in excess of some 100 billion cubic feet.

Tecumseh is spending over $20 million over a five-year period to build this gathering system, its compressors, and the 12.5-mile line to Dawn. I was interested to note from the transcript that one of the points on which Trans-Canada based its opposition was that

Tecumseh had provided no breakdown to show the reasonableness of the $7.5 million which Tecumseh is paying Imperial Oil, one of the parent companies, for Imperial's storage leases and what is euphemistically referred to as "the benefit of Imperial's knowledge of the pools."

Indeed, the transcript revealed that the chairman of the energy board apparently shared some of Trans-Canada's suspicions. On page 149 of the hearings, which were held on January 3 and 9, 1964, Mr. Crozier asked:

Is it possible that certain amounts have been put in here—that is, in the $7.5 million paid by Tecumseh to Imperial:

—and capitalized which might not be allowed on a rate base by a board that regulates the tariffs and charges?

The witness for Consumers' Gas could offer no breakdown or elaborative comment.

Meanwhile, the oft-repeated pleas of rate-payers associations in Lambton county have gone unheeded—that storage companies should be obligated to share the burden of municipal taxes by paying on underground storage, according to some formula related to the municipal taxes which they now pay on above-ground storage.

It will be interesting to see, now that Consumers' Gas has the advantage of all the storage space that it can use, whether it will be able to get its residential rates down from the present $1.35 per mcf charged to Golden Horseshoe subscribers closer to the $1.07 residential rate charged by Union Gas in southwestern Ontario. When Consumers' does get its price down closer to Union's, the saving will be many dollars a year to every user of natural gas in homes within this metropolitan area.

In reviewing the handling of natural gas in this nation and this province, one is reminded once again that it is a very lucrative business. The mad scramble for the monopoly franchises upon which it is based indicated from the outset that the promoters knew it was a lucrative business; subsequent developments have confirmed it.

But if the public interest is to be given top priority, I suggest to this government that here is a clear-cut case where public ownership is justified, even more so than in years gone by with hydro. George Drew and Donald Fleming recognized this fact, even if fleetingly, back in 1956. Only through a rationalization of the existing gas transmission and distribution system, integrating it with our incomparable natural assets of vast storage pools, will it be possible to develop a grid along the same lines as the hydro grid was built by a previous generation—as a publicly owned utility.

Only in this way can we be assured that the overall profits from the system will not be pocketed by a few, but will be used to extend the distribution system to unserved areas all throughout Ontario. Today, these still include not only large centres like Sault Ste. Marie, but hundreds of small centres throughout the province which are not yet having the advantage of natural gas and, conceivably, may never have them because the resources and the profits are not being used or poured back to extend the system across the whole province in the fashion that they were done with hydro.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, all of the other topics that fall under the umbrella of this growing department, I think, might appropriately be dealt with after they have been introduced by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer), or Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), or when the appropriate estimate comes up.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Chairman, I guess I would have to agree with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), because he seems to agree with us in many of the things we are doing in this department. He made a couple of points there that I would like to clear up.

I think his first point was on hydro rates in northern Ontario. I do not think we will be dealing with rates; that will be dealt with under the vote for Hydro. But I recall him saying that some farmer had called on him, complaining or telling him that his bill was for three months. It averaged out, if I am not mistaken, about $18 a month for whatever light and power he is using. Being an old-timer, as you are, sir, I can recall operating a business when we had to have our own power plant—that was called a Delco plant. We used to have lots of those in Ontario. You know, I have found that hydro is the cheapest thing I can buy in business today. I think most of the farmers in Ontario would agree with me.

Mr. MacDonald: It depends if the power comes from our Ontario Hydro; if it comes from the private hydro, as in the Soo, its costs are higher.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We are talking about Nipissing; it comes from our Hydro.

Mr. MacDonald: So I read in the papers—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The next point he made was when he was talking about the ONR and mentioned the loss that the government is suffering from operating the rail line from Cochrane to Moosonee. If I understood him right, I think he suggested that if he were operating this railroad he would tear up the tracks and build a highway. I think I understood that; is that right?

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Yes. Unless you have a major strike up there of some mineral wealth or something that gives you an opportunity to increase your payloads.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is fine. I can tell you this, sir, that I do not agree with you and I doubt if the government does. In fact, I am sure it does not, because if we do get a strike up there and we have torn up the rails—something that was built to open up this country a good many years ago and paid by former people in the province of Ontario—they are gone. What are we going to do? Start over again to build a railroad? To me, this is not good economy. I think we will leave the rails there to see what happens. I would think within the next two years you will see that we are going to be making some money on the run from Cochrane to Moosonee.

Mr. Troy: Well, I did not say you had to do it tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know, but the hon. member has made this statement and I wondered if he thought we should do it tomorrow or next week.

Mr. Troy: I put an "if" there. If, and there is a possibility as the hon. Minister said, there is a strike. You might have a strike, I do not know. Maybe you might see the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope)—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We still have timber in that country to move.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I was interested in the hon. Minister's statement regarding the ONR. What is the basis for his optimism in getting out of the red on the Cochrane to Moosonee part of it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We still have timber up there; we have a lot of timber and a lot of pulp to move. I think you are going to see mineral. I think you are going to see a lot of activity there within the next—

Mr. MacDonald: Does the hon. Minister mean the diamond mines of the hon. Minister from Port Arthur?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I am not talking about diamonds. There might be, but I do not think we will need many trains to bring the diamonds out. But we might need the odd one.

The hon. member for Nipissing was speaking about the pollution and the problems we are having there, and the water problems we have in the province of Ontario. I think he would agree with us that at least we have started to work at this—and I think he did agree with that. I was surprised to hear about pollution in Lake Nipissing caused by the ONR. This is the first I had heard of this.

Mr. Troy: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that somebody from the hon. Minister's department had gone up there to check because it was reported. I know the youngster came out saturated in oil and it was said that it came from the ONR in that area, and then there was to be an investigation.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I checked with people from OWRC. They have not heard of it yet and I do not know how it would be polluted unless it was from the shops. I doubt if we are running oil in Lake Nipissing—I hope we are not—but perhaps we should move the shop somewhere else, I do not know. Would the hon. member like this? I know they would be very happy to have it at Earlton.

Mr. Troy: Is that the usual threat that—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, this is not a threat. I am just asking the hon. member. He brought up the question, I did not.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): As soon as we mention something you will pull it out.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I think we will deal with that one. I doubt if the hon. member has too much to do, to worry about the ONR going to pollute Lake Nipissing. I hope they are not running diesel fuel in there but we will check it out and I am sure I will be able to give the hon. member a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Troy: Maybe there is petroleum in the sands of Nipissing—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Maybe that is where it is coming from, and it is not the ONR at all.

The hon. member for York South raises the old problem about ownership—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): About the usual amount of gas.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, you said it, I did not.

He raised the problem about public ownership of gas utilities in the province of Ontario. I think he has raised this a good many times here. In fact, in the few years I have been in here I think it is an occurrence that has happened yearly.

Mr. MacDonald: The case is getting stronger each year.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Is it? Well, let us analyze that. The hon. member's case was pretty strong, he thought, in 1956, and I can recall that he went out into the country a year ago last September and his case was very strong then. He went up and down the province of Ontario saying that he was going to have 55 seats in this Legislature. Am I right or wrong on that? I think I read it a good many times.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Just wait!

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Who was right and who was wrong? This is what I want to know. Evidently the people in the province of Ontario are satisfied with the people who are distributing gas. I have not had a complaint since I have been Minister from a consumer about the price of gas in the province of Ontario. I have heard more here from you than I have heard from all the people in the province of Ontario. Now, I am only telling you the truth, so I guess I have answered that question.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have never been able to persuade this government, and particularly this hon. Minister, but maybe he will deal with some of the specifics that I have raised and which place an obligation on him.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I might say this, Mr. Chairman, about some of the specifics the hon. member raised: I was unaware that NONG had increased its profits by 50 per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you doubting it? Do you want me to send you the clipping?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, no, I am not doubting your word.

Mr. Whicher: There is nothing wrong with that. That means they increase the tax.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am not doubting your word. I do not think there is anything wrong with that—and they have increased their sales by only 12 per cent. I would say this to the hon. member, that I doubt if there is anything wrong with it but I am going to have people in our department check into it. If it is an honest profit, and they can do this—distribute gas, and make a profit and still supply the consumer at a price that he is willing to pay—then maybe you are wrong—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if I may rise for a moment. The hon. Minister, with the assistance of the hon. member for Bruce in his Tory approach, is missing the key point.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Whose Tory approach?

Mr. MacDonald: The Tory approach of the hon. member for Bruce!

The key point is, if the hon. member for Bruce does not know it, that public utilities are supposed to be operating under a margin of seven per cent profit.

Mr. Whicher: And I know it full well.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. All I said was they were either losing a lot of money last year or making a lot of money this year, if they can increase their profit 50 per cent and still be working under a margin of seven per cent. That is my query to the hon. Minister.

An hon. member: If it went from one per cent to two per cent, it would be a 100 per cent increase.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, I cannot answer that question because it would take some research to find out what has happened, but I know what the hon. member is talking about—about the seven per cent on their investment. I would doubt very much, although I cannot prove it, whether they could make more than seven per cent on their investment and still be able to distribute gas at a price that the consumers can afford to pay.

Of course, they do not have a franchise in every area, but they are very competitive. We have Hydro furnishing one source of energy, there is oil furnishing another source of energy, and there is propane coming on the market today. These people have to be competitive or people just will not use the product. We do not have gas in the village where I live, but I use oil and I am very happy. The price is okay with me and I am not complaining about it—nor, as I said earlier, have I heard anyone from the area that the hon. member is talking about, complain about the price of natural gas.

Mr. Troy: You should use hydro, that is the cheapest.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: They have their choice—they have hydro, they have natural gas, they have fuel oil.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you mean in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Sure, they have many things up there they can use for energy.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, you will find the Btu content—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, no, you brought this Btu up, but you said when you brought it up that there was to be 1,000 Btu. All right. This is an agreement, that I am to furnish the hon. member 1,000 Btu, but if I want to give you 1,100 as a premium, well, who is losing money? Not the consumer. I am giving you a premium. If I go into a gas station tomorrow, to make this simple, and I ask for premium gas or second-grade gas and the man says to me when I go up for second-grade gas, "I am going to give you premium," I should not complain.

Mr. Bryden: No, but it is the other way around.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, it is not the other way around, they were bettering their agreement every time they gave them gas. Were they not? You will admit this.

Mr. MacDonald: They originally were giving something—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Why should we as a government then go to a gas supplier and say to him, "You can't do this"?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not complaining about them having given the extra gas, what I am complaining about is that they have now built the plant at Empress, Alberta. They are now separating out the propane gases. Presumably this is Trans-Canada that is doing this, so that the gas that is now being made available in parts of Ontario—and I presume all of Ontario—is of a lower Btu content.

I am told, for example, that there is considerable interest and public discussion in Timmins, in Kirkland Lake and these areas, of the fact that during the last two or three months the gas bills have been appreciably higher. The argument of the company and some people is that there has been a cold winter. Those people have had cold winters for a long time. Part of the increase in the cost is because of the fact that they must use more gas to get the same heat because of the reduced Btu content.

Can this be done? Is this not a matter for review by the energy board federally if it comes under Trans-Canada, or the energy board provincially?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, Mr. Chairman, it does come under the energy board federally, but after all if a company is delivering gas better than it has agreed to deliver, I do not think that we should complain about it.

Mr. Bryden: No, but they have in effect increased the price.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: They have not increased the price. They took a contract to deliver 1,000 Btu, no more.

Mr. MacDonald: No, Mr. Chairman, if I may just correct that. The contract was between Trans-Canada and NONG.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes?

Mr. MacDonald: Not with the ultimate personal consumers.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, but why was the contract made this way—so that the consumer would get this type of gas. Is that not right?

Mr. MacDonald: But he is not getting it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: But he is getting it, he is doing better.

Mr. Bryden: That should be of concern to you.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, definitely, it is. But he was only paying for 1,000 Btu in the first place, and because he got a premium I do not think we should stop that.

Mr. Bryden: It has been stopped.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It has not; they are still getting a premium gas. The hon. member said that this evening himself.

Mr. MacDonald: I said sometimes it is 1,000 and sometimes 1,100—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It is still a premium, is it not?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister sat down before he answered some of the questions. What about the earlier question that I asked, about this government, through Bill 91 in 1956, making $35 million available for this pipeline project. Maybe this was before the hon. Minister's arrival in the House and perhaps he is not aware of it, but who in the government can speak on behalf of this government? How much money of the $35 million did you make available? How much money did you get back? What is your view now on that contract in which you hand over a bonanza for a song—which is what happened?

Mr. Whicher: You voted for it.

Mr. MacDonald: This is typical; this is the old Frost argument. The hon. member is really a better Tory than the Tories.

Mr. Whicher: No, I sat beside you.

Mr. MacDonald: I presented the arguments in this House in 1956 as to the kind of deal that we were being stuck with and said, "If this is the only thing we can have to get gas in northern Ontario, I will vote for it," but this is the kind of deal that this government was a party to. Now, since the hon. member for Bruce is so perky tonight, I will draw to his attention that it was his previous colleagues, C. D. Howe and company, who framed this exploitative deal. Interestingly enough, for whatever significance there may be in it, within six weeks of the election of the Liberals in 1963, Trans-Canada picked up their option and walked off with the northern Ontario link for which we, the people of Ontario, had put up 75 per cent of the money through either the federal or the provincial government. It cost $129 million and we gave it to them for $108 million, when it is now worth $200 million or more. There is free enterprise in the manner approved by the hon. Minister and the hon. member for Bruce, where the public Treasury bears the risks and the promoters walk off with the profits.

However, let me get back to the question. How much of the $35 million that we authorized in this House was used and what did you get back when the option was finally taken up by Trans-Canada in 1963?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is right, that I was not in the House in 1956 when they were talking about this $35 million, nor was I too concerned about it at that time. But I have a note here that of the $35 million that the hon. member talked about, none was ever called for from this province of Ontario for the Crown company.

Mr. MacDonald: Never?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: None, no, not a cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this is really cuter than words can describe. This government brought in a bill in 1956, Bill 91, and we fought it through this House in a most violent battle. It was like the three-and-a-half-day fight we had a few weeks ago on managed news. For three and a half days the government defended the indefensible and three weeks later it is in the process of abolishing it; it is canning the canned news.

Here is what happened: This government, or its predecessor, has been here for 20 years. It brought in a bill, and fought the bill through, to be able to dip into the Ontario Treasury for $35 million. The fact of the matter is that we, in this party, and not the Liberals, because they sat in their chairs there and said nothing as usual—

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member voted for it.

Mr. MacDonald: The Tories and the Liberals were really together, but apparently that little band of three—because that is all we were at that time—proved to you—even though you could not admit it publicly—that you should not do anything, so none of the $35 million was made available. That is what we are now told.

Mr. Whicher: Did the hon. member not know that five years ago?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Whicher: Well, you should have.

Mr. MacDonald: How should I know that it was not used? I will tell you the story on this, Mr. Chairman. Last year I was driving to Ottawa, about May or June, and for a reason that I shall never know, suddenly the debate of 1956 and 1957 came into my mind. I suddenly wondered what happened to that option that could be picked up in 25 years. So I went into the House of Commons and I think it was Stanley Knowles whom I went up to see and I said, "Look, Stan, what has happened on this link in northern Ontario?"

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): It sounds like the hon. member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) talking.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, and, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Knowles said, "By a strange coincidence, just last week the annual report of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation was brought down for the year 1963." This was five or six months after the year had concluded. In it was revealed that in the quietness of the night on May 29, 1963, six weeks after the Pearson government came into power, the Liberals were into bed once again with these barefoot millionaires from Texas. They picked up right where C. D. Howe left off, and from the world beyond he must have been gazing upon the faithfulness with which the Liberals pursued this whole issue.

On May 29, without a whisper of publicity—I have not found a single person who was aware that it had picked up its option—Trans-Canada got this $129 million line for $108 million. That is how fortuitous was my discovery of what had happened, but I will tell you it was a bit more fortuitous than this because none of the Cabinet Ministers here has known what happened. Two years later it is a bit of a news item, because it has suddenly been unearthed. This is typical of how Liberal and Tory governments operate with these corporations—with these deals behind the scenes in which the public Treasury is used, and then, without any publicity, the deal is closed. The only thing is, I suppose, that we should give this item a decent burial and I would suggest to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) that some time before this session ends we should bring in a bill to amend Bill 91 of 1956 and wipe it out, because it is a nullity—is that the term?—a nullity. It is cluttering up our statute books. Let us get rid of it.

An hon. member: It served a good purpose.

Mr. MacDonald: The only purpose that it served was that you had come in here and presented something that was so indefensible that even you would not proceed to execute it, you and your government.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I remember this ballyhoo so well in 1956; this same story I have heard 100 times.

Mr. Whicher: How did he vote?

Mr. Cowling: He voted with us.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cowling: So when the hon. member talks about the awful fight that took place here for three and a half days; he was fighting in a paper bag. There were only three of them and they were fighting among themselves; we were not fighting, we were all set.

Mr. Bryden: You were just selling out the public interest.

Mr. Cowling: No, we were not! We were approving the passing of a bill for $35 million to make the Trans-Canada pipeline a reality through Ontario. A very reasonable, sensible thing to do!

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense!

Mr. Cowling: We did; absolutely!

Now the fact that the federal government did not want to use the $35 million had nothing to do with our job; it was available at the time. It was a great move by this government, among many great moves. Yes, sir!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bryden: I think that the federal government should be advised that any time it needs money it should go to the hon. member for High Park, and he and the hon. member for Bruce perhaps can together sit down and draw up a new manifesto of Toryism.

Mr. Cowling: Is the hon. member for Woodbine going to tell us about the pipeline now?

Mr. Bryden: Heaven forbid!

Vote 601 agreed to.

On vote 602:

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, under vote 602, I believe that we can speak on drilling and so forth. I wonder if the hon. Minister has given any further thought or taken action regarding the ban on drilling for oil or gas in the Great Lakes, other than Lake Erie; especially since this was brought up at Cabinet, I believe, on March 19?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question: This matter was discussed, I believe, in the House one year ago or a little over a year ago, and there has been no further discussion regarding drilling in the Great Lakes during the past year.

Mr. Paterson: I believe there was a meeting, Mr. Chairman, at which commercial fishermen were called in to discuss their problems in regard to drilling in the Great Lakes. I wonder if these commercial fishermen are satisfied with the actions that have been taken by the hon. Minister's department and have the necessary precautions indicated been taken?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that we have not had too many problems with the commercial fishermen this year, although we are working very closely with The Department of Lands and Forests.

I believe that it was about nine months ago that I was up in the vicinity of Lake Erie and we discussed with the lake drillers and some of the fishermen some of the problems that they have been having and their new method of capping the wells. Personally, I have not heard any complaints since that time, although there has been very little activity in the lakes, as the hon. member knows, this past year.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, I have a final question for the hon. Minister. I hate to see these estimates go through without some mention made of the famous Place Well No. 1 in the township of Colchester South. Has there been any guarantee that funds will be available, should this oil well become abandoned, that the rubble pile which was erected this past winter to protect the casing and so forth, will be removed from the lake at such time?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has posed a question that we did not anticipate at this time. The federal Department of Transport gave permission to the oil company to construct this platform and of course the hon. member's question is what will happen to it providing the well is abandoned. I would think that we would have to look into that one, but I suppose it would be the same as any other abandoned well. We say the drill hole must be capped but we have not gone so far as to call for removal of something that is constructed out in the middle of the lake. However that would be taken care of, I think, under this department.

Mr. Paterson: I think the property owners in that immediate area would like some such assurance, either from the department of the hon. Minister or from the federal authorities, whichever one gave the authority to erect this structure in the navigable waters.

I believe I have a letter here from the department of the hon. Minister that refers to this particular structure—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to assure the hon. member that although I cannot give him the answer tonight, we will look into this and I will be very happy to have him come to my office and we will discuss this at some future date.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): The score is 2-0 for Canadiens.

Under this vote—I would take it that the price of gasoline in Ontario is pertinent here, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, wrong vote. We do not have a vote on the price of gasoline.

Interjections-by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It is good to be among friends, even if they are not yours, I can tell you that.

The recent gasoline war when we saw the price of gasoline go down to 33.9 cents and even as low as 30 cents a gallon—

An hon. member: Down to 23.9 cents.

Mr. Sargent: In Buffalo to 23 cents.

Mr. Chairman: The handling of gasoline does enter into The Department of Energy and Resources Management, but not the price of gasoline. The price of gasoline might more properly be discussed in transport. Gasoline is energy, but the price of gasoline has nothing to do with this vote. At the moment, the regulation of the handling of gasoline which is carried on by the department is being discussed, so you are in order. But I do not believe the price of gasoline is regulated by this department.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this is the most important source of energy in this province, as important as water or anything else. I think someone has to make a decision on protection for the public. The freight rates from the west are the same in Buffalo as in Windsor, and we are currently paying, in our neck of the woods, about 47 cents a gallon for gasoline.

An hon. member: You are out of order.

Mr. Sargent: I am not out of order. You should have enough intelligence to know this is very important to the people in the outlying parts of this province and someone has to make a decision on this.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The point is not really whether we are interested in the price or not. The question is really: In the conduct of the affairs of this House, is this the proper place to discuss this item? I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is not.

It is not a question of whether we are interested in the price of gasoline, it is whether we discuss the business of the House in proper order.

If the hon. member wishes to make a speech about the price of gas, he has the Budget debate in which he can range over the whole field. This government has no control over the price of gasoline any more than it has any control over the price of any commodity.

So, Mr. Chairman, I make my point of order that the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Will the member please sit down. I ruled on the point of order that the price of gasoline did not enter into this particular vote. Consequently, as the Prime Minister has pointed out—

Mr. Sargent: The hon. Prime Minister told you to make that ruling.

Mr. Chairman: I made that ruling previously. I said that the handling of gasoline as conducted by this Department of Energy and Resources Management did enter into it, but not the price of gasoline. I made that ruling, but you continued to talk about the price of gasoline.

Mr. Sargent: Well, where do you suggest we talk about it, then?

Mr. Chairman: You can talk about it in the Budget debate as has been suggested, or any time you like when you are in order. But certainly not under this vote, because it does not concern this department.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister explain what we can discuss under gasoline handling then?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, we are on vote 602 and I think the hon. member agreed to the vote. He knows what he can discuss on this.

Mr. Newman: What is entailed in the handling of gasoline?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: All we are interested in is the actual safety in the handling Act. We are not interested in prices.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Minister, all you have to do is explain that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know, but I have not had the opportunity yet, that is what I am doing now.

Mr. Newman: All you had to do was explain that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I did not mind what the hon. member was saying, I was willing to listen to him for a minute and find out what he had in mind—maybe we could get our gas cheaper!

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, all we need is an Act of this House to give us a standard price of gasoline in this province. That is all we need.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Last year, Mr. Chairman, I brought to the attention of the hon. Minister, under the matter of gas and oil lease forms in this province that there are many different forms which companies can use. One company uses one form, another company uses another; and this is very confusing and misleading to the public. I wondered if the hon. Minister has done anything toward coming up with a uniform gas and oil lease in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say we will never be able to come up with what I should call a standard form, or a formula under which they would all be alike. But we have looked into it, and let me say that I think all the gas companies now are going to be working on a simplified form. Let me put it that way.

They have to be different, but we are trying to get it in language most people can understand. I think that was the question you posed a year ago. We have found that the gas companies are willing to go along with this and try to get a more simple form of lease.

Mr. Spence: The fine print has been very confusing to the public for a long time, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, the question that I would ask the hon. Minister—if he will check his files—refers to his letter of March 9 addressed to myself. In it he stated:

The removal of any structure, break-water and so forth upon the plugging of any lake well is required by both our regulations and by The Navigable Waters Protection Act.

The point that I want to make is that this company which has placed gas and oil rigs in position, are they required by law to set aside sufficient funds to remove them or will it be up to the province to finance the removal of this rubble?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, there is no law that would have them set aside any amount, but under our regulations they must plug the well. Now we are posing a problem here that is a little different from the average problem. As I said before, Mr.

Chairman, I would be very happy to look into this and whatever information I can give the hon. member I would be very happy to do so.

Mr. Paterson: Well, I would appreciate it if, when you come to a determination, you would write the clerk of that township so that their council would have this on file, as they are most concerned with this problem.

While we are in the area of plugging wells, I wonder if the hon. Minister has information as to how many abandoned gas wells in the province may have to be plugged during 1965. I wonder further if sufficient funds have been appropriated to pay the department's share of the cost of plugging these wells. I believe I am correct in my belief that the cost to the property owner will not exceed $300, I believe I have that in my correspondence, whether the property owner has received any royalties from these wells or has just purchased the land and discovered the abandoned well on his property. Could the hon. Minister advise me in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, this could vary from well to well. I do not think there is any fixed price on plugging any particular well.

I think you would have to take into consideration the circumstances regarding this well. Now if a developer went in and bought an area and he found some uncapped wells, I suppose we would have to deal with him on one basis. If it was the original owner of the well who had covered it up, and we discovered that it is polluting or is dangerous, we would have to talk to him on another basis. Where we have an owner who has purchased the property and knew nothing about the well, then I think we have another case there.

Now I might say we have an amount set up in our estimates to take care of some of these wells. We would never know whether we have to plug ten, 25, 50 or 100 during this year. However, when we find that one needs plugging, we have had no problems getting additional funds from the Treasury board to get it plugged.

Mr. Paterson: In Mersea township there are some nine to ten wells on which orders went out that they should be plugged and there was a delay of some two months as funds were not available. I believe the department finally did get equipment in on one well and the total cost was in the thousands of dollars. Then the thaw occurred and the machinery had to be withdrawn until next fall.

I would assume that since these orders to plug these wells have gone out to farmers in my constituency that this work will be done next fall, but I had a verbal understanding that these particular people would not be assessed more than $300 per individual well.

I know of one instance where an abandoned well is on a former school property that a party bought and moved into. He did not discover this well until after he had acquired this property and I do not feel that he should be liable for the total cost of plugging this well.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I understand that this group had been dealt with last fall and this was the arrangement.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Essex South brought up the question of petroleum in Lake Erie and the dwindling supplies there. Since the requirements of Ontario for gas and petroleum are met outside of this province—in fact I understand that only about 10 per cent of our requirements are produced in Ontario—and further since the announcement was made some time ago that there is a possibility of petroleum being found in James Bay and Hudson Bay, what action is this government taking to protect Ontario's interests in that area?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, if I understand the hon. member, he is asking what action we are taking to protect our interests in Hudson Bay. Actually that does not come under my department, I think that question should be answered by the hon. Minister of Mines when his estimates are up because this comes under his department, the actual drilling.

Mr. Troy: Petroleum is under your department and that is what they are drilling for, I understand, or would be drilling for.

The question is, if oil or petroleum were found in James Bay or Hudson Bay, would it be the property of this province or would it be the property of the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a question perhaps the hon. Minister of Mines would like answered right now. I believe there are some discussions between the federal government and the provinces regarding this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Would that be decided by the people of the federal government, do you think?

Mr. Troy: As in the B.C. case.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It could be, yes. In fact I am not in any position to answer that question because the actual drilling under Crown lands would come under The Department of Mines.

Mr. Paterson: Yes, but offshore on Lake Erie.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have a different situation. All we do in—

Mr. Newman: That is international, the other is not international. Offshore Lake Erie is international waters.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The land is provincial. I am sorry, sir, where we have jurisdiction over the drilling in Lake Erie is in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Newman: Well, in James Bay or Hudson Bay would be in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: If you can tell them that at Ottawa I think we might be very happy and go along with you, but this seems to be what the controversy is about right now.

Mr. Newman: You are the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I am not.

Mr. Troy: If James Bay is not in Ontario, what are you doing up in Moosonee, then? What land are you in? You are out of Ontario altogether, are you not?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, Moosonee happens to be on the mainland. But I thought your question was about drilling out in James Bay.

Mr. Troy: In James Bay—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is not mainland and this is what the controversy is about—is it federal or does it belong to the province? I do not think we are going to settle it here tonight. I think that is something that has to—

Mr. MacDonald: I think if someone can answer the question as to whether the whole of James Bay is international waters, or whether—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I can answer this, Mr. Chairman. The boundary of Ontario in the north in James Bay, by statute is the low-water mark in Hudson Bay. There is a dispute proceeding at the moment between various provinces and the federal government about this matter. Our position in Ontario is, of course, that we have no international water boundary, because Hudson Bay is an inland or domestic waterway. Our position is not accepted by the federal government. It has been suggested that a reference should be made to the Supreme Court of Canada to decide this.

There are two elements involved in it really, and that is the situation as far as British Columbia is concerned. Let us take Nova Scotia—Sydney, for instance—where they have been mining five miles out under the sea for many years. The federal government is trying to establish its rights to these offshore mineral rights. Our position in Ontario is that we are not involved because this is not an international waterway.

On the other hand I must say to you that there are certain anomalies in it. For instance, if a new province were to be created out of the Northwest Territories, what I want to know is, would the boundary of that province be the low-water mark in Hudson Bay and James Bay, because this, of course, from an administrative point of view, would be supremely ridiculous. These are the matters which are at present under discussion. In the meantime I think the federal government has gone ahead and granted the drilling rights in Hudson Bay on the assumption that this is its right.

Then there is a body of international legal opinion that says Hudson Bay really is not an international body of water such as the Atlantic or the Pacific oceans, because it is in fact completely surrounded by Canada, with the exception of Hudson Strait which goes out to the north and to the east. Therefore it is not a body of water in which any other nation than Canada could ever establish any rights, so that we do not feel we have a dispute similar to British Columbia or to New Brunswick or Nova Scotia when they are arguing about ocean waters.

There has been a suggestion by the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada that this should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for a legal ruling. This position is being disputed by other provinces for different reasons. We are disputing it as far as Hudson Bay is concerned because we think that Quebec, Manitoba and ourselves have a problem with the federal government that is not a parallel to the problem that British Columbia has. The matter rests there at the moment.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, this is fascinating. I can see the lawyers having a five-year field day resolving that.

However, I want to get back to more mundane matters.

May I ask the hon. Minister a general question, and that may reduce the number of subsidiary questions I have. What has been done, now that we finally have a report on gas storage, submitted by the energy board during the course of the year ending May 4, 1964, with regard to implementing its recommendations?

Mr. Chairman: Would this not be on vote 603?

Mr. MacDonald: We have been talking about leases, under 602.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the question was, what has been done as far—

Mr. MacDonald: What has been done with regard to implementing the recommendations of the gas storage report submitted to you by the Ontario energy board, on May 4, 1964?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Actually there has been nothing done as far as this department is concerned, but I understand it has been accepted by the gas companies and by the land owners. We have met with representatives from the land owners, along with their solicitors, and discussed the report. We have discussed the report with the gas companies, and at the present time I might say that about the one new pool in question, Tecumseh, the land owners and the gas people are negotiating. I understand negotiations are going along very well, and they are working on the formula as set down in that report.

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to get specific, Mr. Chairman. It is interesting to recall the background of this report. Some of us who have been interested in these problems—indeed trying to understand them because they are so very complicated—from 1956 and 1957, will recall that for two or three years all the pleas to come to grips with the inequities in the old leases and the new leases, the playing off of one farmer against another, and so on, got lost in the shuffle of the effort to set up the department that Robert Macaulay was involved in.

For about two years we were engaged in hearings to decide upon the two bills which set up the new department. Then the issue was handed to the Langford committee and the Langford committee no sooner got going on the problem than it was sidetracked on to the pollution of the Great Lakes. It brought in the report on the pollution of the Great Lakes, but it contained nothing on what was one of the important aspects of its original terms of reference. So it went back to do that. A year or two later the committee came back and reported that it had no recommendation—that it really was beyond the committee's competence—I think that was the explanation.

At that point the government handed this Lambton problem over to the Ontario energy board. The board studied it for a year or two and reported on May 4 last year. There are two sections to the report. The first one has to do with payments with respect to storage of gas in designated storage areas, and the first recommendation was that "land owners should, upon the first use of a pool for storage, be paid for their royalty interest in residual gas down to a reasonable abandonment pressure."

Is this now accepted by all concerned so that when a pool is designated the farmers who own the land will be paid an adequate sum for the residual gas that is kept in there as a cushion?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, this is being negotiated right now, and although I cannot give the hon. member a definite answer I understand that both sides are negotiating. I believe the land owners feel that this is of some benefit to them and we are not getting any opposition from the gas companies. As I said before, they are negotiating and they have been carrying on negotiations for six weeks on this recent pool.

Mr. MacDonald: I presume the hon. Minister is referring to Tecumseh?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is right, and this is the last pool.

Mr. MacDonald: What of older storage pools? I have a recollection, and I may be wrong on this, that there were complaints of unpaid amounts on residual gas in pools that had been designated quite some time ago. Have those all been cleaned up in accordance with this principle?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, no. I think that is the Payne pool that the hon. member has reference to. That one is being appealed and being heard on April 21.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us take a look at the second recommendation:

Land owners should, upon use of the pool for storage, be paid for their royalty interest in economically recoverable oil which will not be recovered by reason of the storage operation.

In other words, when the energy board designated a pool, there may have been a number of dollars of oil in there, and the land owner contended that he was entitled to get payment on behalf of this. Presumably it may or may not be extracted. Has this principle been implemented? Is this now going to become a rule that all storage companies will have to abide by?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that it is, as a rule, and it is being considered. I would think before we could answer these questions we will have to wait and see what happens in the negotiations that are going on at the present time between land owners and the gas company.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am puzzled by it. If it is with reference to old pools and it is in the courts, this I can understand, but my original question to the hon. Minister was: It took seven years to get a report, but we finally got a report and recommendations—with regard to any new designation of pools, with regard to any problems that arise in the future, are these principles accepted by the government and laid down so that the company involved knows there is no argument about it, that it has to pay for the residual gas, it has to pay for the oil that is left in the bottom of the storage pool? Is this the case? Has this been laid down as a rule, or will it continue to be an endless argument between the two parties each time it arises?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, this report was laid down as a guide and a guide only. I explained before that, that we had met with the land owners and we had met with the companies and at that time we explained to them that this was a guide and that we were not going to take any action outside of their studying this report. We asked the land owners and the companies to go out and bargain in good faith and see if they could not reach agreement on this, and I believe they are going to reach agreement. If this is the case and this is what happens, I do not think we have to go beyond that if they have a guide to work by and everyone is happy. I think that is the answer to it.

Mr. MacDonald: I suppose if the hon. Minister says these are guide lines, he in effect is placing his stamp of approval on them and he is in effect accepting them. If the parties get into any argument they come to Mr. Crozier and his board to resolve it. Since they originally drew up the report, the parties would be coming back to the creator of the recommendations. This is a neat little closed circuit. Perhaps it is the way to catch the companies, if you can get them in a closed circuit, because nobody has caught them for many years.

However, let me pursue this, because for many, many years people were trying to get the answers to these problems. Recommendation 3 was:

Land owner should receive annual payments in the form of rental for the presence of wells or other surface encumbrances.

And the next one is:

Land owners should receive compensation for surface damage.

Once again, is this a subject for negotiation or do the companies know that they must pay it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It is negotiated but the companies know they must pay. I do not think there has been any argument about that, at least I have not heard it anyway. I think the land owner is quite happy with what he is receiving and there has been no argument there. I think the land owners were more concerned about what happened under the ground than what happened on top of the ground.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps I am appearing to be a little dense, but it would seem to me that when a report comes in, the clear-cut way to handle it would be to say, "These are the rules by which you live." Then there is no negotiation or no argument about it, other than presumably the price. I assume from the answers of the hon. Minister that this, in effect, is what is being done. In effect, he has accepted these recommendations, subject only to negotiations on what price might be arrived at as to the extent of the damage done.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: There is not any problem there except price. If we have the guide lines and we do things in a certain way, then price is the only thing that enters into it.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is right, if we have the guide lines—but for years now we have not—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have the guide lines.

Mr. MacDonald: No. 9 of the recommendations says:

Storage lease agreements and arbitration decisions in respect of storage rights should be subject to renegotiation or redetermination of storage rental payments at stated intervals, with provision for arbitration in the event of disagreement.

And there is a paragraph a little further down which says:

Under all the circumstances the board considers that it would be reasonable to require that the annual storage rental payment, whether fixed by agreement or by arbitration, should be open to renegotiation or redetermination at ten-year intervals at the request of either party.

May I ask the hon. Minister, has that been accepted and, in effect, laid down by the government, or has it tacitly been accepted by both the farmers and the companies that at the end of ten years either of them can reopen the agreement?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I would think it would be accepted by both the companies and the land owners. As you know, we have had many old leases in some of the storage pools. Actually, to me this is a good deal for both, if these things can be brought out and negotiated again after ten years. I think they will go along with that. We have not said they must, but they seem quite happy. As I said, we met with the group of land owners and with the solicitor and they presented a brief to us. As far as I could see at that time, they would be quite happy to go along with this recommendation.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is obviously not a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is correct:

Mr. MacDonald: We have had many arguments before in this House regarding these leases, and we were given a lot of this legal mythology about the sacred nature of a contract and nobody should dare to violate it once it had been established. The hon. Minister and I, as laymen, can accept—without, I trust, getting into too much trouble with the lawyers on the government benches or elsewhere—that this recommendation is correct. I think it is wise that they should be renegotiated. There perhaps may be less need for the renegotiation in the future than there has been in the past, when you had some contracts that were brought out of the attic and were completely unrealistic in terms of the altered circumstances in the world.

The second set of recommendations was with regard to the terms and conditions of gas and oil leases. This goes back, I think, to the question of my friend over here, the hon. member for Kent East. The recommendation in the report was not that there should be a standard lease but rather that there were 18 items which must be included in any lease that was used. In other words, it specified what must go into any lease that might be used.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: A simplified lease.

Mr. MacDonald: I presume it might be simplified; at least both sides should know what goes into it, so it is something of a standard lease.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): The content, but not the form.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right, the content but not the form would be standardized—I think that is a happy choice of phraseology.

The second recommendation was, that the board recommended there be a requirement that where storage rights are included in a production lease, the caption include in bold type: "Reference to storage rights and clauses dealing with storage be separated from those dealing with production." This is a bit of a new problem, as far as I know, but again is this subject to the acceptance of both sides, that storage and production are going to be separated into two leases?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think the new forms now will be accepted by both sides. As you know, some of the old leases included both.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I think I have got comparative satisfaction out of this. I am a little puzzled with the hon. Minister's rather easy approach to it—that it lays down guide lines after all these years—but if it is being accepted by both sides, perhaps that is the best solution.

Mr. McKeough: He is very shy.

Mr. MacDonald: Who is shy?

Mr. McKeough: The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am not shy; this is the way you do business with people. You do not make any hard-and-fast rules.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister has many characteristics but shyness is not one that I had noted up until now.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister how much coal do we import for our energy requirements from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would leave that question until the Hydro vote, I am sure that the hon. member for Muskoka could answer it. I have not the figures right here.

Mr. Troy: Then, sir, what part does the province play in the export of uranium? Or is that federal?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Federal.

Mr. Troy: Then, have you made any advances to the federal government about the possibility—since we have to use a great amount of coal in Ontario for our thermal plant, either from Nova Scotia or the United States—of having some reciprocal agreement with the United States under which we could exchange uranium for US coal?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot answer that question, but I would doubt very much if that would happen. That would be a federal arrangement.

Mr. Troy: I know it would be a federal arrangement, but nevertheless—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: But I might say, and I said this this afternoon, that we in Ontario are concerned about the uranium industry and I think perhaps this is one of the things that helped us make the decision to build the plant that is going to be built at Pickering in the near future.

Mr. Troy: And more.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, let us hope we have more.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, on vote 602, I would like to make reference to the abandoned works fund. I notice under the energy branch there is an appropriation of $50,000 and under the drilling branch, $50,000. The reason I ask this is that I would like to know how this figure is arrived at. Is this just appropriated through the Legislature or is there any rebate per thousand cubic feet of gas that comes from our wells?

Basically, the reason I am asking this is in reference to the Gazette of December 26 in which the regulations on drilling were published. I would like to refer to section 37 on plugging, subsection 2. It states:

The last operator of an abandoned well or the owner of the land in which an abandoned well is situated shall plug the well in accordance with this regulation.

The point I would like to make is that I personally feel this government should receive some money per thousand cubic feet of gas, to go into this fund to cover the total cost of plugging these abandoned wells; either that or the companies that own these wells should be compelled to set a certain percentage of their funds derived from each well aside to do this work so the taxpayers of Ontario do not have to pay for it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, I think most of the problems we are having today are with very old wells which as you know were drilled prior to the last war. I think with our regulations and our inspection today we are not going to run into too many problems with the existing wells.

I understand that we are collecting some money now to offset the problem that the hon. member is discussing, but it is not enough to go back and plug all these old wells that were drilled many years ago. The thing we are dealing with, as I said earlier, happened before the last war; we feel we are now collecting enough money to take care of the wells of today.

Mr. Paterson: Have you any specific percentage of funds that you are collecting for this purpose so our children will not have to pay this? It should be the people who are making the profit off these wells who pay it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand that we are collecting an amount for a well permit. I think it is felt that under our regulations of today it will be ample to take care of these new wells as they are abandoned.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, under this vote on page 49, "Gasoline handling." Any way you look at it, from the safety margin angle, when you see that you have a price range from 47 cents down to 30 cents when there is a gas war—a price spread of possibly 17 to 18 cents—I feel it is time that we should consider a uniform price on gasoline.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The price of gasoline does not come under this vote.

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about the handling of gasoline and the margin of profit in handling gasoline.

Mr. Chairman: The margin of profit has nothing to do with the safety regulations.

Mr. Sargent: I am going to come into the safety angle, Mr. Chairman.

This department recently examined the problem of gasoline price wars—

Mr. Chairman: Price wars do not enter into this.

Mr. Sargent: I am coming into that.

Mr. Chairman: I ask the member to resume his seat.

Mr. Sargent: What action has this department taken, Mr. Chairman, to alleviate the severe hardship imposed on a large number of small service stations in the last six months by the importation into Ontario—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about the handling of gasoline. Has this government discussed this problem with the federal government Department of Trade and Commerce or with the national energy board?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I am going to have to object again on a point of order. This has nothing to do with these estimates; it has nothing to do with this vote. If the hon. member wants to bring this question up—questions of where we trade and how we trade—this might more properly be brought up on the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development, but it simply has nothing to do with this vote.

If we are to discharge the duties of this House, we must proceed in an orderly fashion. It is not a question of not permitting the hon. member to make his point, but he must make it sometime other than under this vote.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sargent: On this vote 602: What is this $33,500 for, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, this is for the licensing and inspection of gasoline handling outlets. That is all it is for and it includes service stations or wherever they handle gasoline to serve the public.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): What is the money taken for?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We must go there and issue a permit and inspect these outlets. We have to have people to do this.

An hon. member: It is for safety purposes.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Safety purposes only! We are interested in prices and I can understand the hon. member's problem, but we are not dealing with it now.

Mr. Sargent: This is another way that rural Ontario is being discriminated against by this government.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I come from rural Ontario and I happen to be a gasoline distributor. The hon. member does not know what he is talking about when he says that.

Mr. Sargent: All right; just listen to this—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I have been in the business for a good many years too.

Mr. Sargent: This is a big subject, but this government never takes a step until it is forced into it. We have great variances in the price of gasoline in this province, sometimes—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

The price of gasoline has been ruled out of order several times tonight. It is definitely out of order.

Mr. Sargent: I want to speak on safety, if I may.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, on vote 602 I notice an item, "Energy Studies." I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us what studies have been completed in the past year.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. leader of the Opposition what vote he is on now—vote 602?

Mr. Thompson: Vote 602, "Energy Studies," on page 51 of the hon. Minister's estimates.

An hon. member: Vote 602? What year?

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. member: Vote 602 is on pages 48 and 49.

Mr. Thompson: Let me put it this way: Last year there were "Energy Studies." What has happened? Have they been abandoned like the old oil wells, or something?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am told that we have only two people now and the study is under the energy branch.

Mr. Thompson: What do they study? That is what I am after.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand they did some economic energy studies which have been discontinued. We could do a lot of studying as far as energy is concerned, but it happens to be in different areas than this.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the warm smile from the hon. Minister as he brushes aside the fact of the need for study, but I suggest that surely he would be making some long-term studies in connection with the requirements of energy.

For example, in 1970 the percentage of different uses for energy. Does the hon. Minister know what will be required by Ontario in 1970?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, this study comes under The Department of Economics and Development. We are not spending any money on studies outside of going along with the gas companies. They spend many dollars in exploration and drilling trying to get wells produced; but the actual study of energy uses comes under The Department of Economics and Development.

Mr. Thompson: Does the hon. Minister know if The Department of Economics and Development is doing a study on the requirement for energy in Ontario in 1970?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am sure, sir, that I cannot answer that, but I would think that they would be.

Mr. Thompson: I would think that the hon. Minister's department would be interested, for example, in what percentage of the total is expected to be met from coal, petroleum, natural gas, hydro, or nuclear fuels—what percentage of the total will be supplied from Ontario resources. Could the hon. Minister, or his department, answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I could give the figures as they are today. In fact, I gave the percentages this afternoon for the different types of energy.

Mr. Thompson: I am thinking of 1970, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I think that would be a difficult question to answer now, because as we get into nuclear energy or power this setup can change. It has been changing very rapidly lately; use of propane and all these things could enter into an answer as to what percentage would go to each different energy source.

Mr. Thompson: I would suggest that if there is not such a forecast it is very hard to have a sense of direction from the point of view of the hon. Minister's department. I would hope that if The Department of Economics and Development is not doing such a study, the hon. Minister would encourage them to do it for him. It would seem to me that this is most important information for the hon. Minister to have in order to be able to plan ahead in this most vital subject.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We could furnish a forecast up until 1970 on the different energies.

Mr. Thompson: The point I am making is that there are two economists within the hon. Minister's department and I would think that there must be a number of questions in this area of energy resources. I would hope that the hon. Minister would be raising these questions, if he is using The Department of Economics and Development to get his answers. One of my real concerns about this government is that they do not look ahead in connection with the natural resources they have. How many resources will be used up within a certain period. The hon. Minister is not doing this with either human resources or natural resources, and because of this he will suddenly wake up to a crisis situation and then establish a crash programme.

That is why I suggest that planning—"a stitch in time saves nine," is an old proverb—is necessary and it would be very helpful if such planning is done in connection with the department.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say that as far as planning in energy is concerned, I have been connected with the department for just a year, but I think it would be difficult to find fault as far as planning in energy is concerned in Ontario. I think that if the hon. member thinks of the Hydro story in Ontario and the nuclear story in Ontario; if he will think back to just a year ago, we had to negotiate with the federal government to get this one going. I think it was a very forward step, so I do not think we should be criticized for our programmes as they have been instituted in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: Let me raise a couple of questions: How much energy comes from coal shipped in from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: This question was asked by the hon. member for Nipissing and at that time I told him that when the Hydro estimates were up that the hon. member for Muskoka could answer it.

Mr. Thompson: He will be able to answer it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: He will be able to answer it. I am sorry, I got the impression he would not.

Mr. Newman: The previous Minister of Energy Resources mentioned other sources of energy. He specifically mentioned at one time the gas turbines, and he also mentioned the use of the thermocouple. Has this hon.

Minister anything additional to add concerning the possible uses of both gas turbine and thermocouples as sources of energy?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the answer is no, I am sorry, we have not. We are dealing with the types of energy that we know will work and are working well at the present time.

Mr. Newman: Is the hon. Minister encouraging any of the universities to undertake studies as to the practicability of the two sources I have mentioned as energy?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the answer is no, not through this department.

Mr. Newman: May I suggest to him that he possibly undertake some support of this nature or suggest to the people in Ottawa that they undertake studies in the two fields I have mentioned?

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I did not have a copy of the hon. Minister's presentation this afternoon. I did not know if he mentioned the Trans-Canada pipeline. Are they going to build another line in the expansion of the Trans-Canada pipeline?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, there is an application before the national energy board right now regarding this matter and this is a national energy board decision.

Mr. Troy: What steps is this government taking to see if it is at all possible to have that pipeline through the province of Ontario and thus add to employment and industry within the province?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I might say that the application before the national energy board right now is for the pipeline to go through the southern route—this is through the northern part of the United States—and if that application is granted I am afraid that this is the way the line will be built.

Mr. Troy: Have you taken any objection to it?

Mr. Thompson: Are you making any objection to that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Sargent: Why not? I think this is very glaring. What this would mean to our construction industry, Mr. Minister, would be fantastic for us, and I think it behooves the hon. Minister on behalf of the government to move in this direction. It is Canadian sponsored, by the government.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It is Canadian, it is federal, yes. This is Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: Is there any reason why the hon. Minister cannot get going on it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say that we have lots of gas in northern Ontario, and they need gas in southern Ontario. This is not a decision to be made by the Ontario government. It is for the national energy board to make this decision. They are moving gas from one of the western provinces and if they can sell some in the northern states and give us gas here at a price cheaper than we could get it the other way, I do not think we should complain about it.

Mr. Sargent: I think if they are going to double the capacity in Ontario we should insist that it go through Ontario and not through the states.

Mr. McKeough: Why?

Mr. Sargent: Think what it would mean to our construction industry! You know what it meant to us on the initial launching of the Trans-Canada pipeline, and now we should insist that we maintain our autonomy and hold on to that gain of construction. I think the hon. Minister should answer that for the House. This is very important to us.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer it. This application is before the national energy board, it is not before our board.

Mr. Sargent: Well, what is the hon. Minister doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, no, this was a joint arrangement because we needed gas in northern Ontario. We have lots of gas in northern Ontario at the present time, but we need gas in southern Ontario. If we can get gas cheaper, providing the application is granted and they can sell gas in the northern United States and we can get it at our southern borders cheaper, I think hon. members would go along with this. This is what we are trying, is it not, to entice industry and the things we want here. We want cheap energy, and if this is going to help I do not see why we should oppose it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister mentioned a moment ago that one of the reasons for building the atomic plant east of Toronto—where it is going to be located—was to use energy that was actually produced in Ontario in the form of uranium. I would like to ask him if the uranium required for that plant would already be processed and ready at Atomic Energy of Canada and in their possession, or would it mean that it would still be in the ground at Elliot Lake or Bancroft, and would in fact further the industry there in some way?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has posed a question that might be very difficult to answer because I understand there is a certain amount of this uranium stockpiled now. But if it is sold out of Canada at the time this plant is ready to go into production, this could mean that we would be actively mining to produce the fuel to go into this plant. You can see in the overall picture it is going to help out in uranium because we are going to use so many tons every year, and we hope to increase the capacity of this plant, whereas we would be using a fair amount of uranium.

Mr. Nixon: I think that this is bound up with what the hon. leader of the Opposition had to say about long-range planning. The fact that we evidently can produce electricity economically, comparatively economically, through atomic reactors, is really a most marvellous breakthrough. I realize that the basic responsibility for the operation of the uranium mines and selling uranium and so forth is a federal responsibility, but it seems to me that this department should bear the provincial load of responsibility rather than The Department of Economics and Development, that is for seeing to it that the facilities for the production of energy are going to be made available to other countries by Ontario. I was wondering if there is any information that the hon. Minister is aware of now that would indicate that the market for uranium is going to expand in the near future.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I would say, yes, there is an indication. As you know, Ontario or Canada has produced a plant and it is being installed in India at the present time. I was along with a group that went to Japan last year and they are interested in our type of reactor, although they have two different types there right now. I think it is the hope of the governments of Canada and Ontario that we might persuade them to try our type of heavy water plant, and that will create another market for natural uranium. This is not the processed uranium, it is natural uranium, plus the capacity that we could have here. We have three plants now. We have one completed and furnishing power, another one nearing completion. Then to step to a plant this large I think that we in Ontario have shown good faith that we are interested in this type of plant. I think one big question mark now is what is the life of these plants? I think that is the only question and this you have to learn through experience. We are hoping—and Hydro engineers tell me that if this plant lives up to what they expect it will do that it will be the cheapest source of energy that we have ever had in Ontario. But the big question mark is, is it going to last 20, 30 or 40 years?

Mr. Nixon: I remember listening in this House to the former Minister hold out the very attractive possibility that the research that would be done in Ontario in the development of these plants could eventually result in a package deal that could be presented to the nations of the world that did not have energy of their own. Here is an Ontario-designed and made and fuelled reactor that much like the hon. Minister's old Delco plant could be provided on a grand scale around the world. I wonder what his view on this is, and if research along these lines is taking place to provide such a package, besides of course the reactors that we have here.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would say that this is already happening. Our type of plant is a more expensive plant. The initial cost is more expensive.

Mr. Nixon: Because of what, the heavy water?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Because of the heavy water and design. After it is built we do not have to use enriched uranium, it is much cheaper to operate. Again it goes right back to the point I said a minute ago, it depends on the life of this plant and we have not had any experience yet.

Mr. Nixon: Like selling Cadillacs.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know, but we have not had experience enough, and this is a problem that came up in Japan last year. To build in Ontario a 1000 megawatt plant costs about $266 million, and with a boiling water plant to build in Ontario would be about $150 million. So you see the difference in cost right there in the first place.

I think we have practically proved now that our plant is a more efficient plant. It is doing a better job, but we have not had enough years experience to say you can write off $266 million as compared with $150 million and make money on it in 20 or 30 years. In Japan, they write off their plants in 17 years. So when you start amortizing 17 years and that extra money, this is where you see the difference in cost.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. leader of the NDP said you certainly were not shy, and I am here to say that you are a good salesman. I think you know that you can probably sell more Chevs than Cadillacs. We want to produce one of the best plants possible, but it seems to me that in these countries the question of the capital expenditure is all important. We should be in the market with the type of plant that we would be able to provide on the scale that the former Minister held out so attractively to us. I would hope that the department is taking all the steps possible to do that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Of course, this was not developed by the Ontario government or by Hydro. This is developed as you know, through the efforts of the federal government, and actually I think we have a good plant. We just have to give it enough years and experience then I think perhaps we can prove that we have the better concept, maybe right here. From what I have heard, talking to the engineers in Japan where they have both types, both the other concepts have not proved out too well. But again, we have not had experience enough to say here is a plant of this size and we can guarantee it will operate for 30 years. This is the experience that we have to gain as soon as we get this larger plant in operation at Douglas Point.

Mr. Nixon: It will not take 30 years to find out.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, it will not take 30 years, but we can check it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on vote 602, recently we had a serious explosion in the town of Aylmer. As a result of that, has the energy board come up with some firm recommendations? You can supply them later, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said I can supply this information for him later. You are posing a tough question right here, because we have certain recommendations now, and as you know the gas was being transported. There are two reasons—I would not want to say. It could have been neglect of a driver, or a lot of things could have happened. But our regulations as far as the transporting of gas is concerned, and—I think they were followed. But there happens to be three departments mixed up in this, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Newman: Well, there is still some connection with the apparatus at the back of the truck carrying it not being sufficiently protected, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the valves were concealed and within our regulations. But when you are pushing—which you are not supposed to do on a truck of that type—when it is pushed and the bumpers jump, well you can understand with the horsepower and the weight behind you, that something would happen.

Mr. Newman: Quite true, Mr. Minister, but there still should be some regulation to guarantee that an accident like that could not happen again—possibly a reinforced bumper or something of that sort.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think this would be nice, and I would agree, if you could guarantee anything against accidents. After all, it is a dangerous fuel. People want it, it has to be moved on the highway. How do you guarantee against an accident? I do not know. I guess you would have to say we are not going to move it from here to there.

Mr. Newman: I can understand that, Mr. Minister. Maybe signing on the back of the truck, such as in the carrying of explosives.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, we were at Douglas Point yesterday, and that plant of atomic energy is going to cost $81.5 million. I asked many questions pertaining to that unit. Is it being paid for by the federal and provincial governments, and if so, I would like to know how it is being financed. Is it by both governments or is the provincial government alone going to pay for it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, actually it is being financed now by the federal government. When it goes in production, then they turn it over to Ontario Hydro and we pay them for power and they are reimbursed that way. This is the first plant here where we have had joint financing—the new one that is going in at Pickering.

Mr. Bukator: Then at the moment it is going to be wholly paid for by the federal government, then you will reimburse them as you collect the money from the power?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Right.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I just want to come back again to this point of your energy studies. I must say as I have listened to the questions of my hon. colleagues, and also the very dramatic things which could happen in connection with energy, and a lot of questions about whether certain types of energy sources will work out or not in the length of time and so on, it seems extraordinary to me that you have abandoned this. It was a very small outfit, your energy studies section. Is this because you do not want to have any research done in your department and you are going to use other departments to do it? Or is it because these people were not doing the job satisfactorily? Why did you abandon this? Are you using some outside sources for research?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I explained before that research, as research, is done by The Department of Economics and Development. We have a lot of field people out on the road, and they are doing a lot of things at different times and although we are not paying for research, they are bringing us back the answers that we want as far as energy is concerned in the particular fields we are interested in. Hydro has people. The gas and oil companies have people. All these things are being researched by different departments.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry to labour this, but what do these fellows do in energy studies for which we voted $36,000 in the year ending 1965?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am told that one is a statistician keeping track of energy returns, and the other one is doing internal studies regarding gasoline handling and the energy.

Mr. Thompson: Where are they? As far as the estimates go, they just disappeared off the map. Are they still doing these studies?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am told they are in salaries in vote 602.

Mr. Thompson: You include them under salaries? You say you are using Economics and Development. What studies have you asked Economics and Development to do for your department?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am told that we are working out a programme now with The Department of Economics and Development.

Mr. Thompson: Then you are suggesting that as of yet you have not asked them to do anything. Am I correct on that? As yet you have had no research done by Economics and Development?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is right, by that department, yes.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask, sir, who is working out with Economics and Development the research that is going to be done?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The deputy Ministers are working towards a study.

Mr. Thompson: And have they got any blueprint that we could see in connection with what they are working at?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I have not seen any blueprint as yet, but if I can get a blueprint from them tomorrow or later, I will be very glad to have the hon. leader of the Opposition down so we could have a look at it.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, with due respect to you—and I appreciate you have taken over this portfolio—I will be very interested to see the blueprint. Perhaps I could just ask this final question. How many times has the deputy Minister met with the head of the research division of The Department of Economics and Development in order to discuss this blueprint?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question. You know, the deputy Ministers and Ministers on this side of the House are meeting so often that it would be hard for me to keep track of them since I have been Minister. We are meeting all the time, working in the interests of the people of the province.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate your efforts, but in view of the fact he is right beside you, you might ask him to tell you.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am sure he would not be able to keep track of them. We are too busy to keep track of them.

Mr. Thompson: Well, that is just the problem as far as I am concerned. You find it difficult to keep track of a number of things.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I do not think so.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister first started to explain to me that The Department of Economics and Development was doing research, and then when we pin him down we find that he is going to be working toward the fact that he is doing research. I think if he will check in Hansard when we started to raise these questions, he will find he said that The Department of Economics and Development was looking after research. Now we find he is hoping it will be looked after. There is quite a difference.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in the inspection branch, one of the big complaints heard quite often is in the inspection or even in the installation of energy equipment. It could be gas into the home, it could be the oil pipeline into the home, it could be hydro into the home; an individual has to obtain a permit from the municipality. Quite often municipalities will not allow an individual to work; say if he got a permit from town "A," he could not instal without getting a permit from the town "B" authorities.

Is the province considering a province-wide permit for the installation and the inspection of these various types of energy installations: gas, oil, hydro?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I think the hon. member is talking of licensing or—

Mr. Newman: Yes, it could be licensing.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: —or an inspector, or an installer who could move from one town to the other in the province—they could go any place, we do not mind, but there are bylaws in certain areas which require licensing under a municipality. As far as the province is concerned, an installer from Toronto could go to Kingston or vice versa. I do not think we regulate that. It is a bylaw of the municipality, as I understand it.

Mr. Newman: The department is not considering, then, having a uniform licence to instal and controlling it provincially rather than having the individual municipality control it. As it is now, an individual living in the town of Riverside has to obtain a permit to do any installation in the city of Windsor.

Now why should there not be a provision for that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Is this electricity or gas?

Mr. Newman: It could be both.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, which is it?

Mr. Newman: Take electricity first and take gas next!

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, we have nothing to do with the licensing of electrical people, but gas fitters have a provincial licence. The regulations are just the same, regardless of the part of Ontario you are in. Nonetheless, there are municipal bylaws with which they must comply. Of course, it has nothing to do with the actual licensing as far as the province is concerned.

Mr. Newman: Then a gas installer has a provincial certificate, has he?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: He is licensed under the provincial government, yes.

Mr. Newman: How about hydro installers? —I should say electrical, rather?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have hydro inspection, but we do not have any electricians licensed under The Energy Act.

Mr. Newman: It is not the same as with gas—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Worton: Can you tell me, through you, Mr. Chairman, were there any firms that had their licence lifted for standards in regard to gas appliance manufacturers last year?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I did take it he said manufacturers, is that right?

Mr. Worton: To get this clear, Mr. Chairman, I understand there was one firm that put out a number of furnaces in Ontario and they did not measure up to the length of time for which they were guaranteed. They had to have their heat chambers replaced and I think in a number of cases the people had to make good for it even though the furnaces were worn out before their time. I understood this firm was supposed to have gone into bankruptcy and these people were left with the cost of replacing the furnace. I am wondering if this manufacturer's authority for building furnaces has been withdrawn?

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Minister, could I follow up on this question for more information?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I understand—and the hon. member just mentioned this—that the firm went bankrupt so that would automatically withdraw any permit to manufacture—

Mr. Worton: This is the thing; I understand this firm is still putting out heat chambers as replacements and that it has approval for doing this. They are not replacing the whole furnace, but are replacing chambers.

In a number of cases, I understand, people have been taken the second time. They are not allowed to make the whole unit or the whole complete furnace, but they are allowed to replace chambers. A number of people in my city, and I know in Galt and even in Toronto, have been taken by this firm for a considerable amount of money.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, if you would not mind leaving that with us, I think we will have to check into this matter.

Mr. Worton: I will give the hon. Minister the name of the firm.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: If the hon. member does that I will be very happy to check it for him.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, under this same vote and question, I had 32 signed documents in the area of the town of Leamington on this very problem. I would like to read a comment from the Windsor Star in this particular regard.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Which paper?

Mr. Paterson: The Windsor Star.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Do they always give a good report?

Mr. Paterson: An accurate report. I have one other report I would like to read, too. The reason I raise this is that I feel this department should set some standards:

When it comes to buying household appliances the consumer is often a sitting duck. Consider the plight of 32 homeowners who bought a certain make of gas furnace in and around Leamington this past year. According to one man, 30 of the furnaces have split combustion chambers and are no longer safe to be kept in operation. In another part of the county a high pressure and probably Toronto-based outfit—and so on and so forth.

About the only thing a consumer can do is to buy from a reputable dealer who is in business locally and sells only approved merchandise which he will stand behind come what may.

Unfortunately, in this instance it was the gas company itself which had the exclusive franchise for these furnaces in our area. I understand there are hundreds of them between Essex county and London.

Now, the information that I received when I followed up in this regard was that this firm has expanded its operation in the household appliance field, but that it dropped furnaces completely when these difficulties arose.

I have here a letter I would like to read into the record. This was circulated by the gas company in my area and was sent to me by the former president of the Conservative organization in the town of Leamington, and

I would like to give him a hand. This is dated April 16, 1964:

Today we have inspected your—

I will not name the furnace inspected——and have discovered that the heat exchanger is cracked. Although these exchangers are guaranteed to you by the manufacturer for ten years, we have experienced difficulty in obtaining replacements for our customers. Because the guarantee is in your name, may we suggest that you write or phone direct to—such-and-such a firm in such-and-such a town. It is not based in western Ontario, thank goodness!

—stating the model and serial number of your furnace and asking that they ship you a new heat exchanger.

Now, people in my riding have tried to do this and have not been able to get them and they have been forced to pay several hundred dollars in each case to put in complete new furnaces. I think this is a black mark on this particular gas company. It is certainly a reflection on the standards in this province, that are not lived up to.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, all gas appliances are tested and certified before they are sold. Actually, I think your question is on the life of the appliances.

Mr. Paterson: These were less than two years old; some less than a year. They all cracked.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am afraid, sir, that we would not have any way to compel anybody to a test on performance before they could sell it. We approve it as a safe appliance to be sold on the market at that date. It is the same, no matter what you buy. You hope that you are buying something that is going to function for a while; but if something happens to it, well I guess that is the chance you have to take. But at the date it is sold, it is approved as a safe appliance.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a bit of a pattern emerging here. A year ago I brought to the attention of the House this very matter of a great many furnaces of this kind, where the chamber at the top had cracked after a period of time. I gave the Minister at that time the name of the company and was assured, as the hon. Minister has assured us now, that it is a very difficult thing to get at.

The problem here is that these furnaces are generally installed by the builders. The house is sold to the ultimate customer who is going to live there and then within a year something happens to the furnace. Then he cannot replace the part of it that is faulty. It seems now that company has perhaps changed its name, we do not know. Certainly it has moved out of my riding. I have had no trouble there within the last year, but now this same trouble is popping up in other parts of the province.

I do not know how we can get at this. But here is, I think, a dangerous situation, particularly in gas furnaces. It is dangerous because of the nature of gas. It is also a financial hazard for the people who are buying houses and are installing this kind of equipment.

I do not know, as I say, how we get at this, but surely there must be some way that a potentially dangerous form of energy such as this, can be contained, and this kind of activity on the part of companies can be curtailed.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say I agree with the hon. member, but again, how do you get at it? If it passes inspection at the date it is certified, I do not know how or who, after certification, is to say whether metal fatigue, or whatever happens to these things, that it just does not perform in the way it was intended to.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister, if the company is putting out a product with a ten-year guarantee, and they do not live up to the guarantee, is there an obligation on every single purchaser to take the company to court each individual time?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, I do not know what is in the guarantee. Maybe they said it would produce heat for ten years, but they did not say under what circumstances. The guarantees would have to be looked at.

Mr. MacDonald: It said for ten years.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, surely when they know that this certain company is putting in furnaces that last two years or less, the government will stop giving its okay to the furnaces that go in, in the future. This has become widespread in a certain part of the province, and I know, when I have been going into the facts on some other products, that this problem of the furnaces has come up. I have not seen so much of it in this area, but certainly it exists in the province, and the government must know that a certain brand is very poor.

Why is it they continue to allow them to operate? Are you going to have to wait until a furnace blows up or somebody is hurt, and then there is a big noise and scandal about it, before you do something? This is what obviously is going to happen if you let it continue, as the hon. member for Essex South has said.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, actually all we in the energy department are doing is checking for safety.

Mr. Trotter: That is exactly what I mean.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: All right. Look at the performance in the last year and tell me how many have blown up. I have not heard of any.

Mr. Trotter: I know, but this is safety. Do you have to wait until one blows up?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, you tell me that so many of them have failed; but tell me of one that has blown up in the last year.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): He cannot do it, he is blubbing.

Mr. MacDonald: So he is blubbing, and you are blabbing.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Are you going to answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Give us some examples.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: What are you talking about?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You start worrying about collecting fees from workers to support your party. You stick to that.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: You stop collecting from the distilleries. We will get into something if you want to.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, we will look into your situation.

Mr. MacDonald: Go ahead. Look what you are getting from the distilleries.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You talk about the discrimination that exists in this province, and you are the man that is directing it.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the Union Gas make inspection of their customers' appliances. They came across this special type of furnace with a bad chamber, at least one that had failed. They inspected maybe 20 or 30 in my city, and they found them all to be inferior. The company discontinued making the furnace, that is the complete furnace, but they still were allowed—I think you have to approve them for standards, that is for safety standards—they discontinued making the furnace, but they still made the replacement chamber. They went to the individual and said if you use it for two years we will allow you that and you will pay the difference. But then, in some cases, the second chamber went. Should these people not have to be inspected for the chambers they make rather than the complete furnace? The first time it may be fine, but in some cases it is a second time, and people are still being taken on this.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I do not know the actual furnace he is talking about. In fact, I never heard the brand name mentioned, but I would think if this is recurring in the same company's furnace, it would be very difficult for them to get it approved.

There are enough good manufacturers I would think manufacturing appliances today in the province of Ontario—approved appliances—that the buying public surely can get with a company that will back up the product they are building. I know many of the better manufacturers are manufacturing furnaces.

Mr. Worton: These were sold through Union Gas and I think they are a pretty reputable firm.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I think they would be, yes, and Union Gas would back it up, would they not?

Mr. Trotter: No, Union Gas does not.

Mr. Worton: Your department knows about it, Mr. Minister, because I called them, and I think our chamber of commerce dealt with the Better Business Bureau down here. Your department certainly knows about this.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We know about it, but, as I say, I do not actually know the brand name of the furnace.

Mr. Paterson: I will be very pleased to tell you the brand name, Mr. Minister. It is Switson Furnaces of Switson Industries Limited of Welland, Ontario. This was the one in my area that caused so much trouble. There were 30 that went bad in less than two years out of 32 that were sold by the gas company in my town.

Vote 602 agreed to.

Vote 603 agreed to.

On vote 604:

Mr. Young: On vote 604, Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with the matter of conservation. We have heard a great deal in this House about our present situation regarding pure water and polluted water in this province, and in the waters surrounding it. We are going to hear something, I understand, about the Harricanaw situation, and the possibility of getting more water in the Great Lakes. I think we were all rather delighted to see in the current issue of the Financial Post the fact that the Lake Superior level is about two and a half inches now above that at this time last year. Huron and Michigan are five inches higher. Erie is two inches higher, and the hope is that Lake Ontario will shortly be somewhat higher, as far as lake levels are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could deal with lake levels under OWRC, not under the conservation vote?

Mr. Young: All right. I simply did this as a preliminary to what I want to say, not so much the lake levels, as the content of the water in the lakes and the water in the province which, I think, does come under this conservation vote.

During the past period I think there has been a great deal of discussion about the quality of the water in our lakes and in our rivers. Last year, in the Globe and Mail of August 19, we saw this:

Every year more citizens are asking the government commissions, "when are you people going to clean up the algae off our beaches?"

The water in our Great Lakes is changing and not for the better. Dr. George Langford, director of the University of Toronto Great Lakes institute, was shocked to find a patch of algae on the shores of Batchawana Bay on Lake Superior. He easily traced the source of fertilization, an open sewer dumping raw waste into the bay.

And then:

Research, we are told, is spurred by United States health department's pronouncement about Lake Michigan.

Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Surely this comes under the OWRC vote rather than the conservation authorities. I think most of us know what we are talking about in this area, but this is not the work of the conservation authority. On a point of order, sir, pollution is under the control of the water resources commission.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, is this discussion out of order at this point? If it is, I am perfectly willing to abide by your decision and bring this up under another vote.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would appreciate it if the hon. member would bring it up under the OWRC vote, because pollution does come directly under their department and their people will be here at that time.

Mr. Young: There is one other matter then. I would like to ask if the conservation authorities come under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Oh, yes.

Mr. Young: They would come here? Fine! For the life of me, I find it difficult to distinguish between the work of the conservation authorities in cleaning up our rivers, and the work of the Ontario water resources commission. The two are tied so closely together that they are, I think, indistinguishable. However, I am quite willing to leave this until a later point in the vote.

But I do want to bring before the House a problem which is faced by our metropolitan conservation authority in particular, and by other authorities across the province. As we all realize, the matter of open space is becoming a vexed one in our urban centres. We like to preserve as much open space as we can, a space with trees and wildlife and streams, a place where people can go for picnics and breathe the open air and generally enjoy themselves.

But our problem has been that as our urban centres have grown more and more, the difficulty has emerged in preserving open space. Now, in Metropolitan Toronto we have been fortunate, or we are fortunate, in having the river valleys, some of them very broad, some more narrow, but those river valleys do present a unique opportunity in this area to hold space which is open and free of building. So our conservation authority, in co-operation with Metropolitan Toronto and with the various municipalities in this area, has been attempting to hold the open space for the future. But the great problem has been that building has been going forward at a faster rate than the provincial and federal governments have been willing to admit in making general financial arrangements.

A couple of years ago—I think it was around 1961—some agreements were drawn up relating to this problem between the federal, provincial and the local authorities. In the metropolitan area, the authority exists to serve the people in about a thousand square miles, and this population continues to grow at a very rapid rate—about 65,000 people per year we are told. It now stands at something like 1.8 million. During the past year, almost two million people made use of the various conservation areas that have been set up. I am quoting now from the authority brief:

Although the authority is acquiring land at a fair rate, the pace is none too quick. We are told now that the population of the region will be four million by the year 2000—

That is a long look ahead, certainly, but we have to plan that far ahead in this kind of field.

When one realizes that the authority is a major public land assembly agency in the Metro region, it becomes apparent that our objective [the objective of the metropolitan conservation authority] of 34,000 acres by 1980 is not too ambitious. But the problem here in acquiring the land is primarily one of finance.

I am not standing here tonight to hold any brief for the Metropolitan Toronto conservation authority in many ways. There may have been some inefficiency here, and there certainly has been a great deal of public outcry against their methods of expropriation, their methods of settlement for land, just as there has been in many other areas in the settlement of other conservation authorities. But there is one problem that this authority faces which is unique in this province, and that is the tremendous problem of rapid growth. Subdivisions are being spawned at a fantastic rate. New people are moving in. And the kind of financial arrangements that have been worked out in the 1961 agreement just are not adequate for this authority to acquire land as rapidly as it needs to acquire it. The brief says:

It should be noted that under the provisions of the original plan as submitted to the senior governments, the authority was seeking grants of 75 per cent of the total cost of all the works.

And if that had been granted, then much of their problem could have been alleviated:

But the federal government agreed to participate in the plan for the large dams and reservoirs and channel improvements on condition that the authority and the province would complete all aspects of the plan, including small dams and reservoirs and flood plain land acquisitions.

It is this last one where the great problem emerges—the flood plain land acquisitions. Today, the subdividers along the river valleys are asking the authority if they are ready to buy out the land that has been designated as greenbelt. All the authority can say in this situation is, "We just haven't the money, we can't make the financial arrangements to buy out the land which is now offered for sale."

Let us remember that unless this land is acquired now, it can well be lost for all time, and other uses may be made of it than open space for the purposes of the general public.

Or, it may well be that if we have to buy this land, five, 10, 15 years from now, as the financial ability of the authority catches up, then we may have to pay much higher prices. We certainly will have to pay much higher prices than today. I would like to bring these words again from the brief:

Because of the rapid growth of Metropolitan Toronto, and the accompanying subdivision development, lands have become available in flood plains much faster than could have been anticipated. It has been necessary to acquire a great deal of these valley lands to maintain the greenbelt zoning, and to keep faith with the municipalities who zoned them in this way. In addition, land costs are rising rapidly. The result of the combined effect noted above has been that the authority is under heavy pressure in the land acquisition part of the flood control plan. For these, and other reasons, your authority has requested the provincial government to assist in certain ways.

One, of course, is that the 75 per cent would be granted by the province, rather than expecting the federal government to carry through—that is, the 75 per cent which is granted for major works would be granted for the flood plain acquisition as well.

The other solution to this problem could well be that the same treatment could be afforded the authority as is afforded in the building of the small dams and farm ponds. The authority could be underwritten by this provincial government, the land could be acquired and paid for. This could be an interest-free loan for a period of years. Then the authority could begin to pay it back over a period of years. And that period of years might be extended because of this particular situation.

So, Mr. Chairman, I bring this matter before the government, and I hope that this can be looked at very, very carefully because there is no question that in an emergency situation like this, these lands should be bought immediately, and the authority should not have to wait for several years before it can deal with the people.

The other aspect, of course, is that there are great numbers of people today in the Eglinton flats and up and down our river valleys, who are looking for quick settlements of their problems. They do not know where they can go and buy other homes because they cannot get the money for their present homes. These people can be dealt with quickly and their problems can be solved, and certainly very great problems for the conservation authority can be overcome.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this matter can get speedy attention from the hon. Minister's department and from the government, so that this problem can be met and can be solved. I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment in this respect.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has touched on a problem that has been very much to the front, at least during the past year.

I would say at the present time that this is giving us much concern and I think it is of some concern to the conservation authority. At the present time we just do not have the wherewithal to deal with this problem. A committee is going to be set up to look into The Conservation Act and land acquisitions and some of these problems we are having today. It will come in with some recommendations which I would hope will take care of this situation.

Mr. Young: How soon might we expect this committee to act, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We should hope that they would have a report in to be dealt with in the next sitting of this Legislature.

Mr. Young: So that there will be no relief as far as this year is concerned to the Metropolitan Toronto conservation authority? You see no chance for any relief at this point?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: In some of the areas there will be relief, because I think the metropolitan authority have certain moneys to purchase certain properties, but this is not so in the overall plan in the conservation areas in the province.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, one of our great problems in northern Ontario in the establishment of conservation authorities is the fact that we have so many unorganized townships. I know we tried to set up a conservation authority in the Sturgeon River watershed some years ago, but we had a great problem in getting the municipalities to agree to it because of the fact that some 90-odd unorganized townships were involved and of course no revenue comes from these unorganized townships. There is no one, or very few anyway, to contribute to the cost of the authority. When this branch was under the Minister of Planning and Development, when Mr. Nickle was a member of this House, I discussed it with him. Later on, when the branch became part of The Department of Lands and Forests, I discussed it with the Minister of those days, who is now the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner); but we could not get anywhere.

Certainly we are concerned with flooding in our areas. But I say again, with so many unorganized townships it is quite a problem. I noticed just the other day, when we were at the meeting of the water resources commission, we were told that the government of Ontario is going to accept the full cost of a pipeline from Lake Huron to service the London area. Is that correct? Well then, if they are going to do that, they can service the people of this area—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, do not forget that we are building the pipeline but we are going to sell the city of London water, as well as the municipalities between the intake and the city.

Mr. Troy: The ordinary share of the cost would be theirs. In regard to conservation authorities, the government pays so much and the municipalities pay so much. So is there any possibility at all of getting any help if we want to establish conservation authorities in the northern part of this province? Will the government give certain grants for these unorganized townships? Is there any possibility of getting that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say that is the first time I had heard that there were some areas with unorganized townships where they wanted conservation authorities. There are different programmes under the government where a municipality or a group of municipalities get assistance for a reservoir, but the hon. member is talking about floods.

Mr. Troy: Yes, I am talking about flood control on the great system that comes down from Lake Timiskaming and eventually into the Sturgeon River, into Lake Nipissing and then down the French River to Georgian Bay. Also in our area we have the Wanapitei watershed further west.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member, is this Crown land we are talking about?

Mr. Troy: Oh yes.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: This is Crown land. Well, it would come under The Department of Lands and Forests. These things are taken care of under that department.

Mr. Troy: Would they pay the shot then for any works?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I think the hon. member better pose that question to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts). I understand they do work of this type through The Department of Lands and Forests, and sometimes they have it under The Department of Public Works, in building dams in certain areas where it is Crown lands.

Mr. Troy: I must disagree with the hon. Minister. I think it is not up to me to pose that question to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests. The hon. Minister under whose department the branch of conservation authorities comes is the one who should pose the question.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It is not a conservation area though, it is Crown land.

Mr. Troy: Pardon, sir?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The hon. member just told me that it is Crown land, and it cannot be a conservation area if it is Crown land. Crown lands come under The Department of Lands and Forests.

Mr. Troy: How is it possible? The mouth of the Sturgeon River flows into Lake Nipissing. There are municipalities on Lake Nipissing. Do you mean to tell me we cannot get any conservation authority just because the source of it is in Crown land?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: But the hon. member is talking about the city of North Bay. North Bay and any other two municipalities can ask that a conservation area be formed; and as far as we are concerned we will not turn them down, if this is what they want.

Mr. Troy: But the great problem was that the dams and all the works would be up in the areas which are Crown land. Who is going to pay for those, the municipalities alone? You see, that is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, who are we protecting? The people down in the municipalities. I know we have to build it on Crown land, but nevertheless it is for the protection of the people down in the municipalities. If they want it they can form a conservation area and we will get permission from The Department of Lands and Forests to build dams, if it is a flood condition.

Mr. Troy: Will the government pay for the dams?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We will pay our portion, yes.

Mr. Troy: Thank you very much. I am glad to hear that answer, that you will pay your share. The officials of the city of North Bay were the ones who really felt they were not their brother's keeper. Other areas could be flooded and so on, but apparently they did not worry about that.

But I am glad to know now that if there is a conservation authority and if works have to be built in areas that are Crown land that the province of Ontario will pay the shot for that part of it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume the Budget debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.35 o'clock, p.m.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, April 9, 1965

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Friday, April 9, 1965

Interim report, select committee on youth, Mr. Apps	2123
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2126
Resumption of the debate on the Budget, Mr. S. Lewis, Mr. Troy	2126
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Troy, agreed to	2146
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2146

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome as guests to the Legislature today, students from the following schools: In the west gallery, Our Lady of Peace separate school, Islington, and Brantford collegiate institute, Brantford; and in the east gallery, Bartonville public school, Hamilton.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present an interim report of the select committee on youth. As a preamble to this report, I would like to make the following comments.

Mr. Speaker, it is with some satisfaction that the select committee on youth has tabled a progress report on their activities and programme, undertaken as a result of a resolution before this House submitted by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), on May 8, 1964.

The resolution read in part:

Ordered, that a select committee of this House be appointed to conduct a comprehensive inquiry into, and report upon, the special needs of youth, with particular reference to education, culture, recreational and employment opportunities, as well as the health, welfare and sports facilities now available to youth, and the steps to be taken which in the opinion of the committee would ensure a wider participation by youth in the life of the community.

As chairman of this committee, I wish to take this opportunity of expressing to you how impressed I have been with the dedication and enthusiasm of my hon. colleagues, who have given unstintingly of their time and energies to attend many meetings, have listened to many briefs and travelled long distances from their homes, all of which has been necessary to maintain the heavy itinerary of the committee, which, I think, reflects their interest in the youth of Ontario.

It is most fitting that the thanks of the select committee be extended to Dr. Walter Koerber of the Scarborough special education branch for his tireless and wise assistance in the early days of this committee's existence. It was with regret that we were made aware that Dr. Koerber would be unable to continue in the capacity of secretary to the select committee due to ill health last summer.

His successor, Judge William T. Little, former director of social services of the juvenile and family court of Metropolitan Toronto, was appointed secretary to the select committee on youth in October, 1964, and is working closely with the members and myself in a co-ordinated team effort to achieve the progress I feel has been made in this major assignment, which is the seeking of a solution to the many problems of youth in the province of Ontario.

Mrs. Anne Dempster, Miss Elizabeth Bremner and Mr. George Repar are most dedicated members of the secretarial and research staff of the select committee. They have done, I believe, an outstanding job of compiling and reducing the large amount of important data for use of the select committee, as well as maintaining steady correspondence and contacts on provincial, national and international levels, with government agencies and private individuals in pursuit of the most up-to-date information on youth.

It will be noted that the terms of reference of the select committee on youth are exceptionally broad, which is as it should be in order to give the committee the necessary scope to direct its investigations without handicap. Such terms, however, do require the creation of certain ground rules by the committee itself to determine by definition and criteria the areas to be studied.

The term youth has been defined as those persons of both sexes in Ontario between the ages of 14 and 24 years with considerable flexibility at the lower age limit. Full realization of the impact of pre-adolescent years on the maturing youth is acknowledged by the committee through its examination of many briefs and visitations respecting children's needs who are under the age of 14 years.

The committee commenced its work in June, 1964, with organizational meetings, followed by three presentations, which are major statements on youth by prominent Ontario authorities on young people's problems:

On June 23, 1964, Mr. Maurice Egan, director, youth services bureau, Ottawa welfare council, made the following points in his submission to the committee:

1. Police probably know the most about juvenile delinquency and youth problems, but seem sometimes, the least involved in seeking solutions to them. Social workers and the police should work closely together and form a prominent part of any community's delinquency control programme.

2. Recreation, good in itself, would be well advised not to make claims about reducing delinquency problems. It is important for recreation services to reach out to youth and not to be too building-centred.

3. Churches also have to reach out into the community and to stop thinking about the church building as a church—the church is where the people are, in the streets and in the market place.

4. To be a "drop-out" has become almost a status symbol, adults have talked so much about it. An educational programme can't solve a social problem. It is too late to start worrying about drop-outs at 14 and 15. Potential drop-outs can be detected in grades three and four.

On the same day, His Honour V. Lorne Stewart, senior judge, Metropolitan Toronto juvenile and family court, advised the committee as follows:

1. From my experience, it is hard to make a judgment as to which generation is the biggest problem, adult or youth.

2. The older generation gets a bit panicky when it contemplates its own unresolved problems, personal or otherwise, and as history repeats itself in its sons and daughters.

3. I think we should recognize that young people are, in all probability, on a par with those of any previous generation. We need to promote, advertise and recognize their vigour and creativeness.

On June 24, 1964, the Rev. J. Elton Davidge, youth secretary, the United Church of Canada, touched on the interesting observations that:

1. Youth wants to have the opportunity to reject the conclusions to which adults have come, and to discover truth for themselves. They need to find meanings which are relevant and significant for them and with which, in the deepest part of their being, they can find integrity.

2. Already society is having difficulty absorbing the steady stream of workers which pours out of our schools each year. With increased automation there may be "fewer jobs for more persons." The problem then becomes one of creative and satisfying use of leisure time so that the satisfaction which work brings will be met in some other way.

3. On the subject of research the Rev. Davidge points out—"Most of the research that I know has taken place in the United States. There is a need in Canada for much more research to be done on youth and young adults."

The early work of the committee has been devoted to the investigation of activities and problems of youth through two methods—one, the presentation of numerous briefs by both professional and volunteer organizations within the province that work with young people in specialized capacities, and secondly, by direct visitations to recognized areas of competence in youth work, as well as representative urban communities in the province of Ontario and the state of California.

A trip to California was arranged to coincide with a youth conference held at Pacific Grove (Asilomar) California, for the purpose of meeting with specialists in almost every field of youth endeavour in the state, thanks to the exceptional hospitality and co-operation of the state of California authorities. We saw progressive efforts in education, recreation, employment, health and welfare related to youth. These efforts were on behalf of well adjusted, delinquent, emotionally disturbed, or in other ways disturbed young people. The visitations included 22 separate areas, extending from Los Angeles to San Francisco.

This experience has aided the select committee to formulate a broader background and perspective on youth and their needs than could be obtained by restriction of such observations to our own provincial area exclusively.

A statistical summary of briefs and visitations reveals 35 youth organizations visited in Ontario, 22 youth organizations visited in California, visits to nine municipalities in Ontario made by your committee thus far. One hundred and nine briefs have been heard in Ontario from the following areas: Metropolitan Toronto, 40; Windsor, 20; Sudbury, 49; a total of 109.

Added to the above are 24 workshop submissions obtained as follows: St. Catharines, 10; Kitchener, 14; a total of 24.

The method of procuring briefs and workshop submissions in the various centres visited thus far follow two distinct patterns: The first method entails the submission of briefs from all youth agencies within a given area, and is undertaken by a committee formulated in the municipality to be visited, made up of the most knowledgeable people in the areas of youth services and needs. These people are usually appointed by senior executives of the municipal governments we visit. This committee invites submissions from all youth-serving agencies, public and voluntary, as well as individual briefs from any person who is legitimately concerned in the welfare of youth. From these briefs are selected the presentations to the select committee upon the occasion of their sittings in the city or town so organized.

The second method is the selection of a committee, similar to that just described, in the municipality selected for study, which undertakes a thorough workshop on youth composed of all agencies, both public and private, as well as interested individuals. This requires advance preparation and arrangements for large numbers of people to discuss, under seminar conditions, the resources, needs and recommendations respecting the youth of the area. The select committee is present and observes the workshop process, while the secretaries of the committee undertake the compiling of the information obtained when the workshop discusses its findings.

A heartening aspect of both methods has been the wholehearted support that has been given the select committee on each and every occasion we have visited the municipalities in Ontario to the present time.

The methodology employed by the select committee on youth in discharging its responsibilities under the terms of reference falls into four phases:

Phase one: The investigation and acquiring of an understanding of youth activities, needs and problems in Ontario, as reflected in these and future briefs, as well as a number of additional direct visitations of the manner outlined above.

Phase two: A research analysis of the data collected from all sources, combined with conference study meetings of the select committee to determine significant findings regarding youth needs and problems throughout Ontario.

Phase three: The undertaking to achieve common ground and unanimity of agreement of committee members regarding the final recommendations in the report to the legislative assembly.

Phase four: The compiling and writing of a final report for submission to the Legislature by the select committee on youth.

You may be interested in the analysis of recommendations contained within the brief so far submitted. I am sure that you will understand the reluctance the committee may exhibit in not wishing to make forthright recommendations, or to pin-point specific needs at this time without having had the benefit of more adequate sampling of the province's youth services. The progress report before you will outline some of the emerging problems that appear significant at this point in our study.

The analysis of the data collected from all sources has revealed many significant problems and recommendations that face the youth of this province, and under the following terms of reference I would like to tell you something of the volume of these findings:

1. In the area of education over 100 recommendations have come from 36 brief submissions, which, when reduced from the specifics due to overlap, net 35 different recommendations in the area of education.

2. Under sport and culture, we note that there are 20 different recommendations reduced from 61 specific recommendations and submitted from 28 different briefs.

3. Respecting the recreational term of reference, 105 recommendations have been obtained from 44 briefs, resulting in 32 different recommendations.

4. Under the term of reference employment opportunities, 38 different recommendations have been submitted from a total of 88 specific recommendations submitted by 37 briefs.

5. Under the term of reference health, 30 specific recommendations have been reduced to 15 different recommendations obtained from 40 submissions to the committee.

6. And, finally, under the welfare term of reference, there are 64 specific recommendations regarding welfare needs of children submitted by 30 briefs, and these 64 recommendations, naturally enough, overlapped to the degree that when charted out there are 21 different recommendations.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have ascertained that to the present time in our investigation there is a total of 161 different recommendations that have been reduced from a total of 448 specific recommendations, based on 215 submissions throughout the province.

This progress report is not designed to advise the Legislature regarding final deliberations and recommendations respecting matters outlined in the terms of reference of the select committee on youth, as it is felt there is much more sampling to be done among more areas of the province than the committee has been able to accomplish in the modest time allotted to them thus far.

The task of the committee has been well begun, but there is much remaining to be accomplished. At least 15 more visitations have been planned to other important areas of the province to assess the regional needs and facilities of a comprehensive and representative sector of the province's youth. A further 60 to 70 presentations by prominent youth service agencies have made requests to be heard before the select committee, as well as many individual submissions that will require study and assessment to ensure that ultimate recommendations to the Legislature are based on adequate sampling procedures. I think you will agree that this reflects the interest and concern of responsible people in the province of Ontario regarding the needs of youth.

The select committee's projection studies regarding the incidence of youth at various ages in the future would draw your attention to the fact that the 1961 census figures in the age group five to 14 years indicate that there were 1,268,000 boys and girls in the province. The latest estimate—June, 1964—for this age group shows a substantial increase to 1,360,000, and by 1981 it is expected that this age group will increase to slightly over two million. In the age group 15 to 24 there were 823,000 in 1961, and the best available information suggests that there are now 946,000 in this age group, and by 1981 this figure is expected to reach 1,600,000.

What we believe is the most significant aspect of the Ontario population trend is the projected shift in the median age—median age represents the age above which and below which half the population lies. It is estimated that in the 1961 to 1971 period, the median age will fall below 25 years of age. In 1961 the median age was 26.3 years, which was a decrease from the high of 27.7 years at the 1951 census. By 1991 50.6 per cent of the population is expected to be found in the 0–24 age sector of the population.

This increase will come as a consequence of a high birth rate - low death rate combination. These are some of the inescapable facts which those charged with the responsibilities of youth will have to reckon.

Due to the fact that our work cannot be accomplished during the time of the present legislative sessions, it is submitted that the reappointment of the select committee will be necessary to attain the objectives outlined in the motion establishing this committee.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in order that any other members of the committee who might wish to speak in regard to this report may do so, I would move the adjournment of this debate. It will go on the order paper, and if anybody who wishes to speak will inform the Whips, arrangements will be made to have them called.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Thirtieth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it seems an extraordinary hour of the day in which to be speaking on the Budget address. I wish to use the time I have available to me to reflect at some little length on the confused and bewildering case of Frederick Wilmer Fawcett. I hope that the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) will see fit to remain in the Legislature for a little while.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I acknowledge his presence. It is a pleasure to have a Cabinet Minister who is so constantly in the House. I have some envy of my friend the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) who shadows him from time to time. May I say that the hon. Ministers whom I am supposed to shadow are frequently shadows themselves. It is not as easy to have a confrontation.

I would recognize, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): I hope the hon. member is not referring to me.

Mr. S. Lewis: Not at all. I assume that that classifies the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions as a man of prominence and parts.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that questions have been raised in this House to which hon. Ministers have replied and that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has asked for a report on this Fawcett matter. But for several reasons which I should like now to enumerate, I think the subject should presently be pursued. It is for these reasons:

First, this Legislature normally functions at the level of broad generalities. We deal in general terms with legislation and with bills and with the principles inherent in the estimates. It is exceptional when individual cases come in a dramatic fashion before the legislative process. I think it is a test of that process that they be handled with despatch. Such, I suggest, has not happened in this instance.

Second, despite the hon. Prime Minister's emphasis that this government does not wish to incarcerate a member of society for an undue length of time, the fact remains that Frederick Fawcett is in Penetanguishene month after endless month, with no predictable change this side of eternity.

Third, there are important and compelling social issues involved and social issues of this kind should be examined and investigated at every opportunity that this Legislature has, and vigorously pursued by the members. Indeed, it is the responsibility of members to do so.

Fourth, I would suggest to the hon. members here that whatever be the precise areas of dispute, and however the analysis is made, and whichever thoughts are contradictory, the evidence is irresistible that there should be an entire and immediate review of the Frederick Fawcett affair.

Last, the case of itself raises such an interesting amalgam of legal and medical opinion, laced as it is with peculiar and sometimes bizarre facts, that I think it worthy that the Legislature address itself to the matter.

Mr. Speaker, those are the basic premises from which to begin. For me there are two other important qualifications.

First, I would agree with the hon. Attorney General. I am sure he would concur that the discussions should be controlled and responsible, without a preoccupation for fixing blame and without, in any sense, impugning the motives or integrity of the members involved—be they psychiatrists or otherwise. Governments, and all human agencies including the Opposition, have a capacity for making mistakes. It is here suggested that society respond to those errors, and that is the area with which I should like to deal.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I speak this morning, as a self-admitted layman—I have no knowledge of the technicalities of the law. If the hon. Attorney General wishes to correct me on occasion, I am sure he will do so; and I will accept that correction with gratitude. I spent three abortive months in law school—in that I have a certain parallel with Frederick Fawcett, who also spent a little time studying law. I suspect there are hon. members in this House who would suggest other parallels, but that is the parallel which comes to mind.

I do not pretend, Mr. Speaker, to grasp the unfathomable reaches and complexities of the human mind. And that is not what I am concerned with here. I simply want to reflect on the mystified public reaction asking what it is all about, and the incessantly gnawing apprehension that there has been a basic miscarriage of justice.

Let me reconstruct some of the fabric. I have no wish to drag out all of the details. The Fawcett affair is fairly well known. It raises many perplexing questions. Many more perplexing questions, it might be said, than it offers satisfactory answers. It is a twisting labyrinth of confusion and contradiction, of legal technicality and psychiatric dispute. And in the centre of that maze sits the sad, lonely, almost unreal figure of Frederick Fawcett, the Euphrasia township farmer who would not pay his taxes and is adjudged dangerously insane.

I suggest to the hon. Speaker that in its boldest terms it has a certain surrealistic element about it.

Specifically then, I want to examine some of the confusions and some of the contradictions. I want to submit during the course of my remarks one piece of new material which has not been submitted, as far as I can understand it, through the entire course of events. I will come to that in a short period of time.

First, Mr. Speaker, there is the original affair of Magistrate Alan Stewart and the Owen Sound Sun Times.

When Frederick Fawcett was first brought to trial on the multiple charges to which the hon. Attorney General has referred in this House, the local newspaper gave quite a graphic portrayal, using exotic licence. It was, for the Owen Sound Sun Times, a fleeting moment of journalistic glory. It did not happen very often that this kind of incident occurred in the community.

The more sophisticated Metropolitan Toronto dailies would look with some surprise and some sort of paternal instinct on that kind of parochial reporting. But the Sun Times went to town. It was perfectly understandable, if somewhat indiscreet.

But the extraordinary fact, Mr. Speaker, appears to be that it formed part of the rationale for judicial opinion, both in refusing the request for bail which was made and in the totally unexpected and unusual decision of remanding Fred Fawcett for mental examination.

Let me quote from an article in the Toronto Daily Star of March 29, 1965, written by Ron Haggart on the question of bail. When the defence lawyer indicated that the liberty of the subject was important—

“So is the preservation of the peace,” said the magistrate. “It is very important, and at times I think must override the liberty of the subject . . . If there was another disgraceful exhibition as there was a few weeks ago on the farm, maybe somebody might be maimed or killed. That’s a risk this court is not willing to take. You made an excellent plea for your client. I cannot see it. I am refusing bail.”

And then, further:

“The newspapers,” replied the magistrate, “stated that this man held off seven police officers at the point of a gun. Quite frankly, I question very much the wisdom of allowing a man, if he did that, to be admitted to bail. I think it is beyond the pale . . . Considering the reports concerning this man, the Crown is proceeding intelligently: Find out what his mental condition is before taking further steps.”

And finally, on the question of a remand to Penetanguishene:

“I think anyone who fires a gun and blows . . . tires out is very emotionally upset or completely crazy. So that is the evidence. In the light of that evidence, I think the duty of the court is very, very clear.”

Now one can honourably question, Mr. Speaker, what the magistrate meant when he said, “So that is the evidence.”

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): May I ask the hon. member if he is quoting from the judgment of the court—the magistrate’s judgment—or from the newspaper?

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Haggart implies that it is from the judgment of the court. It may be from the account in the paper.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is the hon. member quoting from a newspaper article?

Mr. S. Lewis: You asked am I quoting from a newspaper article?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is what I asked.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am quoting from a newspaper article, but the implication is that these are the words that were uttered in court.

Even were they not the precise words, the fact that the magistrate could be affected in that fashion, apparently by the newspaper, is not so much the concern. What is of concern is that the original events to which the magistrate refers were never brought before the court in evidence. They have all been alleged—that original incident of Fred Fawcett assaulting one of the assessors and shooting at the tire of a car.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, as a confessed layman, I am confused by such proceedings and I think that true of the general public to which this government responds.

Let me be a little more specific. The second aspect of this case is the affair of the neighbourhood tax assessors. Everyone in this House knows that that is where it all started.

In September, 1961, Messrs. Howey and Seabrook approached the farm and Fawcett allegedly struck one and shot at the vanishing car with his pistol and hit the tire—it was subsequently changed a mile and a half later on.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Somebody was looking at movies.

Mr. S. Lewis: That demonstrated, that act supposedly demonstrated for all to witness, his unbalanced condition, thereafter to be known as a “dementia in the vicinity of his farm.” It was apparently confirmed in the minds of everyone at that time by the subsequent confrontation with the OPP and the shooting arrest eight or nine days later.

On the basis of the two assessors’ stories to the Ontario provincial police, as you will recall, three police cruisers subsequently were dispatched. Fred Fawcett was arrested, he was remanded to Penetang and has been confined for three and a half years.

Primarily on that basis I suggest—and I think this is significant, Mr. Speaker—primarily on the basis of that original incident, he is adjudged a dangerous man and has lost his liberty, perhaps for life. That is the incredible truth about this case.

The fact is that the original incident upon which the entire medico-legal structure is founded has never, I suggest, never been tested or proven in any court of law. I would be glad to be contradicted in that by the hon. Attorney General or anyone.

As a layman, it seems to me again, Mr. Speaker, in its most benevolent and kindly interpretation that that is a pretty perilous foundation for depriving a man of liberty. I would point out that Mr. Justice Spence in his aside in his trial of 1962 said—and he said it, I suppose, partly with tongue in cheek—I quote:

The plaintiff harmed no one and he had the opportunity to do dire harm. He chose to take the very inconsequential step of shooting a hole in the tax assessor's tire when, with considerably more ease, he could have shot a hole in the assessor.

It is an interesting observation by Mr. Justice Spence.

Let us take a look at some of the corroborating evidence. First, Mr. Speaker, Fred Fawcett, the man in question, denied the entire affair.

Second. Fred Fawcett and his brother claim never to have owned a pistol and used it on that day. Third. The tire involved, turned up several months later, with the hole in the tire, but in otherwise perfect condition—despite the fact that a flat had occurred a mile down the road, and it had to be changed. The accompanying rubber, which was surely damaged to some degree, was not brought forward in evidence.

Fourth—and most important. We now have a statutory declaration filed under The Canada Evidence Act by Ralph Harbottle, a neighbour for years of Fred Fawcett; an eyewitness to the scene. The declaration reads in part:

From the time that the two assessors arrived until they left I did not see Fred Fawcett use any violence towards them, nor did I at any time see a pistol or a gun in the hands of Fred Fawcett, nor did I see or hear Mr. Fred Fawcett discharge any firearm at anyone or at anything.

Ralph Harbottle was never called to testify before Mr. Justice Spence at the first habeas corpus application in the Ontario Supreme Court. There may have been some legal oversight. As I said at the outset, this is not a matter of making moral judgment, it is a matter of reviewing the bizarre facts of this case. Harbottle was never called to testify before Mr. Justice Spence. That is an extraordinary reflection on the process of law in such cases.

But even more important, Mr. Speaker, and going further, Ralph Harbottle was not called in the second trial, in 1965, due to a legal technicality, because of which Mr. Justice Fraser would not reopen areas heard by Mr. Justice Spence in 1962. So Ralph Harbottle's evidence never came before a court of law at any time. And the truth or otherwise of that original incident, which resulted in a total deprivation of liberty, has never been established in a court of law in the province of Ontario.

Now the hon. Attorney General has said that all evidence has been heard. With the greatest of respect to him, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to a great many people involved in this case, and I fail to comprehend how this strategic and fundamental piece of evidence could possibly have been heard.

But let me go further. Not only was Ralph Harbottle excluded from the due process of law, the four neighbours who were in the car with Frederick Fawcett at the time of the OPP arrest, eight or nine days later—also were never called to testify, and I would like to quote Mr. Justice Spence in that regard. He says: "One might have been assisted by the evidence of these disinterested neighbours, but none of them were called to testify."

So here is a justice of the Ontario Supreme Court indicating that the trial might have been aided by the testimony of these people. They were not called. At the same instance, Mr. Justice Spence said that if Ralph Harbottle had been called, the court would have been in a better position. He said, and I quote his words: "They were put in an unenviable position," again the justice who was sitting in the court, indicating that not all was heard. It seems to me and I submit to the hon. Attorney General, to the public, that that too is a situation which cries out for some kind of correction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think it only fair that the hon. member should himself point out, or allow it to be pointed out for the record at this time, that at that hearing, Fred Fawcett was represented by a most capable lawyer. I believe it was Mr. Gebirtig, a Queen's Counsel, and that he had the most ample opportunity to call the witnesses you have mentioned.

Mr. Bryden: I would say the lawyer muffed the case—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not say that the lawyer muffed the case.

Mr. Bryden: It is pretty obvious.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: He may have had good reasons for not calling such evidence, which may have been against his client, for all I know. I merely wish to put it on the record that the fact those witnesses were not called is not denied, the fact that the man Fawcett was represented by most capable counsel and the fact that the counsel did not see fit to call that evidence, may be significant from the point of view of the issue as to the man's sanity or otherwise. I merely wish to—

Mr. Bryden: This is sheer speculation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, it is speculation—

Mr. S. Lewis: I wish to tell the hon. Attorney General that I respect that point. It is, sir, precisely because it may have been relevant, that I adjudge it sorrowful that it did not come.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Let me make the point just a little more pointed, and perhaps clinch it a little.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Minister that the member for Scarborough West has the floor. He is making a Budget speech, and I think perhaps it is in order for him to permit a question, and make an explanation. The member asking the question should not take over the floor and make too long a speech.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I accept the ruling, sir.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I prefaced my remarks with the request that if the hon. Attorney General wished to intervene, he should do so and I would be willing at points to yield the floor to him for that purpose. I assume that this is a worthwhile exchange and he will not speak through the rest of the Budget debate.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thank the hon. member and I accept the ruling of the Speaker, of course. But it was pointed out that on a matter of law, the hon. member was good enough to say I might correct or elucidate and that was what I felt I was doing at the time.

I am aware, and I think I should just like to add this one word, that there was evidence of psychiatrists who had been engaged and retained by the defence, which evidence was not called, because it would have gone to the point of proving that the mental condition of Fred Fawcett was not normal.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, I am fully apprised of these remarks ahead of time, Mr. Speaker.

I appreciate the hon. Attorney General making them. It is, in fact, because this kind of thing has happened; it is in fact because we have to engage in this somewhat contentious issue at the House at this time; that I am going to suggest later that the whole process is wrong; that this is not the way you endeavour to establish whether or not a patient in a mental hospital should have his release; that this is one of the fundamental errors of the whole process.

I merely wish again to reiterate that whether they had a bearing or not, no one will ever know; whether the testimony is relevant or not, no one will ever know; because in truth they were not called—for whatever reason. I say to the hon. Attorney General that he may suggest motives different from those I may suggest, but Mr. Justice Spence, who heard the case, said that the court had been placed in an unenviable position in not hearing Harbottle, and that the court "would have been assisted by the evidence of these disinterested neighbours," but none of them were called to testify.

It seems to me that if Mr. Justice Spence himself so indicated, it is rather unfortunate that they were not called, and indeed it had relevance.

I want to go further: One of the other aspects of the case which is interesting is that now consigned to history's dramatic confrontations between Fred Fawcett and the Ontario provincial police cruisers—that platoon of three police cruisers which came to arrest him. It is often used as another demonstration of his dangerous tendencies. It is interesting to note what Mr. Justice Spence observed of the manner of arrest at that time. He said:

Two shots at a loaded car in order to stop a man to serve him with a warrant charging him with the serious offence of shooting a hole in the tire, I think it is sufficient to state that those others in the car were very fortunate persons. Constable Ferguson and others guilty of conduct no less reckless, certainly no more reckless, have faced criminal charges—

Throughout the trial of this issue, it has been a startling thing to me that the police officers would take along the platoon of six to carry out a simple surrender and that they would be so wildly reckless in the use of their firearms with three men in the back seat.

Now, again, since all of this relates to that fundamental proposition that Fred Fawcett was somehow a dangerous personality because of the original incident, and since all of these original incidents are in some dispute, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the case cries out for review. I am profoundly concerned that the indefinite incarceration should stem from such a dubious root. I cannot believe—frankly, that due process of law, of medical process of committal, can be viewed as absolutely conclusive until we know the truth or otherwise of that original incident. As others in my party have done, I shall suggest the manner of getting to that truth as I bring this topic to a close.

Third, Mr. Speaker, there is the affair of psychiatric dispute. That is a delicate and sensitive area and I shall merely raise certain obvious questions. They are raised in an intensely personal, and again a layman's, view.

I think that the attitude of numerical preponderance is offensive. Too much has been made of the vote procedure. I assume the hon. Attorney General may agree with that. Not enough has been made of the substance of the evidence.

As a layman, I would not have thought that because of his initial incarceration all the onus of proof of sanity should lie on Fred Fawcett. This is purely a layman's opinion. I may be corrected by others more skilled and knowledgeable in the field, but I would not have thought that.

I would not have thought that the usual terms of evidence—reasonable doubt or balance of probabilities, would be relevant in this kind of a case. I would not have thought that the adversary concept of legal procedure should thus be used to test a man's sanity.

I would have thought that there should be some other channel or instrument, Mr. Speaker, through which psychiatric opinion could express itself. I think fundamentally that is what we are getting at. I want to say that I feel it to be one of the fundamental weaknesses of the present Mental Hospitals Act legislation of which Mr. Fred Fawcett is a singular demonstration.

Now there are other curious features, by no means conclusive in themselves—let me say that without qualification—but simply further testimony of this confused and confusing case. All these peculiar side oddities have never been resolved, certainly in the public mind.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point to read into the record a statutory declaration. It is filed by one Malcolm Clyde Kronby, lawyer in the city of Toronto, under The Canada Evidence Act:

I, Malcolm Clyde Kronby, do solemnly declare that:

1. I acted as solicitor for Frederick

Fawcett from October 16, 1961 to about December 21, 1961.

2. On Sunday, the 12th day of November, 1961, I visited the said Frederick Fawcett at the Ontario hospital, Penetanguishene, Ontario, where the said Frederick Fawcett was then and is now in custody.

3. During the course of my said visit, I inquired of Dr. E. P. Houston, a psychiatrist on the staff of the said Ontario hospital as to the mental condition of the said Frederick Fawcett.

4. Dr. E. P. Houston informed me that in the opinion of the doctors at the said Ontario hospital, Frederick Fawcett was not mentally ill and further, the said Dr. E. P. Houston informed me in response to my question, that the said Frederick Fawcett was capable of appreciating the nature of the charges against him, was able to instruct counsel in his defence and was fit to stand trial.

That is a statutory declaration sworn by Malcolm Clyde Kronby in January, January 12 to be precise, of 1962, relating to the specifics of the conversation with Dr. Houston on November 12, 1961.

Now I also have with me a medical practitioner's certificate for the admission of a mentally ill patient. It is a certificate which is dated November 16, four days after the conversation attested to in the statutory declaration. It is a medical certificate signed by Dr. E. P. Houston.

Now obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is just another one of those unusual aspects in this perplexing case. The truth is, the fact of the matter is, that Frederick Fawcett was remanded for examination at Penetang. I believe the date to have been October 18, 1961—which means that when his lawyer Malcolm C. Kronby visited him at the hospital on November 12, 1961, he had already been there for a period of over three weeks; quite sufficient time to have psychiatric diagnosis made.

Indeed, we know from other testimony, that many psychiatrists were called in during that period of time. At that day, on November 12, Malcolm Kronby, according to his declaration, engaged in a conversation with Dr. E. P. Houston which indicates that the said Frederick Fawcett was capable of appreciating the nature of the charges against him, was able to instruct counsel in his defence and was fit to stand trial. Four days later, on November 16, Dr. E. P. Houston is one of the two practitioners signing the certificate for the admission of a mentally ill patient: Frederick Fawcett.

Mr. Speaker, this is just another aspect which I think is worthy of review. I think it is just another aspect which justifies the proposition of review. I have very recently, in fact this week, spoken to Malcolm Clyde Kronby. He is willing to testify again to the validity and truth of that incident and that exchange.

And that, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, throws even further light on this peculiar affair of Frederick Fawcett.

But there are also aspects of the admission form which I want to indicate on the record because, Mr. Speaker, some of these aspects puzzle me and I think that they are worthy of exploration.

Under the various reasons for certifying the mentally ill patient—the reason Frederick Fawcett was put in Penetang—the Crown land feature is referred to.

His firm, unshakable belief that because he is on Crown land he is not bound by any laws passed since Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, that may be very well and true, but the fact is that Mr. Frederick Fawcett, on the witness stand, testified that if the Crown land factor were argued in court he would abide by the court's decision.

It is well known by all those involved in the case that Frederick Fawcett's point of dispute with the township of Euphrasia related to a road allowance. It began several years before the Crown land issue was raised. He refused to pay taxes several years before the Crown land issue was raised and, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the Crown land issue is simply just another facet of which, perhaps, too much has been made.

Secondly, Dr. Tuchtie, who was one of the four psychiatrists who found Mr. Fred Fawcett in need of incarceration at Penetang, did not even know of the road allowance aspect of the case, of the refusal to pay taxes over the road allowance rather than the supposed Crown grant—until the new hearing in 1965. This is despite the fact that Dr. Tuchtie had interviewed Frederick Fawcett at least three times in the previous three and a half years.

After all, it was generally agreed that Frederick Fawcett had a legitimate claim on his township, it was generally agreed that Frederick Fawcett had a legitimate excuse. It was not something odd and eccentric that a farmer should be quarrelling with the township over road allowance, and withholding his taxes for that purpose. Mr. Justice Spence said at the time:

The plaintiff regarded, and perhaps very rightly, this conduct of the township council as being prejudicial to him and being unjustly discriminatory towards him.

Now on the same certificate for the admission of a mentally ill patient there is a separate section head which reads as follows:

Other facts, if any, indicating mental illness communicated to me by others.
State from whom information was received.

In the forms signed by Dr. Houston, there are such other facts which are indicated.

(1) The facts of the warble fly inspector on the property communicated by the OPP, and (2) the refusal to allow the tax assessors on the property and the shooting at their car—attested to by the tax assessors. These are listed on the forms as “indicating mental illness communicated to me by others.”

Let us take a very brief look at these two things, the warble fly inspector and the shooting of the tire.

First, everyone now knows that rather peculiar episode of the warble fly inspector. The warble fly inspector arrived one day on Frederick Fawcett's farm and said, in effect, “I want to inspect your cattle,” and Frederick and Harold Fawcett replied in their congenial way—the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) will help me if I go wrong on this—“Our cattle are out on the back pasture, we don't want to take the time to bring them in today, and besides, Mr. Inspector, you don't seem to be sufficiently clean, you may yourself be a carrier of germs. Come back tomorrow.”

Charges were laid at this offence to the warble fly inspector and his acts—I cannot remember the precise time, but charges were laid. They were not laid against Fred Fawcett, let it be said, they were laid against his brother Harold Fawcett. The case went to court, was originally found on behalf of the warble fly inspector, but later the appeal court reversed the decision, found on behalf of the Fawcett brothers, and as a result this government in its intelligence and understanding, amended The Warble Fly Act.

It is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, and incidentally that is a historically true sequence of events, it is rather interesting, that the episode should be included in a certificate admitting a patient to Penetang hospital—that that particular warble fly incident is something which indicates mental illness “communicated to me by others.”

One necessarily views the whole process with a somewhat jaundiced outlook.

As to one of the other contentions, the shooting of the tire and the tax assessors; I think I have already demonstrated this morning that that had never been judged in a court of law, so how can it be accepted as evidence indicating mental illness?

Now, Dr. Tuchtie—I am sorry to single out Dr. Tuchtie, but it has to be done again—testified in the process of the 1962 hearing as follows:

I can see Fred as my neighbor, living next door to me, and I can see being entirely friendly with him, and Fred being entirely friendly and helpful to me.

Mark this, Mr. Speaker:

But I wouldn't want to be a tax assessor or a warble fly inspector.

I am inclined to ask Dr. Tuchtie in the most friendly possible way, why not? In the warble fly inspector incident, according to the courts, Fred and Harold Fawcett were well within their right. And the tax assessor incident has never been proven in a court of law. So how does one establish anything concrete with that kind of aside or suggestion? All of which goes to suggest nothing that is precisely conclusive, nothing that is beyond dispute or analysis; but sufficient uncertainty to merit review.

I am going to leave that particular aspect of it aside for a moment, Mr. Speaker. I shall also leave aside the completely contradictory element—that element of contradictory evidence where one group of psychiatrists state categorically that Mr. Fred Fawcett is mentally ill and has to be confined to Penetang, and another group stating categorically that he is not mentally ill.

I will go to one other area which I suggest to the hon. Attorney General—and I wish the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) were here as well—requires urgent remedial attention.

Unintentionally, I am sure, we in this Legislature—and I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I must place the onus on the shoulders of the hon. Attorney General and the hon. Minister of Health in particular—I suggest that we in this—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the hon. member once again, to allow me to correct him on a statement of, I think, law, a finding of law. I heard the hon. member say the tax assessor incident had never been proven in a court of law. Is he referring to the incident where the tax collectors were held off, were alleged to have been held off by Fawcett for some three to four hours with a gun?

Mr. S. Lewis: No. Is the hon. Attorney General referring to the Ontario provincial police incident?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, the holding off of the tax collector by Fawcett through the afternoon with a gun, with a rifle.

Mr. S. Lewis: No, I am talking about the original incident relating to Messrs. Howey and Seabrook, who alleged that Fawcett assaulted them in the process of their requesting the tax, and then shot the hole through the tire. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is beyond dispute. And I am glad the hon. Attorney General reintroduced it because I think it again confirms the fundamental contention that in fact that central issue upon which everything else rests, and from which everything else led, has in fact never been proved in a court of law.

I wanted to go back to another aspect which worries me profoundly. I think that this Legislature is allowing—and I put the onus to some greater degree on the hon. Ministers involved—the psychiatric profession as a profession to hazard serious disrepute in the public mind. I personally think that is profoundly unfair, largely unfounded and not at all to be desired.

I do not know what a man-on-the-street interview would do, but certainly in the public press, and in the general discussions, psychiatrists have not come off very well in all of this. The situation breeds unfortunate allegations and unfortunate suspicions. I think it incumbent on the hon. Attorney General and the hon. Minister of Health to come to the defence of the psychiatric profession.

There has been the suggestion made, for instance, that Fred Fawcett cannot, or will not, be free, because we have now developed a vested psychiatric opinion from which there is no deviation. With it comes the implication that a man's liberty is sacrificed for three and a half years because of an inflexible decision which cannot now be reversed; because there are face-saving features involved in this vested psychiatric opinion. It is something which many people have whispered abroad in this land, if I may put it that way.

Secondly, there has been the obvious suggestion that we should call a panel of outside experts—it was made by my colleague the hon. member for Woodbine. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Opposition in this Legislature has been reluctantly forced into that avenue as one of the only alternatives. But no one, let me assure hon. Ministers opposite, considers it particularly desirable because, necessarily, the unhappy implication is that the psychiatrists in Ontario are somehow incapable of arriving at their own decisions. I suggest that unless some kind of reasonable decision is made, the Opposition is put into the position where it has no other alternative but to make this suggestion.

I want to say that an even unhappier suggestion, to put it bluntly, was made by Mr. Sidney Katz in the Toronto Daily Star:

At least three of the four psychiatrists who certified Fawcett was mentally ill at his trial are employees of the Ontario government serving on the staffs of mental hospitals. Their salaries are paid for by the government.

Now, not only is the profession inevitably denigrated by such categorical implication, but also, of course, in particular, those psychiatrists serving in Ontario hospitals, those psychiatrists serving under this government through The Department of Health. I think that is a sad and sorry pass to which to come. This government must necessarily rise to the defence of their own psychiatrists. I do not think it is defensible that the hon. Attorney General and the hon. Minister of Health should retire to the wings while the battle rages on the stage and public opinion consolidates, as it has.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the last point I want to make in this analysis of the case is the affair of the supposedly "dangerously ill" Mr. Fred Fawcett. He was found to be so, within the meaning of the Act again, on February 8, 1965. He was returned to Penetanguishene hospital for the criminally insane by Mr. Justice Fraser, albeit let it be pointed out by Mr. Justice Fraser, with very considerable regret.

I want to suggest to the hon. Minister opposite that in the public mind that is the least plausible of all: this question of the dangerously insane Frederick Fawcett. One is moved to ask just who is the paranoid Euphrasia township man; criminally dangerous within the confines of his farm; a threat to public safety? What do we know of him?

Point number one: For 45 years Fred Fawcett lived without untoward incident. He had an unblemished record for 30 years as a farmer in Euphrasia township.

Point number two: For the entire three and a half year period of his incarceration in the Ontario hospital, it was the unanimous opinion that he was a model inmate, not to say gentleman. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, he was frequently regarded as one of the ward helpers during the period of that incarceration.

Point number three: For nine months at Queen Street Ontario hospital he wandered freely through Toronto. Never a whisper of danger or irresponsibility, never a missed curfew, regarded by all as a lovable and friendly employee of the ward and generally the embodiment of a model person at 999 Queen Street at the time.

Point four: For a full month, back on the farm in the summer of 1964, Frederick Fawcett was again a model of mature and adult behaviour—back on that farm where his dangerously insane behaviour was supposed to manifest itself.

Point number five: At the end of 1961, 171 neighbours—the press has been saying 117; it is not, it is 171—signed a petition on behalf of Fred Fawcett indicating that they were happy to have him on his farm; that they had no fear of his presence in Euphrasia township.

Some of them had known Fred Fawcett literally for decades, and they signed the petition. If I understand the facts of the case, Mr. Speaker, the petition came to the dean of this House, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) and he recalls in the further recesses of his mind I suspect, that back in January, 1962, he turned that important, vital petition bearing on the dangerously ill aspect of Fred Fawcett over to The Department of the Attorney General to, I think, Mr. W. C. Bowman—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Common.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Common; I am sorry; the hon. member is right.

I would ask the hon. Attorney General, if I may be so bold and interrupt my own presentation, where that original petition is? What has happened to that original petition of 171 friends and relatives and neighbours of Fred Fawcett?

I am perfectly willing to be corrected; but a short time ago I understand it had been misplaced in The Department of the Attorney General.

Everyone remembers having it—the hon. member for Grey South; the member of The Attorney General's Department to whom he gave it; the members of the civil service hierarchy in that department—but the petition has just vanished.

It is yet another singularly interesting aspect of this case—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I ask when this petition came to The Department of the Attorney General?

Mr. S. Lewis: In January, 1962, but it was handed into the hon. Minister's department by the hon. member for Grey South. I believe if he wishes to—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: January, 1962?

Mr. S. Lewis: He has concurred, I believe.

Mr. Oliver: Yes.

On this point, Mr. Speaker—if the hon. member will allow me—the petition was handed to me by Fred Fawcett's sister with the suggestion that I should take it to The Attorney General's Department. I did this; handed it to Mr. Common, whom I thought in turn would hand it to Fawcett's lawyer. I thought that would be the procedure.

Some time after, I asked Mr. Common if he still had the petition and Mr. Common's answer was that he still had it in his possession. Now I am not sure of the date of it, but it was sometime after January, 1961, so that it was handed to the deputy Attorney General and he confirmed that it was in his possession sometime after that.

Mr. S. Lewis: I have reason to believe—and the hon. Attorney General can check it out—that a journalist in the very recent past asked for that petition and that indeed an individual member of The Attorney General's Department made a search for that petition and it could not be found. I would be glad to supply precise names, but I do not think it is absolutely necessary and I do not think it is absolutely vital to the heart of this case, except that the petition was a testament of what the neighbours felt about Fred Fawcett. It is, in some odd way I suppose, another characteristic of this entire affair.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am indebted to the hon. member because I must say, at this moment, that this is the first time that I have heard of this document which apparently came to the office in 1962. I shall certainly be glad to have every effort made to see if it can be located.

Mr. S. Lewis: I thank the hon. Attorney General. I hope he will forgive me a small, fragmented smile. It is a very interesting fact that a petition germane to Fred Fawcett's incarceration is not even known by the hon. Attorney General in 1965, three years after it came to his department, and bears to the case, I think, very pertinently.

Point numbers one, two, three, four, five and now six. Again in 1965, Mr. Speaker, scores of people in Euphrasia township are in the process of doing the same thing, signing another petition on behalf of Fred Fawcett. Signing names of the very people who supposedly will be harmed by his return to the farm.

Point number seven, which I think is final and crucial, is that the overwhelmingly unanimous opinion of all; even of those psychiatrists who testified against Fred Fawcett, of his neighbours, of his lawyers, of the psychiatrists who testified for him, of all the people who have been interviewed by Allan Anderson in the Telegram and by Sidney Katz in the Toronto Daily Star, is that Fred Fawcett was, by and large, an amiable, helpful, friendly, intelligent, decent, hard-working Euphrasia township farmer. He was perhaps eccentric on occasion; so are we all. He was perhaps obstinate on occasion; so are we all.

But the public, let me assure the hon. Attorney General, finds it difficult to be persuaded that he is so dangerous as to justify incarceration in Penetang, with some incurable, psychopathic criminal offenders, sexual offenders; and many in his own ward, I am told, who have committed capital crimes.

I appeal to the hon. Attorney General that this particular lapse in logic and in judgment is very difficult to defend.

What is Fred Fawcett to do? His problem seems to be an insoluble jig-saw.

The sole place on earth where he could disprove the dangerously ill designation is perhaps forever closed to him, namely, his farm. The totally admirable behaviour of the last three and a half years have been attributed, by the psychiatrists involved, to Fred Fawcett waiting while litigation is pending.

How does Fred Fawcett remove himself from this maze?

Alan Anderson of the Telegram, writing in one of his articles said, and I quote, and I thought it was a neat summary:

That is the difficulty facing Fred Fawcett. There is not a single thing he can do to satisfy the government doctors of his sanity.

If he behaves reasonably, he is cunningly biding his time. If he goes to court, he is disputing their benevolent decision. If he argues with them, he is obviously deluded. If he agrees with them, they do not believe he is telling the truth.

Fred Fawcett is in a difficult position, indeed. As a layman, I plead with the hon. Attorney General opposite, that some alternative be found and I have three concrete proposals to make.

First, Mr. Speaker, in line with my hon.

colleague from Woodbine, we in the New Democratic Party urge an immediate public inquiry under The Public Inquiries Act into the facts or otherwise, truth or otherwise, of that original incident which has never been tested in a court of law, and which we profoundly believe is the basis of all that has followed. It should therefore be subject to complete and total and open public scrutiny. Everything demonstrates that need, and the hon. Attorney General has it within his power under The Public Inquiries Act, to demand such an inquiry immediately.

I would say to the hon. Attorney General, and again I am speaking as a layman that it seems to me that the technicalities of legal procedure should not prevent the presentation of any available evidence in a case of this kind. I believe that there must be some other way of dealing with this kind of matter. That so many peculiar questions should go unanswered is surely intolerable.

There should be no impediment to calling everyone and anyone who has any bearing on the case—Ralph Harbottle; the four men who were in the car when the OPP shot at Fred Fawcett; any other people who related to that original incident and the one subsequent to it, should be called. This is the way the case should be handled. Legal technicalities in judging a man's eventual incarceration should not be allowed to prevail, particularly if they inhibit the presentation of important and relevant evidence.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that later it may be worth broadening the terms of inquiry if it seems desirable. The hon. Attorney General would well do it at the outset, to examine the entire Fred Fawcett affair, not only in respect to Frederick Fawcett himself; but in respect to the important social issues involved—namely, the need for rewriting The Mental Hospitals Act. So that is our first claim and requirement.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. Attorney General that a new review procedure is urgently required for those who feel themselves wrongly incarcerated and, as well, a review of present committal procedures, granting indefinite certification by two physicians.

The normal review procedure within the Ontario hospitals hierarchy, certainly at Penetang, has appeared to be unsatisfactory. The hon. Minister of Health has said that he will not use his review committee of three in this case. I suggest strongly to him that some new review procedure is required. I notice that the hon. Attorney General also has the Canadian mental health association paper on his desk—the Law and Mental Disorders. I want to read into the record what that association says about a review board, on page 20:

In order to permit the simplified and expeditious practice of requiring only one physician to participate in certification, it is necessary to build in a device for the protection of civil liberty. The method found workable both in the United Kingdom and three Canadian provinces is the review board. While this may appear a rather elaborate tribunal, it should be noted that if the board sits in the hospital this makes it easier for the patient to appear without the stigma of public exposure of his problem in court. It can act more quickly and is a readily seen protection for the patient.

This is fundamental: "Experience has shown that the number of appeals is not excessive."

And then this eminent little paper, which is signed by several psychiatrists and lawyers who are studying the field, enunciates one or two principles and I shall simply read them into the record, because they are pertinent:

Principle 14. Provision must be made for a review board to be appointed by The Attorney General's Department for each designated facility or group of facilities in which patients under certification are retained. Each review board is to consist of three persons not employed by the treating facility or government, one of whom shall be a solicitor, and one of whom a physician. Each board will review cases applying to it for consideration.

Principle 15. Each time a patient is certified or recertified, he and his next-of-kin or other responsible person will be notified in writing of their rights to a hearing before the review board as to the justification for the patient being detained.

Principle 16. A patient or his next-of-kin or other responsible person dissatisfied by the decision of the review board may appeal this decision to the courts and must also have direct access to the courts on the question of detention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, again I am not a person expert in these fields. I make no claim. I simply say that it has become evident to everyone that The Mental Hospitals Act needs some amendment, that the review procedure desperately needs amendment. I understand that there has been some discussion of this behind the scenes. I would urge that it be done immediately.

Thirdly, and finally, Mr. Speaker, whatever else is decided, surely it can be agreed in this Legislature, without pronouncing on the sanity of Fred Fawcett or otherwise, that Penetang is not the place for Frederick Fawcett. Let me grant, for the sake of argument, that Frederick Fawcett is a paranoid personality. I would strongly suggest—and I have discussed this with some psychiatrists recently—that custody equivalent to that which existed at Queen Street, when he was there for those nine, free and reasonable months, when there was no violation at all, that kind of custody should be provided for Fred Fawcett and that it should be provided if possible in the near future.

The great irony in Penetang, of course, is, again according to psychiatrists to whom I have spoken, that it may militate against proper treatment for Fred Fawcett. Indeed, Mr. Sidney Katz, in his article, indicated that Mr. Fred Fawcett was not receiving treatment in the clinical sense at all.

From what I understand, again according to psychiatrists, the paranoid personality must itself respond to treatment. It must be receptive for treatment to be workable, and obviously within Penetang hospital, Fred Fawcett will be obsessed by what he believes to be an injustice, or obsessed by what he believes to be the judicial process and all the proceedings of litigation. The treatment possibilities, I suggest, are therefore somewhat thwarted.

With the greatest sense of urgency, I say to this government, I appeal to this government, in heaven's name, at the very least move Fred Fawcett to another Ontario hospital where intensive and adequate treatment can be provided. It seems very, very doubtful on the overall evidence that the Ontario hospital at Penetang for the criminally insane is where this man should be, if he should be anywhere. I am suggesting an alternative.

I also hope that the government will consider action on the other two proposals made.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, when this House adjourned in the late hours last night, I think I had the floor then asking a question. It seems that I never left the place, but be that as it may, I am quite happy though today to be able to speak in this Budget debate at long last. I think both the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) and I were supposed to be on this debate much earlier, but unfortunately we were not able to take part.

This, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the House, is April 9. On that day in 1917 the Canadian Corps as a unit, stormed the heights of Vimy and drove the Germans back from that area and the Germans never held that high ground again. I think on that day Canada as a nation, as we know it today, was born. In this House at the present time there is an hon. member who was wounded on that day, as he fought, I believe, with the 4th CMRs, Canadian Mounted Rifles of the Fourth Division, and he is our very good friend and very popular member of this House, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mackenzie). I remember reading in one of the journals of this province, a very interesting article by that very lovely gentleman and very fine writer, Mr. Gregory Clark, who at that time, I believe, was also an officer in the 4th CMRs, and the incident of that dugout was very refreshing.

Again mentioning about the day of Vimy and Canada as a nation, it struck me as rather strange that recently, within the past week I think it was, no mention was made in this House by anybody about the death of General Crerar, who was the commander of the Canadian Army—the first commander of an army that fought as a Canadian army in any war. And I thought it was somewhat strange that some reference was not made to that most distinguished soldier.

Some of this address of mine was prepared some time ago. Nevertheless, in view of the fact that yesterday I was on a very important debate, I did not rewrite it. But a minor complaint forced me from the House for a couple of weeks in the month of March and regretfully I missed the wind-up addresses on the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

With all due respect to the permanent members of the press gallery, it was pleasing to me to note as I read the Globe and Mail in my hospital room, that Mr. Scott Young, one of the ranking columnists of the Globe and Mail, had graced the gallery and his comments were quite refreshing. I must say I sympathize with the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) and chuckled as Mr. Young pictured the scene in his column.

I missed also that masterpiece of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) as he closed the debate for our side, and whom one had to see and hear really to appreciate. You do not get the full flavour of his speech when you read it, and he is one member in this House, I am certain, who ever since he stormed these walls some six years ago, commands the full attention of the House. He is the one who pierces even the most hide-bound of the Tories opposite and the odd individuals to my left.

The mention of Mr. Scott Young also reminds me that we do not see him on TV any more at hockey games at Maple Leaf Gardens. Apparently he is persona non grata with those in authority there. In mentioning the Gardens it also reminds me of the biblical reference about the walls of Jericho tumbling down, and it seemed to me that story applied to the Gardens. As I understand now they are flying a Canadian flag. Apparently at one time they were not going to put it up until the Stanley Cup playdowns were over, but they had so many protests from all across this nation that they had to acquiesce. Probably some day we will have "O Canada" played in the Gardens.

Above all, I missed the raising at long last of our Canadian flag, but I had a rather vicarious thrill when, in absentia, I pictured those who in the weeks before had called the emblem a rag, and more recently a flag of appeasement. It would have done my heart good to see them stand with heads bared as they saluted our national standard.

I missed, too, that comprehensive analysis of the Budget by my hon. leader. His address, I note in Hansard, drew commendation from the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), the financial critic of the New Democratic Party, and engendered so much heat on the other side of the House that the fire alarm was triggered into action and the House had to adjourn for a time. Others more competent than I have bolstered the criticism of my hon. leader.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), in his Budget address characterized his presentation as a growth budget.

From this side of the House, sir, the growth seems more malign than benign; no additional taxes to add to our financial burden, but as Mr. Fraser Kelly, of the press gallery, forecasted, we can look for increases in 1966 unless the books are cooked to a frazzle the next term. Mr. Kelly says in his preview of the Budget: "Ontario taxpayers made more, sold more and drank more," I presume he does not mean Adam's ale, "in 1964. So they will not likely have to pay more, at least not much more in 1965. Consider it a windfall." I do not think he was referring to the mine then. Mr. Kelly added, "A godsend, an unexpected piece of good luck, because taxes are almost certain to go up in 1966." And then the heading is: "Good news from the jolly dairyman." Apparently the milk was a bit sour that day.

I agree with the competent and articulate young hon. member for Scarborough West. We were making slow headway, he pointed out, when he first started his Budget address and I guess it is the time of mortification, the days of Lent for the government, and I am sure that they have recently had some taste of mortification.

I have been able, since my return, to take part in some of the debates of the estimates. As usual, the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) was a target for a barrage of criticism. The Opposition was given a splendid opportunity for a fresh attack this session on this department, and also on The Department of Tourism and Information. We repeatedly pierced the government's defences as they tried to defend that new weapon in their arsenal of propaganda, "managed news." And then that one-act play that I was pleased to attend a la Erle Stanley Gardner—the case of the torn chesterfield, featuring "Fred the Ripper" was an amusing interlude.

Not so refreshing, nay, rather disturbing in its implications as events unfold in the republic to the south, where the barb is directed at the very fine member, and certainly an admirable representative of his race and hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite). I just noticed a little note here that the remarks made by hon. members on that day will echo around the world. It was from a letter to the Globe and Mail, signed by Mr. S. Black, international information service. They made a sad commentary as men and women of all creeds marched in the cause of freedom. It seems, too, that if that attitude is abroad, "Pacem in Terris" is a dream.

I have a note here that I wrote at that same time. My son, who is now a member of the Community of St. Paul, marched with the thousands at Selma. He told me that the march there drew no visible resistance from the municipal authorities, but frightening though was the almost implacable hatred so visible in the faces of those who watched the march. The strange part of it is that the next day—St. Patrick's day—he was in Boston where there was a march by the Freedom Council, and there in the cradle of liberty, where the revolution was born, he had an unpleasant experience. On that day, the animosity was viciously vocal—another evidence of man's inhumanity to man.

Why did these young students and others parade? Why are they going from Canada to Selma and other places? I suppose that we must reflect on the words of John Donne who many years ago said: No man is an island and whatever affects a human being in any part of the world affects all mankind. The tragic part of it was the bludgeoning of the minister from Boston, Reverend James Reeb, and his subsequent death—a tragic thing for all mankind because we are all involved in a thing like that.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this change of pace that the Budget debate offers, although those who preceded me in the debates on the estimates have made critical observations and many suggestions that are of obvious merit. Yet we have difficulty in piercing that sort of crustaceous cover which encompasses Ministers of the government. At times I feel that I and my colleagues in the Opposition and in the NDP are beating our heads against a stone wall, and certainly I felt frustrated as we discussed the theatres branch of The Department of Tourism and Information some weeks ago. Freedom seems to be the shibboleth, the password of this branch, but freedom without proper safeguards soon merges into licence and eroticism becomes a dominant theme in our society. The only hope then is that society realizes as a whole, the dangers that loom ahead and that the media of communications will realize the awful power that they have in moulding men's minds.

As I pointed out earlier, a number of influential dailies in the United States refuse to accept advertisements for films. To me, those who check the advertisements are failing us in their duty. Enticed by these lurid advertisements people flood our picture houses. I am reminded of a sign, as I mentioned before, that master of showmanship, the late P. T. Barnum had a sign up in one of his tents which read: "To the egress," and the gullible people flooded through there thinking that they were going to see one of those shows you see sometimes at circuses at maybe 50 cents a ticket—thinking they were going to see something that would give them a titillating experience, they flocked in the direction of the sign and where did they find themselves? In the open air.

Rumour has it—he is not here at the moment—that the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) has been offered a contract as a gag writer for one of the so-called comedians—one of those sick comedians who do not brighten, but darken the American scene—and in his flight of fancy—I do not know how many hon. members were here at the time—certainly as he concluded though an otherwise acceptable address, was as funny as the proverbial crutch on television shows. I understand that the hon. member has been approached by that great comedian, Mr. Jack Benny, to write his gags, but—

An hon. member: It was the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter).

Mr. Troy: Waterloo South? Pardon me. I must apologize to that distinguished hon.

member of the Legislature for Waterloo North.

An hon. member: He is not here now, anyway.

Mr. Troy: I apologize even more humbly because he happens to have been a member of the Algonquin Regiment.

But back to my main theme. My target here is The Department of Highways and it is very unfortunate that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is not here. For the past six years—ever since I came to this House—Highway 63 which links North Bay with the province of Quebec at Timiskaming has been brought to the attention of successive Ministers of that department, including the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Cass)—the former member for Northumberland who is now, I understand, in faraway Florida—and the present hon. Minister.

For a number of years now his planning staff has been designing highway improvements in the North Bay area but regardless of what changes were to be made, no new route was likely to be constructed to the built-up areas that border the north shore of Trout Lake. That artery, in a winding fashion, level crosses the tracks of the Ontario Northland Railway. This crossing is adjacent to a large housing development which includes a subdivision housing several hundred people who were brought to our area following the installation of the Bomarc launching pad and the SAGE complex.

The municipal authorities have repeatedly pointed out this problem both to the hon. Minister and to the members of the Ontario northland commission. Very recently, as I mentioned one night, speaking earlier—I do not know how I was able to get it into the debate—a young air force officer from the air station at North Bay and one of his twin daughters were killed on that crossing, and I was immediately called by the reeve of the township, asking me to impress on the hon. Minister, the necessity for quick action at that crossing.

Later the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn) asked a question of the hon. Minister with reference to that tragic accident. The hon. Minister answered that planning would be carried on with all possible acceleration. I later sent a note to him asking if that meant that the highway would be on the schedule for 1965. Now hon. members must remember that in April, last year, the hon. Minister said that improvements around the area of North Bay would be done in 1965. Then some weeks ago, the hon. Minister informed the people of the North Bay metropolitan area that the work had been postponed until 1966. I sent a note asking him if this answer meant that construction would be put back into 1965, and his answer was: "Not necessarily. I cannot say precisely when until I am in possession of more information which I have requested, but certainly we hope to correct this situation with the greatest possible minimum of delay." Well, those are superlatives in a very high order.

I want to read into the record an editorial of the Daily Nugget from North Bay, dated March 17th. As I said, the government through its Department of Highways waited. The caption of this editorial is, "Death didn't wait."

There was no delay on the part of the grim reaper. Just six days ago the Nugget published a story in which The Ontario Department of Highways said that it had decided that a reconstruction programme on Highway 63 leading eastward out of North Bay would be delayed until the spring of 1966. Originally it had been planned to start the project this year.

Death did not wait until 1966. It struck not once, but twice shortly before noon today in a train-auto crash at the narrow level crossing on Highway 63 at the point where the road approaches Trout Lake less than a mile east of the city limits.

Granted, reconstruction of the heavily travelled highway this spring would not have prevented the tragedy which occurred today but it points up in a very grim and sad manner the absurdity in permitting level crossings to exist in this day and age when many millions of dollars are spent in making fantastic progress in many other directions.

This newspaper on countless occasions has stated that there should not be a level crossing in this country. This newspaper has also frequently drawn attention to archaic Highway 63, a narrow, winding, hilly road, which daily must accommodate a heavy amount of traffic, as a result of new subdivisions in the lake area, the SAGE complex, the big summer population of Trout Lake and the increasing amount of travel between the city, Redbridge, Feronia and Témiskaming, Quebec. But that little narrow bridge and level crossing located at the foot of a steep slope on a highway less than a mile east of the city is the one spot above all others where death lurks and it came out into the open today.

Mr. Speaker, they said I pressed for action on this Highway 63 many times. Recently I have had a spate of letters from industrialists in the area, from those that use that highway.

Remember, it is the connection between Ontario and the province of Quebec. It was built and completed in the days of the Hepburn government. First it was a gravel road and later on a hard surface was put on it. Now that was about 20 years ago or more, 30 years ago. The reason I know is that I was at the opening of the highway and I know very well that Mr. Oliva Dionne of Corbeil was up there that day and his quintuplets were just two or three years old.

So it was 1937, I think, that it was opened, sometime around then. It was surfaced and there has been no reconstruction of that road in those years, except in the upper reaches.

Now there is a tremendous amount of traffic on that road going north. It is becoming a very dangerous road and this condition has been impressed on the Ministers for years. So I hope that at least one part of it will be looked after—you do not have to improve the whole road to improve the condition at that level crossing. That certainly must be on the record this year!

The report of the select committee on youth was presented this morning and I know that certain reference was made to community colleges. Much has been said already in this House and no doubt much more will be said on the subject of community colleges. There is no question in my mind, and I know the consensus in our party is that since we want to keep pace with changing times the inclusion of such schools of learning is a must in this province.

According to what one reads in the press there is a divergence of opinion among university heads over the role that such institutions should play. My own opinion is that in addition to preparing students for the world of work in the technical and technological field, these colleges should also serve those who are interested in the humanities. There should definitely be a door open to the universities following graduation from the community colleges so those who merit it would be given an opportunity to broaden their range of knowledge.

It is quite heartening to note that Dr. Murray G. Ross, a fellow native of the Maritimes who is president of York University, champions that concept. The liberal arts must have a place in these institutions and graduates a place in further training in our universities. Any other course would, in my opinion, be a retrograde step.

Naturally, we in North Bay are very much interested in community colleges. We at one time tried to get a charter for the North-eastern Ontario University. That was spiked. We then tried to get a degree granting charter for the North Bay college. That was also spiked. So we are quite interested in that particular project.

Also we are quite interested, when the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) comes before us with his estimates, in the North Bay teachers college. Time goes on and if it is not reconstructed or a new one put up, it will be a worthy symbol for the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) as one of the archæological sites.

Now, on regional development we have had a spate of words by hon. Ministers of the Crown on this subject, but very little action. In my area we are really doing something about it. The prejudices and obstinacies that existed before are, I am happy to relate, gradually disappearing. Already the hospital boards of our two general hospitals are doing what the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells) had suggested about regional councils. Harmonious relations now exist and the first step for combining facilities to meet the needs of our area have been taken. The boards, with the approval of the Ontario hospital commission, have planned a joint laundry service. True, this is not a major move, but certainly it is a breakthrough.

I look forward eagerly to the statement of the hon. Minister of Education on secondary schools and community colleges and elementary schools. I am sure, too, that he believes that the road to higher education should not be barred to those with the desire and the capacity to achieve it. I say again, I hope that the efforts of my own community that have been pursued for many years for an institution of higher learning will be rewarded.

Our secondary school system in Nipissing is expanding yearly, with additions planned this year for existing institutions and the opening next September of a new composite school in the township of Widdifield to service that growing community.

I was unable to be present in this House when the estimates of The Department of University Affairs were presented by the hon. Minister of Education. A perusal of the debates on that occasion has shown me that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), the major critic of our party on that most important subject, made his usual able contribution to the debate.

My reference to education at this time has recalled to my mind the loss that The Department of Education has suffered particularly, and the civil service of this province generally, in the sudden passing of the director of education, Dr. Stanley Rivers. I want to add my words of sympathy to those no doubt already expressed to his bereaved wife and family. My association with Dr. Rivers dates back to the days when he was on the staff of North Bay teachers college. Then as now, the students had to use the facilities of one of our secondary schools for recreation and games. I hope that the reconstruction of that ancient pile, the North Bay teachers college, is planned early.

Speaking of demises, I must also refer to the recent death of Dr. Frank Wallace, MA, LL.D., who had been for many years the principal of the North Bay collegiate institute and vocational school, and before that the North Bay collegiate. When I first came to North Bay as a teacher, Dr. Wallace was the principal. He was a very fine representative of the teaching profession and was honoured some years ago by Queen's University with the degree of LL.D.

I share many of the views on education of the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Racine), which were expressed in this House earlier in this debate. We in Nipissing, as well as in many parts of northeastern Ontario, have a large Catholic population. Many of my constituents, by obligation, have to pay taxes in the two minor fields of education and provide voluntary support to Catholic secondary education. It goes without saying that were there not a separate school system in Ontario, the cost of education would be much higher to the already overburdened taxpayers. Here I might emphasize that other jurisdictions are, in addition to la belle province, accepting their obligations to minorities by contributing to the costs of denominational high schools.

Earlier in this session I attempted to put a question on the order paper. It was not accepted by the Speaker. The question was: Is it the practice of this government to have translated into French all Acts of this House as provided in a motion ordered in the session of 1792-94, for the benefit of the some 700,000 French residents of Ontario? It was not accepted, but it was most interesting when I was away, as I say, the Speaker in his wisdom rejected the question; but while I was absent from the House, I read that the hon. member for Woodbine had submitted a resolution on this subject. I had searched the archives and I found this extract that said in part one, page 23, 1792-94:

On a motion made and seconded, ordered that such Acts that have already passed, or may hereafter pass, the Legislature of this province be translated into the French language for the benefit of the inhabitants of the western district (Windsor) of this province and other French settlers who may come to reside within this province, and that A. MacDonnell, Esquire, Clerk of this House, be likewise employed as a French translator for this and other purposes of this House.

So the hon. member for Woodbine had given a release expanding on this problem.

It is interesting to note also that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) had been to Quebec province and was there at the time of the Carnival. He also, as a guest at dinner, spoke about bilingualism in the Laurentian University, and what his ideas were about bilingualism in this province, about bilingual signs and so on, although it seems to me that there is no further question about bilingual signs. The former Prime Minister of this province said that the deletion of the word "only" in the particular clause that covered signs, meant that you could have bilingual signs in the province.

Talking about bilingualism, he referred to the bilingual university, Laurentian University. Then I note in the press that students from that university came before the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism recently in Toronto and they pointed out they were two cultures. There was no such thing as any harmonious agreement between them. The French students sat in one place, the English students in another. There was very little communication which you would call bilingual. This is a very tragic situation to me, at a bilingual university, and there should be some way that, if necessary by edict or otherwise, English students be told to sit with their French compatriots and the French with the English.

There is another strange thing, too, in the city of Ottawa. I noticed in the offices of the Ontario hospital services commission that if you speak the French language and speak very little English, you have to bring an interpreter. I notice in Le Droit, "ici on ne parle que l'Anglais"—English only spoken here. If you are French speaking you must bring an interpreter there if you want to be heard. A strange thing in the city of Ottawa, where there are so many French Canadians.

Recently, we have had quite a disturbance in the home of the aged at North Bay. I had asked the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) if he would conduct an investigation of charges that were made of maladministra-tion of the Home. He said he would not do so unless the president and the chairman of the board itself would order an inquiry. But I think in justice to the home itself; in justice to the municipalities that support that home; in justice also to those who have relatives in the home, that an inquiry should be held. I notice the editorial in the North Bay Nugget says it would clear the air. Also, the city of North Bay apparently supports that idea and so does the township of West Ferris.

In my home city we expect to have a fairly active construction year, but the city received a severe setback recently because of an antiquated bylaw which prevented the erection of buildings beyond a certain height. The planning board, operating on a bylaw 20 years old, has made it known that it has no other course than to reject a permit for a proposed five-storey medical centre on one of our commercial streets because it contravenes this outmoded zoning regulation. Because of previous experience and the ramifications involved in the revision of a bylaw governing buildings, a period of two years might be needed in correcting this situation, which, to say the least, is ridiculous. My fellow citizens are concerned and disturbed enough by the loss of defence personnel, and the possibility of the CNR and CPR run-throughs, to be submissive to any threat to our multi-million dollar construction programme. Already there are 17 buildings in the city more than 35 feet in height, but the city council reluctantly turned down the application.

In the past 20 years, 14 amendments have been made to the bylaw, until two years ago, the planning board were allowed to make use of certain discretionary powers to allow buildings to be constructed beyond the legal height when it was felt it might be good for a certain area of the city. Because of certain changes in provincial legislation, we no longer have the authority to break the bylaw. While the committees of adjustments may deal, I believe, with minor variances, neither the council nor the planning board nor the committee of adjustment are permitted to authorize major changes.

Of course there is always an out to this setback clause, but apparently the planners of this centre feel that if this procedure were adopted a valuable parking space would be lost. I hope that if an application comes from this city to the planning board and then on to the municipal board that quick action will be taken.

The North Bay defence installations which include the Bomarc launching pads and the SAGE complex and the RCAF station have been in the news in recent weeks. Mr. Kenneth Drushka, writing recently in the Globe and Mail magazine quotes Mr. Arthur Pape, a past president of the students' union for peace action as saying:

The main interest in the community [meaning North Bay] was not one of concern for peace, but for the best economic interests of the town.

As the North Bay Nugget editorial queried:

Has it ever occurred to such people that the very existence of defence installations such as those at North Bay are in the interests of peace? These are the deterrents which, at the moment, are imperative in the face of aggressor nations. After all, the city of North Bay was selected as a key centre in the defence of this continent and just because it was, there was no protest staged at that time.

We welcomed the personnel of the armed services and their families. We have taken into our hearts and our city the officers and men of the United States Air Force. Not only have all these contributed to the economy of our area but they have fitted into our community life and become real citizens of our community.

May I assure this House that an area that gave so many sons and daughters to the armed services of this nation in World War I and in World War II and in Korea, with the honour roll of the fallen a long one, is as concerned as any part of Canada, and as any group in our universities or anywhere else, in its desire for peace.

We know, as the well-beloved Pope John stated to the world some years ago, "All is lost in war; nothing is lost in peace." In a sentence, Mr. Speaker, we in our area are not money-hungry warmongers.

Almost daily we find and read in our news stories about contraceptive pills or literature promoting the use of these pills or other contraceptive devices. At the present time, the Catholic Church under the order of His Holiness Pope Paul VI, is giving this problem wide and profound study and a group of people of high repute in many fields is presently studying this matter; but I point out that to us Catholics birth control is not only social in its significance, but religious and moral as well.

In the meantime, while the Church group is carrying out its duties, the position of the Church remains unchanged. I have before me a certain number of extracts from papers. One is: "Toronto Does Give Birth Control Data"; and another says "OK Birth Control Device for Families on Welfare." Another is "A Pussy-Footing Politician" and refers, I presume, to—I do not know which politician it refers to, maybe the ones over there because they are in power and I believe that under the criminal code the dissemination of birth control data is against the law. Is that not right?

This article from the Toronto Daily Star says:

Toronto board of health decided "to shout out loud" and make public the fact that its health workers are providing birth control information to women who want it.

The medical officer of health, Dr. Boyd, revealed that for some time his nurses and officials have been risking prosecution by advising on birth control methods.

Section 150 of the criminal code makes it an offence to sell advertising or to give instructions about any contraceptive device.

Alderman Horace Brown is quoted as saying, "If I have to break a foolish, unnatural illegal law to do this, then I will willingly go to jail. We should tell the world what we are doing and be proud of it."

I do not know if one should be proud of breaking the law. If there is a law in the books that the people of this province think is illegal, unjust and should not be there, they should make strong representation to the federal government to have the law changed.

We—as far as the people of my faith are concerned—I think we agree, all of us, with the statement of Cardinal Cushing on birth control when he said that Catholics do not need the support of civil law to be faithful to their own religious conviction, but they do not seek to impose by law their moral values on other members of society. So as far as the people of my faith are concerned, if there is a law about birth control pills on the books that is OK; but in the meantime it seems to me to be hypocrisy to have a law on the books and do nothing about infractions.

The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) has submitted a resolution on the order paper in regard to divorce.

Mr. Speaker, some of us in this party happen to be Catholics and have very definite ideas about divorce. But again the same principle applies. We do not want to pass, as Cardinal Cushing said in his statement, impose by law, our moral values on other members of society. I think many will agree that the laws governing divorce are very defined and very limited and the resolution of the hon. member for Wellington South will be strongly supported, I think, by people all across this province.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Troy: Again I go to my local newspapers for inspiration and I find the heading is "Hope for Better Progress in Liquor Laws." I am glad to note that the editorial writer on my local newspaper believes, as I do, that these laws are "grotesque." I must not attribute that word to the editor of the North Bay Nugget, the word is from a Toronto newspaper editorial, but he agrees that the description is fitting indeed.

It is encouraging that the Ontario government has let it be known, I think, that it intends to do something about the liquor laws, but I would point out that what did we do when the liquor control board came before our committee but get bogged down into such questions as the legal age at which young people would be permitted to go into beverage rooms or to consume alcohol in their homes.

We must come to grips with this liquor question, I think, and as long as liquor is government-controlled it should be controlled equably and realistically. So I certainly hope that something will be done before this session is over about liquor laws.

Again, I find that my local newspaper says that many vital debates are ahead. It is now almost Easter time and we have not yet brought before the House medical insurance legislation, we have not completed the electoral redistribution, we have not any legislation on community colleges, we have not rewritten The Child Welfare Act, or revised The Liquor Control Act, or legislation on tobacco and other very important matters—so we are getting somewhat behind.

As a little interlude here, I would like to—I do not see the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Whitney) here—but some hon. members may recall during the debates on the estimates of The Department of Tourism and Information that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox posed a question to me. Now at the time I did not know what the hon. member was driving at and I informed him and the hon. members of this House, who seemingly were somewhat mystified also, that I would take the hon. member's question under advisement and would answer him later.

After reading his question later in Hansard, I am still uncertain of his purpose but I hope this statement will satisfy him and the other hon. members. It had to do with the promotion of the tourist industry and he asked was I one who wanted to promote "See America First." Well, I do not promote that slogan "See America First." My general slogan to the people of this province as they consider tourist areas for their vacation is "See Ontario."

But, and it is a big but, my particular slogan coincides with that of the Nipissing regional tourist council whose slogan was blazoned at our information booth during the Canadian National Sportsman's show last month, at least in the month of February. That slogan was "Go north, go Nipissing"; and 10,000 people had shopping bags with those words "Go north, go Nipissing." I hope they go shopping up north, where nature is bountiful and the people are friendly.

I hope to see you, Mr. Speaker, and the other hon. members of the House on the route of the voyageur.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): All the Cabinet Ministers were up there to see you at the last election.

Mr. Troy: That is right. The voyageurs then had a rough time. Now, in Hansard, I find a question of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Freeman).

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests. Would the hon. Minister explain to the House the reasons for his department's refusal to grant timber limits to existing and prospective new woods industries in the Sioux Lookout area?

And the hon. Minister (Mr. Roberts) answered:

I know of no refusal to grant timber licences or timber supplies to existing Sioux Lookout industries. As a matter of fact, within the immediate past Lac Seul Land and Lumber Company has obtained considerable areas to meet their requirements of its expanding modern sawmill at Hudson, ten miles from Sioux Lookout, at which plant a number of people who live in the town of Sioux Lookout are employed, I believe it is as many as 50. In the past, there has been expectation not only locally, but in our department, that a pulp and paper mill would be established in the vicinity of Sioux Lookout. However, despite most exhaustive feasibility and economic studies by the entities contemplating the mill, this has not been the case. There has been, however, considerable expansion at the Lakehead.

And he goes on and:

Supplies to meet such expansion have, in part, been provided in the Sioux Lookout area. This in turn has resulted, and should continue to result, in considerable opportunity for local employment. Curiously enough, there seems to be a shortage of labour right across northwestern Ontario at the present time which I am sure the hon. member for Fort William will be pleased about, that it means full employment.

And with regard to prospective new industry, the department is always ready and willing to do business with bona fide customers to the extent of the availability of wood.

The answer I do not think satisfies, or would not satisfy the people of Sioux Lookout, Mr. Speaker, because—I presume he has seen this bulletin from Sioux Lookout, which is dated March 22. I presume that the hon. member for Fort William sent him across that article. There are letters from Mr. Moore to the hon. Minister, and then letters to him from Mr. S. D. Saunders, the president of the Sioux Lookout chamber of commerce, then from the hon. Minister to Mr. Saunders and so on. But I will just read the final one: “coup de grâce,” it says:

As things now stand, there is a narrow 12-mile wide strip running north and south which serves as a line of demarcation between the W. A. Seaman limits to the west, and those of the Great Lakes Power and Paper Company to the east. Outside of its function as a separation between the two timber limits, it will never serve any other purpose. We have no complaint that ample limits have not been provided to keep the Hudson mill in full operation. This is a local operation and benefits the whole area, but we see no reason for the government action in granting further reserve of 4,314.6 square miles to the Great Lakes Paper Company. We have been told that this was necessary because further limits were essential to satisfy the banks who were advancing the money to the Great Lakes Paper Company for additions to the Port Arthur mill. When Sioux Lookout Forest Products asked for extended limits so that they could raise money, they were flatly refused. Why should government policy change so radically in such a short time? There must be a reason and we can only wonder as to what it is. Obviously the Roberts government believes in following Bible teachings to the last degree and we quote: For he that hath to him shall be given, and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

Mr. Bryden: That is their philosophy, all right.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Will the hon member just allow me to make a comment there?

Mr. Troy: Well, I would rather, sir, that you—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, the hon. member is making a statement that needs clearing up, and one of the hon. members this morning did what I thought was a very sensible thing, he cleared as he went. I took it that he was honest in his purpose, and if this hon. member is the same perhaps he will let me clear it.

I would like to say this, that the situation in regard to the Sioux Lookout as far as the timber allocations are concerned at the present time, having in mind the overall picture, is certainly as good as it possibly could be, and should reflect beneficially to the Sioux Lookout area as well as elsewhere. A very large expansion at the Lakehead by the Great Lakes Company was entirely dependent on getting the required additional areas so that the total amount of wood that would be necessary for this expansion would be assured. That was done in the way that was indicated, part of it from areas in the Sioux Lookout district. That will reflect very definitely in Sioux Lookout itself as a result of cutting operations and shipping and work in that area, as well as elsewhere.

With regard to any other or local industry, there has never been anything refused in the form of an application for wood in that area. The whole question has been one of availability, and you cannot make wood available to more than a certain number of people in the area. The mill at Hudson has taken care, to a very great extent, of the situation, and is resulting in a larger local production than has been the case for a long time in the past.

Now, just a matter of hours ago, I received a phone call from the general manager of the Marathon Company informing me that they were about to enter into an agreement with Wellwoods of Canada Limited, which will assure some 45 million square feet of plywood a year on a $2 million investment, to take place at Long Lac, which will benefit areas in the Geraldton district part of the north in a way that I am sure everybody will be glad to hear.

Mr. Troy: Thank you very much for your interjections there, because it gives me an opportunity then to reply later. I just want to say that this is fine, that you are expanding the Head of the Lakes area, and in Marathon, too, but you have taken away. There is no possibility then of the small mill in Sioux Lookout, I think.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My friend is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think perhaps we are getting into a discussion here when we are really on the Budget debate, and I would ask the member for Nipissing as the time is nearing one o'clock, if he would perhaps conclude his remarks.

Mr. Troy: I accept that because I am just down the last mile and you always run better the last mile. I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I thought perhaps that if the member had just five or ten minutes he might have completed his remarks in that time.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests is obeying an order—

Mr. Troy: No, Mr. Speaker, I want my hour in the sun.

Mr. Troy moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, we will resume the estimates of The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Before the motion is put, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister two questions? First, does he anticipate that the House will embark on any new estimates in the few days remaining next week, and secondly, what night sessions does he envisage at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The next department after this is Economics and Development. As I see the order paper and what we have before us, I would not think that we would touch that department before the Easter recess. However, I cannot give you any guarantee, but that would be my opinion.

We will sit Tuesday night, and I am aiming at the 6 o'clock Wednesday afternoon adjournment until Tuesday, April 27.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock, p.m.

No. 73

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, April 12, 1965

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

Price per session $3.00. Address, Clerk of the House, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto.

CONTENTS

Monday, April 12, 1965

General Sessions Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2149
Ontario Housing Corporation Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Randall, first reading	2149
Sheridan Park Corporation Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Randall, first reading	2149
Lifesaving equipment and services and other safeguards for the public at public beaches, bill to require and regulate, Mr. Paterson, first reading	2149
Presenting report, Mr. Spooner	2149
Estimates, Department of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Simonett, continued	2151
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2180

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, in the east gallery, students from Riverdale collegiate institute, Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE GENERAL SESSIONS ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, a brief word of explanation. There are two sections in the amending bill as presented; one to bring the sittings of the general sessions of the peace in Essex county from the third Monday in November to the first Monday in October. That is to have it coincide with the non-jury sittings. The other amendment is to enable the chief judge of the district and county court to require additional sittings of the court at such time as he may specify.

THE ONTARIO HOUSING CORPORATION ACT, 1964

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Housing Corporation Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, by word of explanation, this changes the fiscal year end of the corporation from April 1 to January 1 in line with the fiscal year end of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with whom we are working very closely.

THE SHERIDAN PARK CORPORATION ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Randall moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Sheridan Park Corporation Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, the tenants in the Sheridan Park corporation would like to exchange properties in some instances and it is not provided in the Act. Also, the success of selling the properties out there is to date very encouraging and we may want to option other properties at a later date. These are the reasons for changing the Act.

PUBLIC BEACHES

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to require and regulate lifesaving equipment and services and other safeguards for the public at public beaches.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) begs to present the third annual report of the Ontario municipal employees' retirement board for the year ended December 31, 1964.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), notice of which has been submitted.

What action does the hon. Prime Minister intend to take in response to the appeal to him of the Greater Niagara ministerial association to ban racing at Fort Erie on Good Friday?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, the schedule which included this date was, of course, granted by the Ontario racing commission. It occurred only because of the lateness this year of the Easter season. Normally, Good Friday would not be involved.

However, upon checking into the matter I find out that racing is carried on pretty widely on this date in other parts of North America; and I am assured that racing will not begin on this date until after the time that the morning church services will be concluded.

Mr. Bukator: May I ask a supplementary question? Does the hon. Prime Minister not believe that this is opening the door of free enterprise just a little too far?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that all the movies are open on Good Friday, and every form of public entertainment that we have in this province will be operating on Good Friday.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), notice of which has been in his hands for some days.

In view of the circumstances following the accident at Yorkdale vocational school recently can the hon. Minister assure the House that school principals in Ontario have full power to take whatever action is necessary in cases of emergency?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the principals do have this power presently. There is no necessity to consider legislation. The powers to look after emergencies of this nature are in the hands of the principals at this time.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld).

Will the hon. Minister advise if the Canadian flag is being reproduced on The Department of Tourism and Information tourist promotional literature now in production? If not, will the hon. Minister advise if this will be done in future productions?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the Canadian flag does not appear in any of the newly produced pieces of departmental literature simply because at the time the literature went to press, most of it early last fall and winter, the new Canadian flag was not officially adopted.

I would say in answer to the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite likely that the new Canadian flag will appear in literature, inasmuch as the photographs and material are changed from year to year.

Mr. Paterson: Will the hon. Minister permit a supplementary question?

Would the hon. Minister consider reprinting his main folder this year, the "Friendly, Familiar, Foreign and Near" brochure that is going to the United States and having them imprinted with the Canadian flag?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is feasible, but we will look into it. I might just say that it may well be possible to circulate with the folder the new Canadian flag piece of literature which the federal government has produced.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Education, a copy of which was submitted last week but which he probably will be better able to answer today.

Has the hon. Minister during his term of office succeeded in recruiting research graduates at the Ph.D. master or honour degree level at salaries ranging from $7,200 to $5,250, according to the degree?

If he has, does he consider this salary commensurate with the responsibilities of the appointment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are really two or three points to the hon. member's question. As I am sure he fully understands, recruitment is the responsibility given to the civil service commission under The Public Service Act and the determination of the salary levels are those to be recommended to the Treasury board.

Since I have been Minister, personnel of this nature have not been sought by The Department of Education, but I think I should point out that in the present competition being run for us by the civil service commission, three candidates with honour degrees, two with masters' degrees, one with a Ph.D., and one other candidate who is close to completing his master's degree, have now applied. This came as a result of this one advertisement in the Globe and Mail.

I should also point out to the hon. member—and perhaps this was not mentioned at the time—that the maximums, which are also of some interest in the advertisements, the maximums in these categories are $6,300, $7,500 and $9,000, respectively.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The forty-eighth order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

(continued)

On vote 604:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I have some fairly extended remarks I should like to make on this vote. I could have dealt with them in my introductory remarks, but I felt that they might come more appropriately under the estimate dealing directly with conservation authorities.

Let me, Mr. Chairman, at the outset say that I know of no one who does not support the objectives of our conservation authorities. As the agencies which are seeking to cope with the sins of omission and commission in managing our river valleys, they are, in my view, among the most important public bodies in the province today. Unfortunately, however, I think the procedures which have been used in land acquisition have created bad public relations. Even more important, I think that in the process, the basic civic and property rights of the individual have been seriously impaired. I want to review the general situation in this connection and, to begin with, I want to go back to the whole episode of the Pittock dam, the major project of the Upper Thames River conservation authority.

I recognize that the government has appointed a three-man tribunal which is going to be looking into this problem, negotiating with each of the landowners involved and making a recommendation back to the government. Our hope would be that this would provide a solution. I must say that my wondering as to whether or not this procedure is effective, has tended to grow rather than to lessen.

I recall that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) was quite enthusiastic about this procedure when we were debating the amendment to The Expropriation Procedures Act. He said that it had worked effectively with expropriation in connection with pipelines in Middlesex and west of there, but I was interested to learn, in checking more recently in the Woodstock area, that some eight to ten weeks after this three-man tribunal was appointed by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), there are some people who have not yet been approached by the tribunal; whether or not there is anything like genuine negotiations going on is a matter of personal judgment.

However, I leave that because, I think, as I stated when we debated second reading, that we would just have to wait and see what experience holds in the use of this particular kind of agency.

However, in dealing with this whole episode, I think the thing that disturbs those involved, as well as a growing number of people across the province, is the attitude of the authority involved. For example, Irwin Hartley, the Oxford federation of agriculture president, stated in the debate that took place at the Ontario federation of agriculture convention last November that the agency was guilty of what he described as "an overbearing attitude."

Stan Down, the chairman of the farmers' committee which has been battling their cause through many months, is quoted in an article in the Rural Co-operator as stating that the people were "bullied and threatened" by the authority.

Wilfred Bishop, director of the hog producers, and a farmer well-known in Oxford county, has contended that if they did not accept the assessed value that had been placed on their property, they were told that it would cost them some $3,000 in legal costs to be able to appeal through to the Ontario municipal board. As Mr. Bishop stated in the debate at the OFA convention, this was nothing but a "veiled threat."

There are comments from such well-known men as Charles Munro, a farmer in Oxford county, and now vice-president of the Ontario federation of agriculture, stating that the federation had sought to make its services available to the authority in trying to resolve this difficulty as far back as a year ago. "We had never even received a reply," Mr. Munro has stated.

I raised the proposal in some of my public statements that if the government or the authority wanted to create a feeling of goodwill with the people involved, they should make available the fee appraisal figures which had been sought, somewhat reluctantly, but ultimately, by the authority because there was a bit of a cat-and-mouse game going on between the authority and the owners involved. They did not know if the prices being offered then were in accordance with the fee appraisal figures or whether they were higher or lower. The comment of the then chairman, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Pittock) in this House with reference to making these figures available was: "Why should we? We paid for the appraisals. This is a private and personal matter." In other words, appraisals that were secured by the expenditure of public moneys were considered a private and personal matter, and were not made available to the people involved.

Mixed in with all this overbearing attitude—and to substantiate it I have quoted about half-a-dozen well-known and respected people, most of whom are residents of Oxford county—is another factor. This is one of the most disturbing things about this whole problem, Mr. Chairman; the authority seems to change its mind as to exactly how much land it wants in many instances and the normal difficulties of having your property taken away from you forcibly were augmented by these reversals of decision that constantly took place.

I want to put a few of these on record to show you the kind of situation that is being faced by these people. As I will point out in my later remarks, this is characteristic of the actions of those who have had to cope with the expropriating or the land acquisition procedures of other conservation authorities, too.

For example, I have here a set of, in effect, sworn statements. They are not legally sworn statements; they were prepared authoritatively by each of the people involved when this committee of farmers in Oxford county made their presentation to the McRuer commission. They point out the extent to which the civil rights of the people involved were being violated. From these statements, which are now on public record with the McRuer commission, I am going to draw the attention of the hon. members of the House to some of the things that happened.

For example, in the case of one farmer by the name of John Thornton, the first approach of the authority was to take his whole farm; the offer was something like $40,000. On October 21, 1964, they received a letter from the Thames authority, stating that they now wanted only 90.6 acres and offering a price of $19,500. They also wanted a 16-acre field to use as a borrow area. Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what a borrow area is.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): A gravel pit!

Mr. MacDonald: A gravel pit?

Mr. McKeough: They borrow the earth from it.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, good. Mr. Thornton was later told by the consulting engineer that the authority no longer needed the borrow area. Two weeks later, Mr. Chairman, on November 4, they met the representatives of the authority in their solicitor's office and agreed to accept $23,000 for the 90.6 acres. The solicitor sent a letter off accepting the deal. But within a few days, he received still another letter from the authority saying that they were reverting to their original proposal and were going to take the whole farm of 150 acres.

One of the recommendations in the Ontario federation of agriculture's resolution passed at its annual meeting was that there should be some sort of a public hearing in which an agency which was going to expropriate public lands should have to prove why they were needed, and what land was needed. I, for one, do not pretend to be enough of an expert in this to know exactly how that kind of a public hearing would operate, but I think the case that the Ontario federation of agriculture had in mind is well proven. When one thinks of the added difficulties that these property owners had by being faced with a rapid succession of changes; and, as I shall show later, these changes took place at the strangest stage in all of the negotiations, so that they never knew exactly how much of their land was going to be taken by the public agency.

For example, another case out in the Woodstock area was that of Alfons Ciskowski, who was a tobacco farmer. Here is a case of a man who was going to have—indeed, I will read the four or five paragraphs here, because this is almost unbelievable:

The land buyer from the Upper Thames valley told me they wanted 60 acres and offered $22,000. I told him at that time that he was taking my best tobacco land and I could not consider losing that acreage with all my buildings and machinery left. The land buyer came back and said that they now wanted 80.25 acres for the same money. He said that some of my buildings would be flooded and I would have to move them. I told them if they took the best half of my 168-acre farm, then they should take all of the farm. They said they did not have to and that they could take any part they wanted. The buyer then came back and offered $10 per acre for all the damage incurred on my farm, for all time.

In other words, a $10 per acre payment, in perpetuity, for damage that his farm might sustain because of flooding.

I told them that one acre of tobacco was worth more each year than the entire offer. I was told in the fall of 1964 that they had changed their mind and no longer required my land, that they would remove the expropriation order from the registry office. On checking an official map made by the engineers I find that more land than they offered to buy would be flooded, that I could not reach one field to work because of the lake created in between.

In other words, at the peak flood period, his farm was going to be cut in half by a lake.

Here the whole farm was going to be taken—there are variations in the picture, but ultimately the whole farm was to be taken by expropriation—and at some stage, it was suggested that he take $10 per acre, in perpetuity, for the damage he might sustain. Incidentally, when he asked—this is not in his statement, but I know it from my investigations up there—what procedure could be taken if this was not satisfactory and he did not accept it, they said he would have to sue sometime later when the damage was sustained, and take his chances in court.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no property owner should have to contend with that kind of vacillation in policy, and that kind of treatment, from a public authority. The statement of Ross Hewitt, the key point in it, which he protested before the McRuer commission, was that he did not agree with the “big stick” methods being used—that if he did not accept the offer that was being made, he would have to go to the court of arbitration.

Here is another statement, from W. G. Goodwin. Let me quote one paragraph:

On July 17, 1964, I made a written request to the UTRCA, to retain part of my property that I felt was not needed by the UTRCA. This request was voted on by the authority and rejected. On October 12, my solicitor informed me that the UTRCA was willing to let me retain my house and the acreage not needed by them.

In other words, a reversal of policy.

But on October 21 I had found an alternative house and purchased this with possession to be taken on October 31, 1964. Since I had invested considerable money in this new location, I moved on October 31.

So here is a case of a man who asked the authority to let him keep part of his land with his home. The authority said no. He goes off and buys another house and, just as he is going to move into this house, the authority says he can have his home. I repeat,

I do not think any person should have to contend with this kind of conduct.

Let me quote from the statement of Ted C. Hewitt to the McRuer commission:

I located alternative property on March 25 and was to make a large payment on May 25. When the date for this payment arrived I tried to borrow money from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Canada on the strength of the expropriation of my land, and was refused. I then had a talk with the manager of the Canada Permanent and was told that he would not loan on the strength of the expropriation and, if I settled, he would advance the money. I had then to locate somebody to give me a personal loan. The contractor was given my house as part of his contract.

Mr. Chairman, just let me interject: While all these negotiations are going on, the seeking of alternative homes, the contractor was given his house as part of the contract with the UTRCA.

And while I was still living there people kept coming around, peering in the windows, and walking all over. I was never given the chance to purchase my house and to move it. I was told if I did not co-operate I would be evicted on 24 hours' notice.

Little wonder that responsible people in the community referred to the “overbearing” attitude.

The next one, Mary Chester:

When the land buyer arrived I asked if they would only take the land they needed and leave my buildings. There were indications that they would do this. On October 27, I visited Mr. McCall at Fanshawe and asked about keeping 40 acres and my buildings. He agreed that this was possible. On October 30, I was talking to the UTRCA officials in my solicitor's office. They offered to trade me 40 acres of land and buildings on another property for my 50 acres and buildings. I was given no time to make a decision as the buildings were to be sold the next day. When I was reluctant to decide in such a hurry I was told to get out. The buildings were sold the following day.

Well, that speaks for itself.

Finally, there is the case of Stan Down, who is the chairman of the farmers' committee out in this area and who has been leading the battle for some equity in their negotiations. I think, without reading from Mr. Down's statement, it can be put very simply.

They came to get his whole farm—300 acres. He, in the first instance, found another farm with which he was satisfied. He put a $5,000 payment down on this other farm, to pay the rest when he actually took possession. When that date came, on May 1, he had not been able to close any deal with the authority and therefore was not in a position to make the rest of the payment. When he went back to the farmer, the farmer had come to the conclusion that the farm was worth more, so the whole deal fell through and he got his $5,000 back. In other words, the farm, which would have been a satisfactory alternative, was lost to him because of the fact that the authority had not completed the negotiations and the farmer was still “up in the air.”

However, he then went out and found an alternative property, with a home on it. He got only two weeks' opportunity to remodel this home before he moved in, and he moved in on October 1 last year. Then, Mr. Chairman, believe it or not, after he had moved into an alternative home, which he had bought and renovated, the authority came back to him and said that he could retain part of his farm, including the buildings. And this is the proposition with which, I understand, they are insisting he must now go along.

This kind of thing, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, is absolutely intolerable in my view. And if this is the kind of thing that is happening, then I think the Ontario federation of agriculture is correct in their resolution when they say that any public authority that is going to be expropriating lands and forcefully taking lands, should have to justify the land they require through some sort of a public hearing. Then everybody will know that it is really needed, and there will not be the switching of plans with such frequency as happened in the instance of the Pittock dam project.

Mr. Chairman, I leave the Pittock dam, but not the Upper Thames valley conservation authority, for one moment; I want to place on record another instance of the kind of thing that, apparently, the authority has been guilty of over a number of years.

I have here, as a result of representations that were made to me verbally, and I sought them in writing, a letter from Mr. Ed. Bartlett, of 208 Norfolk Street, Stratford, Ontario. I am going to quote the greater part of this letter. It speaks for itself, it needs no comment from anybody else:

We owned the farm on which the Wildwood dam is being constructed. In the fall of 1960 the TVA—

These are his initials, incidentally, if I may interject, for the Thames valley authority.

—published in the local paper that they were prepared to buy land for the construction of Wildwood. The following winter they sent appraisers who came when the snow was deep. There were two different appraisals within a short time, both when the snow was deep. The first appraiser walked as far as the creek, about a quarter of a mile across the farm, and the second, W. E. Nairn, auctioneer, did not go past the house.

The findings of these appraisers were made known to us before spring, about a month after the last neighbour had received his.

The appraisals for all of the neighbouring farms varied tremendously and seemed to have no basis at all. Our next-door neighbour, Ronald Lang, son of county court Judge H. Lang, received $28,242 for a farm that was proven, at a hearing before the Upper Thames valley advisory board, to be inferior to ours. His farm had 28 surveyed acres of impassable thorn trees and the rest of the land, for the most part, was either stoney or wet. Our adjacent farm was all cleared, had good buildings, the same acreage and was the key farm to the whole project. We were offered $14,200, which we did not accept.

From then until expropriation was filed, the TVA did not make a further offer. On May 8, 1963, I received a letter from the former solicitor for TVA, Mr. Earl Slater, serving notice of expropriation on us. A search by my solicitor revealed that expropriation had been filed on us December 31, 1962 in the county of Perth and not served on us until May 8, 1963.

If I may just interject here, Mr. Chairman, this is another kind of procedure that I find turning up repeatedly, including the Woodbridge area of the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mackenzie), who is following this rather intently—the fact that an expropriation order is issued and the people whose land is going to be expropriated will learn of it weeks, sometimes months, later. Picking up again on Mr. Bartlett's letter:

On May 13, 1963, we received another letter mailed by Mr. Slater on May 10, demanding possession by May 15, two days later. On May 30 we were served with a notice to appear in court by June 3 for an eviction hearing, which our solicitor had adjourned to June 11. We appeared before Mr. Lang and were ordered out, with no money, by the end of June. At this hearing we offered to let TVA move in and prepare for the dam if we could live in the house for awhile and keep two south fields away from the dam site for our stock. Mr. Slater stated that the engineers were living in a tent and needed the house. After they were out, they turned the house into offices.

Between the time of the expropriation notice and eviction we engaged Cooper Appraisals Limited, of Toronto, and they sent Mr. Anderson, a qualified appraiser, to put an independent value on our farm. He spent days when everything was growing and his valuation was $33,200. This appraisal was done at our own expense.

Again, if I may interject, $33,000 as compared with an offer from the authority of $14,200.

Months after we had moved, the TVA paid to our solicitor the original offer of $14,200 on account, so that the mortgage could be discharged. We promptly tried to get a date set for a hearing and finally got it on April 28, 1964, at Fanshawe dam board rooms. Before appearing, we got together with our solicitor and reached a compromise between Mr. Anderson's value and that of the adjacent farm and filed for a compensation of $28,000. At the hearing on April 28 an advisory board, consisting of three members of the TVA was appointed to hear our case—Mr. Betts, a lawyer, Mr. Jenkins, a mill owner, and Mr. Lynne, a lumber dealer. The hearing lasted from 10:00 a.m. to until almost 11:00 p.m. with evidence heard from both sides. At the closing of the court, the foreman, Mr. Betts, said that they would hand a decision to the TVA within 30 days. On June 6, 1964, the Stratford Beacon-Herald published the fact that the advisory board had reached a decision and filed it with the TVA. The TVA said they would deal with it at the end of June and make it public.

On June 26, 1964, we received from the TVA a copy of the advisory board's findings, which awarded us $22,000 of the $28,000 we were seeking, but stated in an accompanying letter that they would not accept this.

Now let me pause, Mr. Chairman. The advisory board set up was made up of three members of the TVA; they come up with a figure; it is reported back to the TVA board which then refuses to accept it altogether as Mr. Bartlett said:

This, to me, is the most dumbfounding action in the entire proceedings. The hearing was tried at the expense of public funds and our own expense and the board were all members of the TVA and yet the authority refused to abide by its own board's decision and now wants to go on to the municipal board at more cost to the public and to us. Our solicitor wrote them November 20, 1964, and asked them to get it before the municipal board as soon as possible and have heard no more.

I should add, this is as of January 9 this year. Conceivably, something may have had happened since then.

But, Mr. Chairman, or the hon. Minister of Agriculture, or anybody else in this House, whose responsibility it is surely to protect the civic rights of individuals in this province—not only their civic rights but their property rights—I defy anybody to defend that kind of treatment of an individual over a protracted period. So much for the Upper Thames valley conservation authority.

After much of the public debate and discussion that has gone on in the press, radio, TV and newspapers, Mr. Chairman, on last January 18 a committee of conservation authority chairmen met and released a statement. Mr. Chairman, this statement was apparently sent to all of the municipal officials in all of the various municipalities that are involved in any one of the conservation authorities across the province of Ontario. I found myself the recipient of many copies of this, including two or three copies from representatives in the Metro Toronto area. The thing that interested me about this, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. member: Who was on the committee?

Mr. MacDonald: It is a committee of the conservation authority chairmen. This would be all the chairmen, presumably, of all the conservation authorities. The secretary is S. Goldring, and the statement is over his name. I want to read the first two sentences of this to show you the worries of the conservation authorities. Quite frankly, I can understand their worries, because their public image, unfortunately, is being damaged. But it is being damaged because of their actions and their procedure in land acquisitions.

The press coverage of the differences between the Upper Thames authority and those owners involved in the acquisition of land for the Gordon Pittock dam project has attracted the attention of the members of the legislative assembly. This controversy is an isolated instance of dissatisfaction in the many years of the work of authorities and the many projects of inestimable good to the communities.

I shall stop my quotation there, because that is the point I want to draw to the attention of the House.

In effect, the chairmen were suggesting that what happened in the Gordon Pittock dam case was an isolated instance. Tragically, Mr. Chairman, that simply is not so.

I have quoted the case of Ed Bartlett in Stratford; I now want to draw to the attention of the House the kind of thing that has been happening in the conservation authority that I am most interested in—the Metro Toronto and region conservation authority.

I want to give to the House information with regard to the kind of thing that has happened in three areas. One is the so-called Summerville area, which is just west of Highway 27 on Dundas Street or Highway No. 5, in a bend of the Etobicoke creek. Secondly, I want to give some information to the House on the kind of thing that has happened in the Woodbridge to Kleinburg area, farther up the Humber river; and finally I want to deal with some of the problems of my own constituents in the Eglinton flats.

Dealing first with the Summerville area, I want to draw to the attention of the House two cases. The first is that of Mary and Julia Card, whose address is 2179 Dundas Street East, Cooksville. These two ladies became the owners of 6.5 acres fronting on South Creek Road just half a mile west of Highway 27 on Dundas Street, a property that had a motel on it. There was some acreage at the back which could be used and which they intended to use, for expansion of their motel site.

When they bought this property, the title was searched by a lawyer of some 30 years' experience, E. G. Black, QC. He said that the title was good; there were no encumbrances; it was zoned R-3 which would allow them to build multiple dwellings. Some little time later they went to get a building permit to carry on with their development plans, and, to their utter amazement, they discovered that unknown to them the back portion of their property had been zoned green belt.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have come across the comment of one lawyer who was involved in many of these expropriation problems, and his comment I think is a very good one. He describes this kind of action as a "slander on the title" of the property. In other words, when a property that could be used for any other purposes becomes zoned as green belt its value overnight just dips and his phraseology is it is a "slander on the title."

When they began to inquire as to how and when the back portion of this property had, to the knowledge of no one in the area, been zoned as a green belt, they discovered, Mr. Chairman, that it had been zoned by accident. I do not pretend to know all of the details of this. It is a very bizarre set of circumstances.

Apparently the then planning director in the area had drawn up some plans including this green belt zoning and had placed it before appropriate officials of Toronto township, within which this area lies. These people were not aware of what was in the documents and they signed them. These responsible officials in the municipality first learned that they had been responsible for zoning this as green belt only when the landowners involved came to them and in effect said, "Why did you do this? How did this happen without our learning anything about it?"

To prove this, Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter which was sent by the deputy clerk, Henry E. Stewart, to Mary and Julia Card on September 25, 1963, the middle paragraph of which I will read:

As a result of the council's consideration I have been requested to write to you to point out that the township of Toronto, having zoned certain lands green belt in error, is now attempting to correct the error by changing the same lands from green belt to residential, thus placing the same zoning on the land as was on them prior to the error having been made.

So from this official document there is confirmation of the fact that this was done in error. Now, when this went to the Ontario municipal board—whether it went from the Toronto township or whether, as it did in another instance, through the Misses Card, who took the necessary action to go to the municipal board to have this zoning changed, the conservation authority—that is, the Metro conservation authority—objected to changing the green belt designation. They said they wanted to study this whole area in order to reach a decision as to what should be done with it. Despite the fact that the green belt zoning had been put on by mistake, the Ontario municipal board accepted the objection of the conservation authority.

They accepted it, Mr. Chairman, in spite of another fact; that the zoning had been done illegally. If you are going to zone, or rezone something there must be a public hearing, as all members of the House are aware, and property owners within appropriate distances from the area to be rezoned have to be notified. This was not done; this was not done because the rezoning was all a mistake. Yet the Ontario municipal board accepted a rezoning that was in error and was done illegally. These people have been stuck with this rezoning for the last two or three years, awaiting the study which has been completed recently by the Dillon firm as to what exactly should be done in this whole area.

Incidentally, before I leave that, Mr. Chairman, just so that hon. members of the House will catch some of the human consequences of this whole situation, I have here, in my hand, two sworn statements from medical doctors, one of them Dr. J. H. Deeth, BA, MD, at 5052 Dundas Street West, Islington, and the other one from Dr. George T. Biro of the Toronto Western hospital, stating that one of these sisters who had bought this property, namely, Mary Card, died of a stroke which was brought on in good part because of the intense worry arising out of this—how shall I describe it—schmozzle; there are many other words that might be equally appropriate.

However, I move on now to a second case in this same instance, that of Mr. Walter Dean, who has property just down the road, close to the bridge on Dundas Street, property which he is planning to use in a development in connection with his business. His problem, in its essentials, is the same as the Card sisters; namely, that he sought to have this green belt designation removed, but even though it was in error he could not get it removed.

There are one or two other interesting things in connection with it, Mr. Chairman, and these are that in a number of instances that have been drawn to my attention conservation authorities have designated an area of flood plain, an area that has been subjected to flooding with all of the consequences that it has on the depreciation of land values; and they have done it when there has been considerable evidence to suggest that they were in error. There was no serious flooding in the Dean's case or certainly the flooding could have been coped with by some minor rechanneling.

For example, Mr. Dean tells me that he has on the back part of his property a shack that does not weigh more than 1,000 pounds. He says it is an eyesore, but he has kept it there as an example of a building that went through all the fury of Hurricane Hazel and was not budged an inch or damaged a bit. Yet the land on which this shack is still situated today, has been designed a flood plain and within this green belt designation.

He also explains, for example, that the flooding over this bridge on No. 5 Highway took place only because of the fact that a little farther up the Etobicoke creek there was another bridge which had become piled up with debris during Hurricane Hazel. Finally that bridge went out and a great flood of water came down the creek and for a very short time some water flowed over the top of the bridge and the road. His contention is that under normal circumstances there would have been no flooding there at all.

Indeed, he points out that if the conservation authority or somebody were to remove the ten feet of silt that still exists under the bridge in Etobicoke creek over Dundas Street the possibility of flooding there in the future, even with anything of the proportion of Hurricane Hazel, would be removed, Mr. Chairman.

But he, along with the Card sisters, one of whom is now deceased, has been in this position now for two or three years without being able to exercise his rights in his property and proceed with business developments because the authority had opposed the removing of the green belt. They had this $50,000 study which is now going through the process of consideration by the Metro planning board, and through the various committees and executive committee of the conservation authority. How long will it be before it will be clarified? I presume it will not be too much longer but these people have had to suffer these results.

One final point by way of evidence that puzzles people, Mr. Chairman, and appears to be very unreasonable: One of the arguments that was advanced by the authority for the necessity of keeping this as a flood plain and retaining the designation of green belt was the argument that there was not enough capacity for water to go under this bridge.

I have here, sir, a copy of a letter from J. H. Horton, a geographer with the Metro Toronto and region conservation authority, written to the Toronto planning board back on December 7, 1962, in which he points out that in their calculations as to how much water could go under the bridge they made a mistake.

He explains that the maximum discharge, based upon effective opening of 1,344 square feet, is approximately 6,800 cubic feet per second instead of 3,100 cubic feet per second as originally calculated; in other words, that the capacity for water to go under the bridge was more than twice what they had calculated. In spite of this discovery, Mr.

Chairman, the next portion of his letter goes on:

It is apparent from these figures that the discharge capacity of the Dundas Street bridge is not as inadequate as we originally thought. However, I would stress that even with the effective discharge of 5,800 cubic feet per second, this bridge would still be unable to pass maximum flood flows. The net result would still be as indicated in my letter of December 3, that is, the flooding of the whole line Dundas Street frontage due to the ponding at the bridge. Our recommendation remains the same as of December 3.

So he discovers that the capacity under the bridge is twice as much but the recommendation remains the same.

I think you will have to forgive the average man, when he hears about a correction of something over 100 per cent in calculations and yet the same decision is retained. You will have to forgive the average layman for being a bit puzzled by this kind of unreasonable approach.

So much for the Summerville area. I now want to move north to the Woodbridge and Kleinburg areas to give the House a few examples, once again, of the kind of thing that has happened. The first one is that of Ray McAfee, who is an accountant by profession, lives in Woodbridge, and who had six acres the conservation authority wanted to take.

It was five years ago, Mr. Chairman, when he was first given verbal assurances by the conservation authority that they had included a commitment for purchase of this property. During all the intervening period he was unable to get an offer from them. He was not able to do anything else with his property. In other words, it was frozen.

I was interested in a comment in the Toronto Telegram, attributed to the hon. Minister, some few weeks ago, where he was credited as saying he too was worried about the effects of land being frozen in this fashion so that property owners would not be able to use it.

Surveyors and appraisers began to appear on the scene last year. Three times during the last three years Mr. McAfee has had a visit from W. E. Jones, who is the director of properties with the Metro conservation authority. On endless occasions he has dropped into the office of the conservation authority, which is in Woodbridge, to seek clarification of the situation. And finally, after five years, an offer came to them for $4,000 for the six acres.

Mr. McAfee says quite bluntly:

I am not greatly inconvenienced by this, it is not my home; it is a hillside property, I am not working it or living on it, therefore I am personally not sustaining any great inconvenience.

But he said:

They wanted the property; it was they who wanted to take it.

And they are taking it forcibly; and, after five years, they come up with an offer of $4,000 which, in light of appraisals that he had made—which were not legal appraisals nor scientific appraisals, but comments from friends of his in the real estate and legal business—was far below what he thought it was worth.

Subsequently he got a letter from the authority confirming his verbal acceptance of this offer, and so on—and he contends that he had never accepted any offer at all. He wrote back and said that there had been no offer; and, at the moment, Mr. Chairman, they are in the process of this negotiation—if you can call it negotiation—after five years.

Here is an instance, for example, of Harry Baker, who owns Ridgeview Motors in Woodbridge. It is a body shop located along the Humber River. He received notice a year ago that he was going to be expropriated. He contacted the authority and asked what price. He could not get any commitment. They began to ask him for his financial statements so that they could make up their minds as to what offer should be made. No offer has been made yet.

But it was clear that he had to go. And a man operating a business, with clientele he has built up over the years, cannot suddenly move out without suffering some serious consequences to his business. So he started looking around. He found another garage that suited his purposes, and not too far away, in Thistletown; so he bought it. But he had to buy it by raising capital other than the capital that ultimately, presumably, he is going to get from the conservation authority. At the moment, he still has no offer from the conservation authority.

Here is a case, for example, of Mrs. Alice Sinclair in Kleinburg, whose property incidentally is designated on the maps of the Metro conservation authority as having been flooded during Hurricane Hazel. Mrs. Sinclair, in the course of her negotiations with the authorities, as I shall indicate in a moment, at one point indicated to them this simply was not correct; their map was wrong. She could get witnesses; citizens who lived in the community and had lived there for all their lives, who went through the whole of Hurricane Hazel, were willing to testify that her property had not been flooded during Hurricane Hazel. But it is so designated, with the inevitable slander on the title.

They indicated to her, because of this map and because of some very general approaches, that they ultimately would want her property. Circumstances changed, and Mrs. Sinclair wanted to move, so she put the property up for sale. Of course everybody who came and looked at the property, and were content with it and wanted to purchase it, once they began to look into the situation, discovered that there was this slander on the title because it was designated as an area that might be expropriated by the authority. She got in touch with the authority to let them know that she wanted to get rid of it, but still got no offer. Indeed, she claims that she got no reply to many of the letters she sent to the authority.

Here is a person, with property rights and wanting to move, who is in effect "frozen," to borrow the hon. Minister's phrase, and not able to exercise her rights at all.

Here is another case, for example; that of Primo and Joe Tasca, father and son, in the Woodbridge area. Their property was expropriated last April; the action for expropriation was taken last April, but they were not notified until August, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, during the summer they got a building permit and built something on their property, not knowing that their property had been subject to an expropriation notice some four or five months before.

This is the kind of action that I mentioned a few moments ago. Why should any government body or public authority, in the quiet of night, so to speak, be able to put an expropriation order against a property and the owners themselves know nothing about it until some time later? Since then they have been negotiating but have not been able—unless in the last few days or the last week or two—to find a solution.

Mr. A. A. Mackenzie (York North): Mr. Chairman, as a matter of privilege, I might say that, in the case of Mr. Tasca, he came to me and I immediately went to the conservation authority. And I might say to you, sir, that since that time everything has been going along, I understand, very nicely. The authority is negotiating with Mr. Tasca and he seems to be quite pleased and content with what is taking place.

Mr. MacDonald: I will agree, Mr. Chairman, that at the present stage the authority—particularly under the glare of the publicity that has been getting into the papers recently, arising from a meeting that was held by the property owners up in Woodbridge, including some of my residents from Eglinton flats—has started to take some action.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Chairman, I might say to the hon. member that, immediately Mr. Tasca came to me, I went to the authority and the authority could not have been nicer to him.

Mr. MacDonald: The facts, as I put them on the record, still stand, Mr. Chairman.

Here is the case of Hugh Strachan. This is another one in which I just cannot understand how any authority has the right, legally, to do what they did. This land was taken two years ago. They have straightened the river course. Some of the land that was taken has been handed over to the York county roads department and yet, as of some four or five weeks ago, they had still received no offer at all. So that a man, in effect, has property taken, disposed of this way, cut through with the rechannelling of the river and yet no offer is made. Surely in this free country, with the protection of the law, citizens who own property should have some more protection than this. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that the proposals in the Ontario federation of agriculture resolution have a number of stipulations that would make this impossible, namely, that before a property owner was forced to move he would have to have some sort of an agreement. I think the OFA said 85 per cent should be paid.

One final case up in this area is that of a piece of property near Woodbridge that the authority had an option on for some time. It was valued at $29,000 some years ago. The option lapsed. It was bought by another man who developed it into a private park. I have no idea how much money the man put into it, but certainly it is the view of people locally that he did not put anything in to justify what subsequently happened; namely, that he asked $250,000. The authority offered $165,000. It was appraised at $152,000 and it went to the municipal board, which decided at $165,000 for a property which, admittedly minus some improvements, the authority could have had earlier for some $29,000.

I want to now come down to the final point, Mr. Chairman, in my review of what is happening in this area. I am dealing now with the protection of the rights of my own constituents; I shall not be any more, but certainly no less, vigorous for them than I have been on behalf of farmers in the Pittock dam area, or anywhere else.

The situation, Mr. Chairman, in the Eglinton flats was created because of Hurricane Hazel. There is great argument among people in the flats as to whether or not the flooding of those flats was not the product of circumstances that could have been readily dealt with, rather than by some of the elaborate proposals that have been made since.

In other words, the bridge at Scarlett Road over the Humber River became blocked with debris. Because it backed the waters up, these moved into the Eglinton flats which, I think it can be said, are among the prize market-garden areas in Metropolitan Toronto.

As a result of this, action was taken to declare this as flood land. We then got, Mr. Chairman, into the most incredible series of applications to the municipal board in efforts to decide how this area was going to be zoned. For example, up until 1958, York township had no zoning; their first zoning bylaw came into effect in 1958. Because the confusion and the uncertainty was so great with regard to the flats, it was zoned MC2G. If you have never heard of that kind of zoning before do not be surprised, because nobody has ever heard of it before. In short, it was a blanket zoning that covered not only any kind of commercial and industrial development, but also a green belt, because of the designation as a flood area. The green belt zoning immediately slandered the title of all the properties involved. Property values, which might range from $3,000 to $4,000 an acre for market gardening to as high as $40,000 to $50,000 an acre for commercial or apartment purposes, dropped overnight. The Jane-Eglinton ratepayers' association opposed the green belt zoning, but for five years, Mr. Chairman, on a year-to-year extension basis, the Ontario municipal board upheld the green belt zoning designation while a seemingly endless series of investigations and surveys and reports were being made. Finally, in 1963, the Ontario municipal board refused to act further and its order lapsed. They were not going to extend it any more and, since then, the Eglinton flats has had no zoning at all. They are out in limbo, so to speak. Meanwhile, all planning by the property owners has been in this state of suspended animation. No building permits could be issued by York township. No owner would seek to improve his property, nor even keep up the normal maintenance that a good citizen would; what is the use of painting and repairing the property if the buildings are going to disappear? The net result was either a deliberate or an accidental depreciation of the value. This has been going on now for seven or eight years—indeed, for ten years, if you go back to Hurricane Hazel.

During this period of uncertainty, I invite hon. members to consider the absolutely inexcusable delays to which the property owners were subjected. I want to illustrate what happened over the five-year period with one case history, that of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Wheeler, at 1160 Jane Street.

On May 10, 1960—I think this is the first date—the Jane-Eglinton ratepayers' association, over the signature of one of their officers, Mr. S. M. Silzer, at 1161 Jane Street, wrote to the authority because there had been some news in the paper regarding a decision of the metropolitan parks committee concerning the flats. The authority wrote back and this was their reply, quoting the relevant paragraph:

The conservation authority has not yet set aside any specific sum for the acquisition of the Eglinton flats. The presentation before the metropolitan parks committee was to obtain approval in principle for the project in order that the conservation authority could finalize its scheme and in this connection have valuations made on the Eglinton flats.

So there is point one, Mr. Chairman. In May of 1960, you had approval in principle of the project. Eighteen months went by. December 14, 1961, was the next time these people, all the while not being able to develop their property, nor use their property as a citizen normally would, received word from the authority, this time over the signature of K. G. Higgs, director of operations. Let me read the letter:

The Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority is now in a position to commence the acquisition of flood plain and conservation lands in the valley of the Humber River from a point south of the town of Weston to west of Scarlett Road, including the area known as the Eglinton flats. The authority's staff and agents are prepared to negotiate options for the purchase of these lands.

The authority is hopeful that the majority of the properties can be settled on an equitable basis and that the acquisition programme will result in a minimum of inconvenience to the landowners concerned. Owners operating market gardens can be assured that the authority will be pleased to negotiate terms over a sufficient period of time to permit re-establishment of these operations.

So there we have it. In the last month of 1961 you have the first indication that the conservation authority is now in a position to move. Well, Mr. Chairman, another 16 months went by and in April, 1963, an expropriation order was filed against these properties. Significantly, as so often happens, the people were not informed that the expropriation order had been taken out until some two months later, on June 26. I have a copy of a letter that was received by Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler from the chairman and the secretary-treasurer on June 26, a registered letter indicating that the expropriation order had been taken out some two months before that.

That is 1963. Another 18 months go by, Mr. Chairman, and on December 11, 1964, they received a letter, which reads ominously and sternly from the outset:

Take notice that you are required to deliver up vacant possession on or before the 31st day of December, 1965, to the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority of the lands expropriated from you by virtue of a plan of expropriation dated 24th day of April, 1963.

So you had approval in principle in 1960, you had the first communication in the fall of 1961, you had an expropriation order in April, 1963, and you had an order to get out arriving in December, 1964, with that order to be effective at the end of 1965.

The Wheelers' solicitor wrote to the authority on December 31, 1964, within two or three weeks of the notice that they would have to get out by the end of 1965. I would like to quote that letter:

As previously indicated to you, this firm has been retained by a number of persons whose properties in the Eglinton flats have been expropriated by the authority, a schedule of our clients and the dates of registration of the plans concerned is attached hereto. More than six months from the date of registration of the plans has now expired in all these cases, and since the notice to vacate by December 31, 1965, has now been served on all persons listed in the schedule, may we therefore respectfully request the authority to serve us, on behalf of each of the registered owners, with an offer of compensation in accordance with section 8 of The Expropriation Procedures Act?

Mr. Chairman, the interesting thing is that section 8 of The Expropriation Procedures Act stipulates—this is the Act passed in 1963—that this offer of compensation must be made within six months. This is 18 months afterward—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): It is under the old Act.

Mr. MacDonald: As I understand it, the property owners can opt to come under the old or the new Act.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: They are under the old Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Are they?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: They have been led to believe that they can be under the old or the new. I accept the hon. Minister's correction, that if you assume that they are under the old Act then they would not have to have the six months; but if they are under the new Act this offer should have been made within the six months' period. In any case they get a reply from the authority, from W. E. Jones, on January 5, 1965:

Your letter of December 31, 1964, is acknowledged with thanks. We have of this date directed our special counsel, Mr. John B. Conlin, QC, to serve notice on Messrs. John and Edward Nardilly—

This was one notification which had been missed in the serving of the notices. However here is the key paragraph:

We will be discussing the matter of compensation with Mr. Conlin sometime this week and an offer of compensation should be in your hands on or before January 31, 1965.

Mr. Chairman, it is April, and they still have not got an offer.

My question is: How long does this go on? How long do citizens have to have their properties blighted in this way, year after year, with 18 months between each step? Here they are, even with all of the pressure that has been building up, being assured on January 5 that they are going to get an offer by the end of January; and yet by April nobody has had an official offer. There have been some feelers, and the appraisers are in the field; I will concede that.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, if you think that I am exaggerating this case, I just want to draw the attention of the House to this: People in some of the municipalities which fall under the Metro conservation authority, some officials of these municipalities who are on committees of the authority, became so disturbed that, last January, they sought to have a report from the authority on the status of their whole land acquisition programme—which property had been secured, which property had been expropriated, and at which stage the expropriation proceedings were.

The authority has not yet provided this report; and the dismay has grown to the point, Mr. Chairman, that, at the last meeting of the Metro executive committee, it was decided, on the motion of Reeve Campbell of Scarborough, supported by Reeve Mould of York township, within which the Eglinton flats lie, that this year's grant of $800,000 to the Metro conservation authority be withheld until they get a report on the land acquisition programme under the old Act.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): It is not.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if it is not, it is because of a change that has been taken since the last meeting, and since I was talking to one of the controllers last night. I understand that a report is coming in on Tuesday.

Mr. Chairman, just let me say this: I do not want to see money cut off the conservation authorities. I reiterate that I do not know anybody who does not agree with the objectives of the conservation authority, including the Humber valley conservation authority, but I think I have documented a solid case that the image of conservation authorities is being seriously impaired, primarily because of their land acquisition procedures. I am desperately fearful—notwithstanding the good intentions of the Metro conservation authority to try to clean up all of these cases by this summer or by this fall, since they have given an order that these people must be out by the end of December of this year—that they are not going to be able to do it. I will tell you why: Because of the confusion in the Eglinton flats, how are you going to assess this property? How are you going to appraise this property?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: How would you appraise this property?

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. I have been informed, by the lawyer for this group in the Eglinton flats, that he sat down and had discussions with Mr. Conlin, the lawyer for the authority. These meetings were set up following the meeting I had with the rate-payers, and my discussions with Dr. Lord who said that he would make certain that the lawyers could get together and try to resolve some of this apprehension. I am informed that Mr. Conlin says it is impossible to come to any decision as to what value you place on the land until you get some guidance from the Ontario municipal board as to what decision they will make in designating the land in the flats.

Is it going to be considered as market-garden land? Is it going to be considered as commercial land? Because I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, if it is going to be commercial, I can take you to a property that is no more than a quarter of a mile away to the south, up on the hill from the flats, where a builder who wants to build an apartment made an offer of $155,000 to York township, no more than two or three months ago, for enough land to build one apartment building. I suppose it would not encompass more than an acre or two, I am not sure of the exact size of it. So if you get into apartment building, or commercial, the value is $40,000 or $50,000 an acre.

Mr. Conlin's contention is that, until he gets some guidance, it is going to be difficult to decide what assessment can be put on it. Indeed, the feeling on the part of some of the other solicitors is that you cannot even come to any conclusion as to what is a likely appraisal figure, until you get some guidance from the municipal board—not in one instance but in two or three instances throughout the flats—because some of it clearly may be used for road construction in the extension of Eglinton Avenue, or some of it may be used for commercial purposes. In other words, two or three different categories of land might emerge from this little area.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question? The land to which you are referring is Black Creek, I presume—and this is not an objection to what you say, it is a little further information—the land you are referring to on Black Creek, I take it, is the market-gardens flats—the low-lying flood lands? Then, in trying to compare the price of the property up on the hill to the property down below—and you did not do that but we will take an example. An Act, I believe, emanating from this Legislature as a result of Hurricane Hazel, prohibits building there in the first place, and more or less establishes the value of that land; am I right or wrong?

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you how difficult it is to give a frank answer to this question. Let me give you one case, and this is one case in which they have got as close to an offer as any in the case of the Eglinton flats. There is a Mr. Wilson and four other men who have been in partnership for years, with six acres right at the junction of Jane and Eglinton. In 1956 they bought this, after Hurricane Hazel. They went to York township to seek a building permit to build a big apartment building there. Because of the zoning confusion, and because of the fact that the township said, "If you wait for a couple of years, we will have completed our storm sewers and then you won't have to put in your own pumping system." As good citizens, as Mr. Wilson put it, they waited for the two years. Then they got caught in this prolonged argument as to how it was going to be zoned.

Three or four years ago, after the negotiations first started on the part of the authority, Mr. Whitewood, on behalf of the authority—and, I believe, Mr. Jones, too—came down to meet with Mr. Wilson and his partners in this promotional deal. They had asked $150,000 or $155,000 for the six acres which, in terms of construction of this nature, is not exorbitant—$40,000 or $50,000 per acre is very common now. The authority offered $125,000; then they negotiated for a time. Then they separated and each went off into different rooms in the house and they talked it over and they came back. The authority said: "We cannot go any further than $135,000." So Mr. Wilson and his colleagues said: "It will take years. We will have to go to the municipal board, with lengthy delays. We will accept the $135,000."

Incidentally, they had started this meeting by saying: "Are you here as errand boys, or are you here to negotiate seriously?" They were assured by Mr. Whitewood that he was there to negotiate seriously. So they shook hands on an agreement of $135,000.

Their lawyers sent a letter to the authority the next day seeking confirmation of the agreement. He sent another letter two weeks later. Mr. Wilson says they have never had a reply. Mr. Conlin approached Mr. Wilson and his group about two weeks ago and the offer now is either $3,500 or $3,700 an acre. In other words, $20,000 for what they thought was a firm agreement of $135,000 a few years ago.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: Who is Mr. Conlin?

Mr. MacDonald: He is now acting for the authority. He is the new solicitor; I think there has been a change in solicitors recently.

All I am saying is that the hon. gentleman may be right; that this land is being designated as green belt and you cannot now get up to these big values comparable to the ones up on the hill. But what I am relating to the hon. member is that an agreement that was reached by Mr. Wilson and his friends some three or four years ago, that they thought was a firm agreement, apparently got turned down when Whitewood went back to the authority, because they never got confirmation of it from the authority.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to sum up in this way: The government has brought in an amendment to The Expropriation Procedures Act which is going to inject into the existing procedures a committee of negotiation. As I said in my introductory remarks this afternoon, in reference to what is happening with the three-man tribunal out in the Pittock dam case, I reserve judgment as to whether this is going to be effective. But of this I am certain, Mr. Chairman: This committee of negotiations cannot meet the range of abuses that have emerged and have been confirmed in many instances in connection with conservation authorities.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: This is what the people want; this is what they ask for.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The people in Metro did not ask for this at all.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am not talking about the people in Metro only; I am talking about the people in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, let us not get the thing confused. If I may conclude my remarks. They asked for a tribunal out there in the Pittock dam case—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: In many places in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: But I am talking about the wide range of changes that need to be made in the expropriation procedures as have been spelled out in the OFA resolution passed at their annual convention last November.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is not in my department.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not in the hon. Minister's department? I am saying the government has brought in amendments to The Expropriation Procedures Act that sets up a committee of negotiations, but it ignores all these other things. I suggest to you it is just inadequate and I think that we have an obligation at this level in this Legislature to make certain that somehow or other we lay down, in the law, standardized procedures so that never again can the little people be treated in the fashion that they were at Pittock dam, they were in the case of Mr. Bartlett, they are in the case of Eglinton flats or up in Kleinburg or up in the Summer-ville area. I think this is our obligation. I can do no better, Mr. Chairman, than to quote from an editorial that appeared in the Globe and Mail on March 9 this year. They were commenting on the hon. Prime Minister's announcement of this three-man tribunal up in the Pittock dam case. They refer to his action as not entirely legal. And then the Globe and Mail commented at the time:

Mr. Robarts has produced a poultice for a single sore when he should be rewriting the rules governing all expropriation in the province.

Then they point out that the amendment now before the House in The Expropriation Procedures Act does not deal with all of these other things. And they conclude their editorial thus:

Mr. Robarts should attempt no more ad hoc solutions. The method of proceeding ensures justice only for those who are organized enough to generate political pressure, or wealthy enough to finance long costly processes. The rules governing expropriation in Ontario should be so rewritten and so standardized and made so readily available that they ensure justice for all.

That, Mr. Chairman, is my plea. I submit that if you go back and read the nine-point resolution that was passed by the OFA that this is as good a basis as any for starting a discussion of all of the things needed to standardize the rules and procedures, instead of just injecting this committee of negotiations into the existing procedures. That is not adequate. I do not know whether this government can be persuaded to do it without unnecessary delay through setting up another select committee, the existence of which and the personnel of which we know nothing, Mr. Chairman, other than the fact that the hon. member for Oxford has been appointed to it—I can assure you, with the rather heated reaction of many people in Oxford county, many of them Conservatives too, because the hon. member was responsible for much of what happened up there as chairman of the authority. I plead with this government that they move at this session by amending these procedures. If we bring in a series of amendments and you want to review them to find out what will happen when they are implemented out in the country, let us select a committee to examine them from that point forward. But you have enough evidence now, as the Globe and Mail has pointed out, to justify action to standardize the procedures, so that people are not going to have both their property and their civic rights impaired in the fashion that they have by this experience over the past few years.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the merits of the suggestion of the hon. member for York South, but there is one thing I would like to tell this House, and I believe the hon. member would like to know.

I believe earlier he mentioned the Card property on Dundas Street at Etobicoke Creek. This is one property where the conservation authority is not entirely responsible for its being held up. There is going to be a new bridge and a new interchange there for Sherway. The township of Etobicoke, Metropolitan Toronto planning and The Department of Highways are all concerned before a solution can be reached for that property. I would like to make it clear that it is not entirely the conservation authority in that one case.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I agree and I think I suggested that the Dillon report is now going back to the planning board and I know there are going to be some changes in the highway. The perplexing thing here, Mr. Chairman, is that in some instances the conservation authority is not a free agent. For example, I think it can be said, and should be said in all fairness, that part of the reason for this prolonged procedure over the past few years, as my colleague from Yorkview (Mr. Young) pointed out the other day, is that we have got to examine ways and means by which we can get the necessary finances into the hands of the authority, so that they can buy all of the property that they need in flood plains of this nature, and not have to dribble their procedures out over ten years. If you do it over a ten-year period, inevitably the land is going to be blighted in the fashion it is, and the people are going to suffer the consequences. So the financing of our conservation authorities is a problem. I do not want to appear to be attacking conservation authorities as such, because there is no more enthusiastic supporter for them than I. But what worries me is that they are seriously damaging their own image; this is going to have consequences that will take years to catch up on. Once the public build up a prejudice in this fashion, you cannot remove it overnight.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, one of the things about this discussion, as with so many, is that the hon. member opens up what he has to say by telling the House what a great organization operates under the conservation authorities; from then on he begins to tear the authorities apart, piece by piece.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not the case at all.

Mr. Cowling: If you are so interested in the matter of conservation, you should get some of your facts straight before you start to broadcast them here in the House. Of course, you have done that in the past, anyway.

Mr. MacDonald: Why do you not deal with the issue, instead of innuendoes?

Mr. Cowling: I think it is only fair, Mr. Chairman, after hearing this for nearly two hours, that I say something about the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority, as I happen to be a member of the authority. I would not like the hon. members to get the wrong impression about the authority I represent, from what the hon. member has just said. He is speaking about a very small part of the whole situation, and a very, very small part of the great job they have done here in Metropolitan Toronto. If you will bear with me for a few minutes—we have had nearly two hours—I would like just to put you straight on the work we are doing here in the Toronto area.

The Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority is a corporate body constituted under The Conservation Authorities Act of the province of Ontario. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, it was this government which originally set up The Conservation Authorities Act, not anybody else. We started the great programme of conservation authorities in the province, and I understand there are 24 now.

This authority has jurisdiction over 1,000 square miles, including and extending beyond the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. So when you think of some of these isolated cases, Mr. Chairman—and I am not going to try to answer these specific cases, because I just am not familiar with them—but when you start to think of the few that the hon. member has mentioned, in an area that is 1,000 square miles, I think it will give you some idea that there must have been hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of these expropriations handled very adequately and very amicably.

Mr. MacDonald: What did Metro do?

Mr. Cowling: As I said, you took two hours I would like to take about 15 to 20 minutes, if you do not mind.

There are 23 member municipalities within the region, and 55 persons constitute the membership of the governing body; they are known as the authority members. These members, in addition, are divided into nine advisory boards, each of which is responsible for the study of a particular part of the work of the authority. The chairmen of the nine advisory boards, together with the vice-chairman and the chairman of the authority, constitute the executive committee.

Conservation, in its broadest sense, is the work of rehabilitating, preserving and developing the renewable resources of a region for the benefit and use of all the people for all time. Because of the distinctive river valley system which exists in the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation area, the authority has undertaken to procure and use the major valleys. This practice is sound, since the river valleys form river flood plains and cannot therefore be occupied by dwellings and other structures.

Flood control also falls naturally into the sphere of conservation work. In the Toronto area, due to steep gradients, rapid run-off and heavy industrial and residential development, as well as the many roads, bridges and services, the need for flood control has been very urgent.

Because of the tremendous growth in population in the area, open space has become a conservation must. Conservation areas are not to be compared with amusement parks. It is true that they are recreation areas, but no apology need be made for this admission. Conservation without people is sterile and meaningless. A nation can afford a few wilderness areas but certainly not adjacent to a great metropolitan area where land is at a premium.

Conservation also means the planting of trees and shrubs where they need to be planted. It requires thought to be given to fish and wildlife. It suggests education of the young in the ways of nature and in an appreciation of our priceless natural heritage. Without this education of the young, surely the future of conservation would appear to be bleak. Conservation can also afford to preserve a few of the priceless treasures of the past, for who is better able to do this than an authority such as this one?

The authority exists to serve the people living in this 1,000-square mile area. This population continues to grow at the rate of 65,000 a year, and now stands at 1.8 million. Almost one million people made use of the conservation areas and Pioneer Village during 1964.

I would like to repeat that, Mr. Chairman: One million people visited this conservation area. So, when the hon. member talks about the image, and the fact that some of the public may not be happy with what the authorities are doing, I think you could talk to any one of those million people and they would say they are doing a great job.

Although the authority is acquiring land at a fair rate, the pace is none too swift. We are told now that the population of the region will be four million by the year 2,000. When one realize that the authority is the major public land assembling agency in the metropolitan region, it becomes apparent that our objective of 34,000 acres by 1980 is not too ambitious.

The authority now has 55 members—26 of these are appointed by Metropolitan Toronto and 26 by the other 22 municipalities. The chairman and two other members are appointed by the provincial government. The chairman, as you know, is Dr. Ross Lord. The other two provincial members are the hon. member for York North and myself. During the year there were five meetings of the authority, 26 executive meetings, and 39 meetings of the advisory boards and committees. The members of the authority, executive committee, advisory boards, and other committees, have given unstintingly of their time and talents in the interests of conservation. It would be difficult to find an organization anywhere which has enjoyed so much dedicated voluntary service from citizens, as has this authority.

The carrying out of useful conservation work requires money. The partnership in supplying this money is the province of Ontario and the municipalities—on a 50-50 basis for all ordinary works and the purchase of flood plain lands. In the flood control dams and reservoirs, the government of Canada enters as a partner, supplying 37.5 per cent of the funds, the province being an equal partner, and the municipalities contributing the other 25 per cent.

One of the chief assets of a conservation authority is land. Other institutions may spend millions on buildings and expensive installations, but an authority invests principally in land. Never is an authority such as ours, in a metropolitan area, able to acquire too much land. Other metropolitan centres, such as Cleveland and Chicago, have assembled from 30,000 to 60,000 acres, mostly conservation lands and necessarily valley lands and other marginal areas. This authority ought to assemble 30,000 acres for the future needs of the four million people who will be in the region by the year 2,000.

The Pioneer Village continues to be a major attraction for young and old in the metropolitan area. The attendance during the year was again an impressive figure. Many hundreds of school children could not be accommodated because of lack of time and staff to handle them. During the year an experimental craft project was tried with a number of children. Small groups took part in such pioneer work as candle-dipping, spinning, and churning butter. I would suggest to any of the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that they visit that Pioneer Village.

The Albion Hills conservation school continues to be most successful in every way. During 1964, 1,281 students each spent five days in residence, participating in the natural science programme. In addition, 1,171 people spent weekends at the school. All five-day weeks are booked for 1965, in addition to 20 weekends. This is the first conservation school of its kind in Canada.

The authority has accomplished its work over the years by preparing plans and then proceeding with the work as the funds become available. There are a number of plans at present and they are all being proceeded with.

The pollution control and recreation in the metropolitan area—this plan, prepared in 1963, proposes a practical scheme for controlling pollution in the headwaters of the region. It recognizes that the lower reaches of the rivers are in a so-called development area and cannot be completely freed from sewage plant effluent. It does, however, press for a high degree of treatment in this development area. The plan was presented to 17 members of the municipalities, including the metropolitan planning board, and approving resolutions were received from 14 of them. This plan has also been presented to the Ontario water resources commission and we are assured of their sympathetic co-operation.

There again, hon. members will see that the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority is endeavouring to do something about this matter of water pollution.

Here is a report on the management of flood plain lands as an integral part of a comprehensive flood control plan. As we have just heard from the hon. member, some, I suppose all, of the conservation authorities are going about this matter of land acquisition on a hit-and-miss basis. I would like, for the record, to tell you, Mr. Chairman, what our authority is doing insofar as their land acquisitions are concerned.

The Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority has undertaken an extensive programme for the management of flood plain lands as an integral part of the comprehensive flood control plan. The purpose of this report is to review this programme in its entirety. The report outlines the rationale of flood plain land management and the historical development of the programme in the Metropolitan Toronto region; the policies of the authority which have guided this phase of its work; the outline of the legislative controls; the acquisition of flood plain lands; and how the programme is financed.

The Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority has jurisdiction over 1,000 square miles, including the drainage basins of the Etobicoke creek, Mimico creek, Humber river, Don river, Highland creek, Rouge river, Petticoat creek, Duffin creek and Caruthers creek. These river valleys are characterized by steep gradients with an absence of natural storage areas; and, as a result, floods are a regular occurrence, caused from: spring floods, severe summer thunderstorms, and hurricane storms in late August to October.

All of these river valleys have, under natural conditions, developed flood plains. The flood plains of the valleys consist of those areas adjoining the river or stream which have been, or may hereafter be, covered by flood water.

Man's occupancy of the natural storage areas of rivers has resulted in damages from floods causing loss of life, loss of goods, and disruption of communities. Invasion of flood plain lands by man has created the need for a variety of flood control measures. The need for such programmes is greater in areas of intensive urbanization, such as Metropolitan Toronto.

Historically, the flood plains of the rivers in the Toronto region have been subject to encroachment from the earliest times of settlement. The early pioneers developed the resources of the river for the production of power for operating mills, and for communities which were spawned around these mills. The town of Brampton, and the villages of Bolton, Woodbridge, Stouffville, and Pickering, are examples of encroachment on flood plain lands which date back to the pioneer period. Many communities in Metropolitan Toronto, such as Weston, Lambton Mills, Summerville, and York Mills, are early encroachments which have been embraced in urban growth.

The historical record of floods of these early communities is well documented and substantiates that the flood plains of the rivers in the metropolitan region have always been subject to inundation and that this phenomena will continue to occur. In fact, the rate of occurrence and intensity of floods will increase as natural storage areas are replaced by houses, industries and pavements.

The more recent encroachments on flood plains have been much less justified than the pioneer developments and are mainly the results of poor planning and inadequate legislative controls. Examples of these encroachments were: the cottages at the mouth of the Etobicoke creek at Long Branch; the Raymore Drive area on the Humber river; the cottage development of the Highland, Rouge and Duffin creeks—parts of which have now been removed, or are in the process of acquisition and removal. Encroachments of the flood plains is still taking place and will unquestionably continue to take place in the rapid expansion of these Metropolitan Toronto areas.

These encroachments, however, are of a somewhat different nature and are taking place as a result of thorough studies, and are subject to legislative controls. These encroachments consist of roads, sewers, bridges, parks, telephone and gaslines, and other essential urban services.

The Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority has developed logical and rational policies for the management of flood plain lands as an integral part of a comprehensive flood control plan and has co-operated closely with the various municipalities, planning boards, and government agencies in the development and implementation of this programme.

The conservation report concerning the—I am not going to read all of this, gentlemen, it might take a little too long—

An hon. member: Go ahead.

Mr. Cowling: If the hon. member says so, I will.

While I am going through some of these pages I cannot help but think of the other side, when they get up and read these reports and go on for two and a half hours and then, at the same time, say that the legislative programme is not moving along fast enough. How they can talk for hours and hours on end and then have the legislative programme continue apace, I have not been able to find out in all the years I have been here.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. Cowling: I am talking about the way you members talk; that is what I am talking about.

Here is the statement of policy; this is the one.

The authority, in 1961, adopted a statement of policy on flood plain and conservation land. This statement was published and circulated to the member municipalities and the planning boards. The policy, with respect to the acquisition of flood plain and conservation lands as stated in this report, is set forth herewith:

The policy of the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority is to acquire the flood plain and conservation lands in the downstream sections of the main valley systems under the jurisdiction of the authority. The authority is of the opinion that, for adequate control of these lands for flood control and conservation purposes, it is essential that they be owned by a public agency such as the authority. The ownership of these lands therefore ensures their proper use in order that the objectives of the authority can be achieved.

The flood plain and conservation lands and public ownership can be used for other than flood control and conservation purposes, for they provide an opportunity for the provision of public open space and recreation facilities that are an essential feature of every urban development.

The authority has acquired major acreages of flood plain land in the main valleys within Metropolitan Toronto and proposes the extension of this plan to cover the lower reaches of all the major water courses under the jurisdiction of the authority.

These lands have been acquired under what is known as the water control scheme. The scheme set forth the lands to be acquired, the estimated cost of the acquisition, the purpose for which the lands were to be used, and the scheduling of acquisition. The majority of water control schemes adopted to date have been in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, and this municipality has been designated as the benefiting municipality and required to pay 50 per cent of the cost of the acquisition of flood plain lands. The province of Ontario contributes the remaining 50 per cent of the cost. Under the provisions of the agreement entered into on June 14, 1961, between the authority and the province of Ontario, the authority will acquire an additional 7,600 acres of flood plain land over the next ten years. The cost of this land will be shared equally between the authority and the province.

In addition to the acquisition of flood plain and conservation lands, the authority is responsible for the undertaking of conservation measures required for the control of stream bank erosion and for the development of watercourses for flood control purposes. Some water control schemes include these works as part of the scheme, whereas others are undertaken as additional schemes after the lands have been acquired and developed for the purposes of recreation.

In many instances, municipally owned lands are included in water control schemes. The policy of the authority and the province of Ontario is that where municipally owned lands are within a scheme, they must be transferred to the authority for a nominal sum. The province of Ontario will not pay grants for municipally owned lands included in water control schemes. Most municipalities within Metropolitan Toronto and, in several instances, outside Metro, have co-operated with the authority in the transfer of these lands to the authority. The authority assumes all survey and legal costs involved in the transfer of municipally owned land.

I think that sets out the policy, Mr. Chairman, as to what our authority is endeavouring to do insofar as The Land Act acquisitions are concerned.

There is one other part here which is of interest. It is headed:

MASTER PLAN FOR FLOOD PLAIN AND CONSERVATION LANDS

The authority adopted a master plan for flood plain and conservation lands at a meeting in February, 1962. The plan was submitted to the province of Ontario for approval in principle, and thus has been the basis of the authority flood plain land acquisition. The following is a summary of the pertinent sections of this report:

All land falling within the definition of flood plain and conservation lands has been mapped and classified in one of the following classifications based on the ownership:

(a) Authority-owned lands—lands already acquired by the authority in connection with the water control scheme.

(b) Public lands—all publicly owned lands other than those already acquired by the authority. This includes lands owned by the municipalities and departments or agencies of the province of Ontario and the government of Canada.

(c) Semi-private lands—all lands held by private corporations such as hospitals and golf courses, which are available for open space type of use by some segment of the general public. Under their present use, these lands are not proposed for acquisition.

(d) Private lands—all lands under private ownership which are proposed for acquisition for flood control and conservation purposes.

The following table provides a breakdown of the acreage of each of the four categories of property on a watershed basis:

Master Plan:
Acreages of Flood Plain and Conservation Lands

Watershed	Public	Private	Semi Private	Authority	Total Acreage
Etobicoke	662	1,413	330	8	2,413
Mimico	316	555	132	—	1,003
Humber	667	1,774	266	271	2,978
Don	1,485	790	700	518	3,493
Rouge	157	1,185	11	40	1,393
Highland	247	570	219	377	1,413
Duffin	102	1,158	56	—	1,316
TOTAL	3,636	7,445	1,714	1,214	14,009

The totals will give you an idea of just how much is going to be taken over.

In summary and conclusions:

The management of flood plain land as an integral part of a comprehensive flood control plan is absolutely essential in the Metropolitan Toronto region, one of the fastest-growing urban areas on the North American continent.

The Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority, in co-operation with the municipalities and the government of the province of Ontario, has developed rational policies and a logical programme for the management of flood plain lands in the Metropolitan Toronto region, consisting of:

- (1) Regulations controlling the dumping of fill and construction of flood plain lands.
- (2) A programme of acquisition that is essential to ensure that flood plain lands will not be encroached upon in the future.
- (3) An ancillary programme for the development of flood plain lands for outdoor recreation.

The authority, since the signing of the flood control agreement on June 14, 1961, has proceeded to acquire the flood plain lands as proposed in the flood control plan, to the extent of $3,789,107.18, and to date has acquired 3,152 acres. At the present time, there remains to be acquired 4,293 acres of land.

The pressures for the acquisition of flood plain lands have been very great and, as a result, the authority has found it essential to make commitments beyond what it had previously scheduled to acquire at this particular time. The financing of the acquisition of flood plain lands is further complicated by the fact that the government of Canada did not agree to contribute to the acquisition of flood plain land and, as a result—from the financial standpoint of the authority—there is a deficiency of funds available for the purchase of flood plain land. Due to the dynamic growth of Metropolitan Toronto and because of the vulnerability of those low-lying lands to periodic flooding, it is unquestionable that the pressures for the acquisition of flood plain lands will continue for the next few years until the majority of the lands have been placed in public ownership. In reviewing this matter, the authority is absolutely confident that its programme is right, and considers the solution to the problem of acquisition of flood plain lands has a top priority.

In reviewing its plan for flood control and water conservation at a meeting held on November 12, 1964, the authority respectfully requested the province of Ontario to assist in finding an immediate solution to the problem, and at this meeting adopted the following two resolutions:

1. The authority request the province of Ontario for a grant of 75 per cent of the cost of the acquisition of flood plain lands.

2. The authority request the province of Ontario to totally finance the acquisition of flood plain and conservation lands to the extent of funds provided in the plan for flood control and water conservation, and to provide for an extended period of repayment of the authority's share on a basis similar to the government policy for small dams and reservoirs as recently announced.

Mr. Singer: What date was that resolution?

Mr. Cowling: November, 1964.

Mr. Singer: And what has the government done about the resolution?

Mr. Cowling: They are working on it.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I see.

Mr. Cowling: What I wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, was to outline the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation plan and policy for acquiring the lands. I do not say that, in the past, all the acquisitions have been right, that all the dealings have been the way they should be, but I think that in addition to some of the problems they have had, that the authority has made great strides in our province. It is a very easy thing, Mr. Chairman, to tear down and to criticize. I think the hon. members would like to know how I feel about the great job this metropolitan authority is doing here for the citizens of this area and for citizens of all Ontario, as far as that is concerned. Just remember that there were over a million people who visited this area because of this programme.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for High Park has presented to us a picture of what the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority is trying to do and the good job it is doing. I do not think he has answered the fundamental question of the urgent necessity of financing in order to build up the kind of funds which can, I think, go a long way towards solving the problem which the hon. member for York South mentioned.

Mr. Cowling: I will let the hon. Minister answer it.

Mr. Young: In the report which has just been read, this line is included "on this basis of financing over the ten-year period there is a deficiency of money in the amount of $7,552,680." This sum is entirely for flood plain lands. In other words, if the Metropolitan Toronto and region conservation authority is going to acquire the flood plain lands which are on the programme for this ten-year period, this extra amount of money must be found somewhere. I think that this government ought to address itself to that problem, particularly in view of the fact that even this programme over the ten years is not going to be adequate. There is great urgency today, as I tried to point out to this House, because building is going forward at a rapid rate. Land is now available at reasonable prices and, while it is true that many municipalities are trying to acquire this land, they are not able to acquire it rapidly enough. I was on a municipal council which was active in this field and over the years. We tried to acquire, and succeeded in acquiring valley land through that township. We paid something in the order of $1,000 per acre and we worked it through, very largely, the five per cent land which we were entitled to. We bought other land as well. This was turned over on the basis, which the hon. member for High Park has stipulated, of the dollar. In other words, it was contributed to the authority on this basis. I think this was good business, so far as the municipality was concerned. Some municipalities are co-operating in this way, but others are not. The time is here when we have to face the facts that we are either going to acquire this land now, or we are going to pay much higher prices in five or ten years from now. Or that land is going into other uses, such as institutional, which we see already, and commercial uses of various kinds, private parks and all the rest. If this happens, the land may well be lost forever as far as Metro is concerned. Now I think the government must face this fact and must immediately address itself without delay to the problem of finding the money whereby not only Metro can acquire the land, but much of this irritation, which has been outlined by the hon. member for York South, can be eliminated and ended forever.

Mr. G. W. Pittock (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, I first would like to say thanks to the hon. member for York South for advising me that all the Conservatives in Oxford county are against me because of the Pittock dam and to go along—

Mr. MacDonald: That is not quite what I said.

Mr. Pittock: It was meant that way—with the hon. member for Yorkview in connection with the amount of money that is required. I am not only thinking now of the money required to purchase flood plain land within Metro Toronto, but I am thinking of money required to purchase source water areas and swamp land throughout the province of Ontario. I believe this is just as important as the green belt areas of the urban centres, and maybe more important when you consider water supply in many of the rural areas, where small reservoirs will be the only means of supplying water to small centres and to the agricultural industry.

I know that on some of the watersheds there are thousands of acres of this type of land that could be purchased immediately if the money was available. I think this is a matter of finding some means of providing either the money, or the credit for the authority to secure the money, and go out and get the property.

I would like to mention, too, the 800 volunteer workers in the 34 authorities across the province of Ontario. We have talked of the group in the conservation branch, the staff of the branch, which has done an excellent job. I believe there are about two more people in the branch today than there were in 1947 when we had only two authorities, as compared to the 34 today. We need more staff; we need more help across the province, in every one of the authorities.

Getting into the other area of the Pittcock dam at Woodstock and some of the accusations and allegations and other things; the statement was made by the hon. member for York South that Mr. Munro had offered the services of the Ontario federation of agriculture and these had been refused or had not been recognized. I would just like to say to the hon. members that Mr. Munro and Mr. Don Middleton of the Ontario federation of agriculture property department attended a luncheon with the hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Olde) and myself the day the letter was sent out by Mr. Middleton and at that time they were assured that fee appraisals would be arranged in the Woodstock area.

I would also like to point out that in the case of the Stanley Downs farm, which has been referred to many times in many write-ups and referred to here in the House, this is a piece of property representing in the area of 300 acres. I do not have the exact acreage here. However, we required something in the area of about 137 acres of river flats, which was pasture land. I believe anyone here will agree the acquiring of 137 acres of pasture land off a farm of that size will upset a dairy operation. We felt it was necessary to purchase the whole farm because of destroying the dairy operation.

However, after the plan was filed the owner undertook to cut down all the mature timber in the woodlot of 37 acres, which was intended as a natural wildlife area at the upper end of the lake as a part of the development of the park. All of the mature timber was cut out of that woodlot. In addition to that, the survey of the engineers to relocate the CPR was carried through another section of that farm and the bench marks were cut down and it had to be re-surveyed.

The hon. leader of the NDP has mentioned several times the fact that we had fee appraisals and people were short of money. The Act said that we were required to pay 50 per cent. We allowed and paid 85 per cent in every case where we were unable to reach an agreement for purchase.

One of the things I think the hon. leader of the NDP has forgotten to mention is the fact that after the fee appraisal was asked for the 85 per cent we had paid on that particular farm was in excess of the amount of the fee appraisal. These are things that are sometimes passed up, for some reason or other, or maybe forgotten.

The hon. member for High Park has mentioned the acquisition of flood plain land. There are other authorities with similar projects acquiring flood plain land in all of the urban centres of the municipalities which they represent and I think that we should move on this as fast as possible.

On our particular watershed, representing Oxford county which is one of the counties in the 1,325 square miles of our watershed, the run-off of our watershed since January 1, is approximately ten times the amount of water we would be able to use in 1965. This is not unusual, this is about the normal run-off; but this year we have had an extra runoff and on March 25 we heard some remarks made by the representatives of the western counties relative to flooding at the mouth of the Thames. In the survey of the Upper Thames it was found that we required 110,000 acre feet of storage to prevent flooding in the city of London and the municipalities of the Upper Thames.

In 1946 a vote was held which included all of the municipalities from the mouth of the river to the upper reaches. That vote was defeated because it was felt by certain representatives of the western counties that if London city was protected the lower reaches of the river would be protected without cost. This has not proven out in exactly that way, although I feel it could have. Had we had all the municipalities with us we would have had this work completed much sooner.

We have now completed the construction of about 60,000 acre feet of that 110,000 acre feet of storage and have another 13,000 to 14,000 acre feet under construction. This, along with another dam north of St. Mary's and approximately 100 sites for small reservoir storage, would complete the 110,000 acre feet of storage required on the Upper Thames.

I think that if we could some day bring together the municipalities of the Lower Thames and the municipalities of the Upper Thames into a complete unified group we would have a much better job; there is no doubt that we are supplied, on the Thames watershed, with ample water year by year if we will conserve what we have. This, I can say, should be of benefit to everyone the full length of the river, from the upper reaches and all the tributaries in all of the streams of the three branches of the river.

I would like to compliment The Department of Agriculture on the job that they are doing so far as farm pond programme of construction is concerned. At the time the farm pond programme was transferred to The Department of Agriculture from the conservation branch I felt it was a setback because this was an important part of the conservation programme. However, The Department of Agriculture has been moving along and doing an excellent job in building farm ponds and as I understand it many ponds are being built in areas other than those covered by the conservation authorities.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make these few remarks to acquaint hon. members of this House with the fact that we are sure we have enough water if we will arrange to conserve it and use it where and when we need it.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, we have heard considerable criticism of the methods of expropriation. All of us on this side of the House have been concerned about abuse with respect to individual farmers whose land is being expropriated.

We have also been deeply concerned with what we feel has been the most awkward position in which the hon. member for Oxford has found himself. He is in the position of being a member of the Legislature as well as being chairman of a local conservation board; and he is in this awkward position because when there is an expropriation procedure, the local people would want to turn to an impartial member of Parliament who stands, as the hon. Prime Minister himself has said, as an ombudsman, a guardian against the injustice of big government to the individual. Here was the unfortunate situation of the hon. member for Oxford wearing two hats, being both a member of Parliament and the chairman of the expropriation board.

We notice—although he has resigned as chairman—that he has not resigned from the board; and it is on these two counts that I would ask the hon. Minister to tell us what is the government's policy.

You have listened to complaints from us, and from the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, with respect to expropriation. You, I am sure, have heard complaints with respect to this awkward position in which the hon. member for Oxford found himself—and he has resigned but is still on the board. Is that satisfactory to you? Is this a policy which you would continue, where a member is also part of the board of a conservation agency?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the answer is definitely "yes"; he may serve on a board, if he so desires.

Mr. Pittock: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that on March 12 I resigned as chairman of the authority and also as a member of the board of the Upper Thames river conservation authority. I am not a member of the Upper Thames river conservation authority. And I would like to say that, also—hon. members may be interested to know—since I resigned on March 12, I have had the same number of contacts from the citizens as before: absolutely none.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the answer of the hon. Minister.

I assume then that there might be a situation where any member of this Legislature, particularly government members, may serve as the chairman of the local conservation authority as well as being a member of Parliament. Does the hon. Minister see no difficulty or conflict in this?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, and I think I speak for the government, there is no conflict of interest serving on a board. Many of our hon. members are serving on many boards; there are many Opposition members serving on boards.

Mr. Thompson: Can the hon. Minister tell us which boards? Would he clarify that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The conservation authorities have nothing to do with this government—the actual work of the authorities.

Mr. Thompson: Would the hon. Minister name some? He infers that many—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Many of them serve on different boards.

Mr. Thompson: Name one.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, do they serve on hospital boards? They serve on many boards they could serve on; club boards, many things, Hydro boards—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): This brings about a question I would like to ask.

When the hon. Prime Minister set up this tribunal to appraise or look after the conservation problem with regard to the Pittock dam, how many occasions had this been asked for before by conservation authorities?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, to answer the question, I cannot say how many times, but I know that during the past year many landowners, whose land had been expropriated, have mentioned to me that they would like some tribunal to at least be a mediator between the expropriating body and themselves, to see if they could arrive at a price before a decision was made that they must go directly to OMB.

Mr. Worton: Has the hon. Minister done this?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have not done it before; this is the first in conservation authorities.

Mr. Worton: This is the thing that concerns me. I opened up a Department of Public Works report and I saw that the same gentleman who was appointed in the Pittock case has appraised some 94 properties in the past year to the tune of nearly $2 million. What concerns me is why this gentleman was not brought in earlier, rather than have all this conflict going on.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Of course, Mr. Chairman, The Department of Public Works appraisers were appraising for that department and that department only.

Mr. Worton: It says a conservation authority, Mr. Chairman—Appraisals, conservation authorities, 96 parcels, to the tune of $1.9 million.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, The Department of Public Works reviews all appraisals before a plan is finalized and we okay it for grant purposes.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member for Kent West a member of the Upper Thames conservation authority, or was he? Lower Thames, pardon me.

An hon. member: He has resigned.

Mr. Troy: He has resigned, has he? Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the comment of the hon. member for Oxford that he has resigned from both the board and the chairmanship. I think perhaps he is wiser in that action than the hon. Minister in his statements; and I suggest that maybe his stand might be examined by the hon. member for High Park. Whatever the hon. member for High Park may say, the abuses are not just isolated cases. The rights of a good many individuals have been seriously impaired. When one presents it in a quietly documented case, and in the context of the whole job of the conservation authorities, the hon. member gets up and forgets about the rights of individuals which have been encroached upon and goes into what he chose to believe was a defence of the conservation authority, by reading from its annual report or something of that nature.

In other words, you had a beautiful example right there, of this member who should be protecting individuals against the threats of unnecessary invasion of their rights by the Crown, or agencies of the Crown, and who was neither conscious of that invasion or willing to stand up and speak on its behalf.

Mr. Cowling: Just a minute, Mr. Chairma, what about my question to the hon. member? You just do not brush that off and go on with what you are going to say. My question was: In the years I have been here, and a few years before the hon. member was in the House, have you ever heard me not defend the rights of the individual at any time—the so-called little man?

Mr. MacDonald: Right. I can not only cite the example of this afternoon, but I can cite the rights of the little man that are being downtrodden on car insurance every day. You get up and defend the car insurance companies—

Mr. Cowling: If you would give me about 15 minutes, I would be glad to defend—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister. He has said relatively little with regard to this whole discussion this afternoon. His comment was that changing The Expropriation Procedures Act is really not his responsibility; presumably it is the hon. Attorney General's (Mr. Wishart's).

Would the hon. Minister agree that the underlying principle upon which the expropriation legislation is built is that the individual whose property is being expropriated shall not come out of it poorer than when he went in? In other words, he shall not be out of pocket. I listened to the hon. member for Oxford on "Country Calendar" and, in his own words, he said, in effect, that this is the basic principle of the law. Even in the present administration of the law, what I cannot understand is why you will not be disturbed by the fact that time after time individuals are coming out poorer. They try to get an equivalent property. Take the Eglinton flats group again. Try to find for these people, for example, an equivalent farm of market-garden land like those they have there, with all of the advantages of being down close to markets, labour supply and everything else. The authority is coming up with a figure that is going to leave them out of pocket in re-establishing themselves in a comparable kind of pursuit; I think it is true again out in the whole Woodstock project. There are numbers of instances; our friend Alfons Ciskowski, the tobacco grower, is going to be out of pocket, and yet nothing is done about it. The principle of your legislation is not upheld.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, again back to "he goes out poorer than he came in." I take you back to the terrible days of 1954 and Hurricane Hazel when Ramore was wiped out completely. The people who were left alive found their houses were demolished. They were compensated, I think you will agree with me, equitably. You are vitally concerned with the properties inside the Metropolitan Toronto conservation authority—you do not say that, but I think that is what you are thinking about. I think the hon. member for York South will find that if you continue to say that the people will not come out poorer than they went in, I do not think you have any problems there. I am referring to Black creek.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I hope you are right.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister what facilities he has in his department for supervising the activities of the various authorities? How much is left to their discretion, and does he have inspectors who go around to see from time to time what the state of their business is?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, we have a field man, but we do not have one with every authority. We have a field man who looks after, perhaps, two or three, if it is a small authority. We do audit their year's work. Of course, as you know, as a department we do not get into land acquisitions, and that portion of their operations. As I just told the hon. member, The Department of Public Works approves of the appraisals for grant purposes and then all authorities are audited by our department.

Mr. Nixon: It seems to me that the hon. Minister, or a least the conservation branch, must assume some of the responsibilities for the difficulties we have been hearing about this afternoon and which, apparently, are going to continue. That is, in the month-to-month operation of the authorities, and the overall plan that the authority may have for the acquisition of property; the development of flood control dams and recreation facilities should, surely, come under the general survey and consideration of the department, or at least the conservation branch. I was wondering if there was any plan to increase the number of inspectors that would be available. Even if on an advisory capacity, there should be some uniformity in these various authorities.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, when you come to land acquisition and appraisal there is no uniform method to use. I think you would agree with me. Take, for instance, a family living on a farm in a home that is in the third generation. How does an appraiser start to work? Is he going to take the value of the house as he sees it? The value per acre of land? Yet to the man living there, it has a lot more value than any appraiser could see in it. This is the point that the hon. member for York South was coming to. How do you arrive at an appraisal satisfactory to the owner, and still to the keepers of the public purse? There must be a way in which we have to negotiate. Do you think that the government should administer the conservation authorities, do all the administration work, and then say to the municipalities: "We will collect so much from you or from the authority?" If you think that would be good business, I doubt if the municipalities would go along with that. They are putting up some of this money and they like to feel that they have their authority. The same is true in reverse. I think I would have to agree with them and I think you would as well. If you take the work from the members of conservation authorities throughout Ontario today—and there are many who, for very little remuneration, are doing a good job for the area they are in—they are doing a good job for this government; we could not hire that kind of person without spending a lot more money.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I feel that if the departmental inspectors were on the job, it would be possible for them to advise the branch and get them working in co-operation with the local authority before the situation blew up into the proportions that we had in the Upper Thames authority. I do not believe, at the present time that it would be advisable for the government to take over the direct responsibility of the development of a conservation authority. But, as in many other departments, they have abdicated almost all their responsibility. As a result of this, we have the difficulties which have been discussed here this afternoon.

Now, if inspectors are there for any purpose at all, it would surely be to keep an eye on the development in the authority, so that you can step in as the Minister and give some assistance without having to wait until the chairman is in a real mess—

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon:—and you have to take him into the back room of your office and tell him to straighten it out one way or the other, and send down a so-called special tribunal. There is surely some more efficient way short of that in which the hon. Minister can assist in the development of conservation without taking over the complete responsibility.

While I am on this subject, I would like to know what your inspectors tell you about the working out of the problem in the Grand valley, involving the duplication of authority in our conservation commission and conservation authority. I know I have asked about this several times, but I would like to hear from the Minister about the state of this problem at the present time. It has been hanging fire for a number of years, and through the jurisdictions of a number of Ministers. In our area we are interested in what leadership the hon. Minister is going to give in solving the problem.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, may I say that it is just over one year ago since I became the responsible Minister for conservation authorities. Since that time, I have met several times with the Grand valley commission and the Grand valley authority. I have received, within the past week, a brief from the Grand valley conservation authority.

Mr. Nixon: The past week?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Within the past week. I have been in touch with them and advised them that as soon as this House rose, I would get both parties in and discuss both briefs in the hope that we can arrive at one authority. I would say to you, sir, if you think I am Superman or anything like that, you do not push people around and tell them to be where you want them to be on certain days, especially this type of people. They like to have a couple of weeks to think about it. I will say that negotiations are going along well. I would ask you to leave it with us for another year. If we fail then, I would be very happy if you would get up and criticize us.

Mr. Nixon: Actually, this was discussed when your immediate predecessor had the responsibility; he gave me a similar answer, which I did accept at that time, that it was under consideration and that he had every expectation that something would be worked out. Well, nothing has been done. I certainly would not stand here and imply that you were a superman. Even though you have not been able to do it in a year, I would expect that within another year something would be done.

Now both of these organizations act with authority given to them by legislation from this chamber. I would not suggest that we would take the step of simply removing one of the laws that actually brought them into operation, but they do double up on their responsibilities. I feel there is a real vested interest in both sides to maintain their own authority and it is going to take, perhaps not a superman, but a Minister with initiative and authority to get those men together and work out the problem.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, a few days ago we received the Lower Thames valley conservation report which I looked through just a little while ago. It is a very fine report.

As the hon. Minister is aware, there was flooding on the Thames in March this year. Of course we heard different reports.

In 1947 there was quite a flood on the Thames river. I was a member of county council at that time. The county council of Kent set up an ice jam committee and set aside so much funds for this committee to hire an ice breaker to break the ice jam at the mouth of the Thames in Lake St. Clair and this, we thought, averted a number of floods. Since this conservation authority has taken over they did not have any authority to hire this ice breaker, although we understand this year they went ahead and hired an ice breaker.

Could the hon. Minister inform us if there are funds available, or can an authority hire an ice breaker; because, as we look through this report, ice has been one of the factors that has caused flooding in many years. There were rumours or reports around that they could not. We would like to know, Mr.

Minister, if there are funds available under this authority to hire an ice breaker when there is flooding at the mouth of the Thames.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there were funds available, up to $8,000. Made up of $4,000 from the government and $4,000 from the authority.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, some of the things that the hon. member for York South was complaining about involved, substantially, dealing with properties which the conservation authorities are forced to expropriate but on which they could not take any action. This has been a long-heard complaint and it seems to be continuing, notwithstanding the best desires and intentions of the authority to take up the lands as they have money available.

I was particularly interested when the hon. member for High Park happened to read that there was a resolution passed in December of 1964 by the Metro conservation authority outlining the fact that the Metro conservation authority recognizes full well this difficulty and recognizes full well that individual property owners are suffering because of the action they have been forced to take. So the conservation authority comes to the government with this resolution and says: In order to enable us to do our jobs properly will you make financial arrangements to allow us to do it?

I have not heard from the hon. Minister that any consideration has been given to this resolution. I would like to know whether the government is ignoring the resolution or whether, in the words of the hon. member for High Park, it is looking into it. The government is always looking into everything; but if the government is concerned about alleviating individual hardship then I would think the hon. Minister would be prepared to announce that he has taken some action in connection with this request.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, may I say that the government is not ignoring the request of any authority to check into their grants. I might say we have not made any change in the grant schedule right now. I think if the hon. member listened to the Speech from the Throne, and I have said it here and the hon. Prime Minister has said it, that we are going to set up a committee to study The Conservation Act. Surely—we have lived with it now for ten years—surely we can wait another eight months and see what they have to recommend. I would hope that, being a select committee, they will hear from these people who have problems, they will hear from the conservation authorities, they will hear from the municipalities and then come out with recommendations. I am sure that this government will study them and do something about this problem.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister apparently was not listening too closely to the resolution, or it has not come properly to his attention. The request was not for additional grants. The request was for a method of temporary financing in order to enable them to acquire these lands and alleviate the hardships on the individuals who were being hurt by the present actions of the conservation authority.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We still have to change the Act. It is the same thing.

Mr. Singer: I wonder how long one has to look. When are enough years enough? What is enough pain and difficulty in individual hardship and suffering?

In every one of these fields we get another promise that another committee is going to be set up which in due course will bring in a report which is going to be investigated by another committee, which in due course will bring in another committee's report. We had one this morning, a brand new one we did not even know existed. Apparently there is a committee of anonymous Cabinet Ministers who are going to investigate The Liquor Licence Act.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Has this anything to do with this vote?

Mr. Singer: We could not even find out who was on that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Has this anything to do with this vote? Let us get on with the vote.

Mr. Singer: No, no!

There are all sorts of committees investigating every sort of thing, but we never get any action. It must be obvious to the hon. Minister that these individual hardships do exist; and that when a person owns a piece of property on which an expropriation notice has been filed he is suffering if he cannot deal with this, if he cannot sell it, if he cannot use it for building. If the conservation authority has not got the money to take it away from him, then the individual is suffering. Surely the hon. Minister should have something more concrete than he has given us this afternoon to answer the resolution the hon. member for High Park read into the record a little while ago.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I was quite surprised to hear the hon. Minister say that he saw no conflict of interest when a member of the Legislature is also a member of a conservation authority. It seems to me that would create great problems as to how a person could properly represent the authority and at the same time represent his constituents. Apparently the hon. member for Kent West and the hon. member for Oxford must have seen such possibilities and realized they could not represent their ridings properly as members of the authority.

Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege, the hon. member for Nipissing is impugning motives to me which are just not there.

Mr. Troy: What motives? I just said apparently the hon. member for Kent West saw the possibility that there might be a conflict of interest, that he might not be able to represent—

Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, I saw no such possibility at all.

Mr. Troy: The fact is that he quit; and the fact is also that maybe he saw he could not possibly represent his constituents. I agree with others that have felt rather amazed that the hon. Minister would not see any conflict of interest.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I said before there is no conflict of interest as far as we are concerned if a member feels that he wants to devote his time here and not to another board. I think that should be his decision. I might say to the hon. member for Nipissing that the people in Nipissing did not think that he represented them very well the other night when he spoke about tearing up the tracks to Moosonee.

Mr. Troy: Who was the hon. Minister's informant? He said that the people of Nipissing did not think very much of me—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I read it in the paper this morning.

Mr. Troy: I read in the paper the statement of the acting chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway. Naturally, he was—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Does the hon. member think that they like it?

Mr. Troy: I do not know!

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I do. I was talking to some of the people up there and they think it is a bad idea.

Mr. Troy: That is all right. The hon. Minister took the wrong time to make mention of that anyway.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I think it should be said that the people of Nipissing thought quite a lot of the hon. member when in the last election the government sent about half the Cabinet up there to tell them to elect somebody else.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, we on this side know of the sincere interest in conservation held by the hon. member for Oxford over a number of years. I would like to know from him: Was it a conflict of interest which made him resign from this area in which he had a real interest, which made him decide that he could not do both jobs? Am I correct in assuming that?

Mr. Pittock: Mr. Chairman, I certainly did not resign because of any conflict of interest.

Mr. Thompson: But I asked, sir, why the hon. member did resign.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, that has nothing to do with the estimates.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I wonder if the hon. member would clarify for the House why he did resign.

Mr. Pittock: Because of personal reasons, and because I found I had many other things to do.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): On vote 604, Mr. Chairman: I have tried to follow these debates as best I could but there is one area here which I am not sure has been covered. Apparently back on October 17, in the press report, the 32 conservation authorities in force at that time asked the province to provide interest-free loans to speed up authority land acquisition, mainly because their zoning was not effective enough and that because of lack of funds, they were losing certain lands. What action has the hon. Minister taken on this particular request?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think that point has been covered, several times this afternoon. The government has not taken any action at the present time but we are hoping that some action will be taken as soon as we get some recommendations from a select committee that is going to be appointed.

Mr. Paterson: I would like to ask a few questions regarding erosion. I believe that is under this vote.

Last year in the House it was reported by the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) that no more permits would be issued for taking gravel out of Lake Erie. At the time of this statement, he indicated that there were four permits in existence; is this situation still in effect, and when do these permits expire?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am unable to answer that question; it should be put to the hon. Minister of Mines.

Mr. Paterson: On January 26 last, at a meeting of the Essex-Kent regional tourist council, it was announced that the geography department of the University of Western Ontario would make a study of Lake Erie's erosion problem and make recommendations for a more realistic utilization of the shore line. Is this department helping finance this proposed study, and are the department's statistics and facilities available for the study?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the answer is "No." We are not financing any study.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, is the department considering studying erosion problems? Last October, to follow up on this, the federal authorities approved an expenditure of $100,000 to carry out investigation and preventative work to control erosion on the east side of Point Pelee national park. Has this department ever made similar funds available to study specific areas suffering serious erosion problems?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The answer is "No."

Mr. Paterson: Never in Scarborough Bluffs, nor anywhere there?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Paterson: Last year I attended a meeting in the hon. Minister's office, with the hon. member for Kent West and representatives of Essex and Kent counties, concerning erosion. It was suggested at that meeting that ARDA become involved in this programme. Has the hon. Minister had any talks with the federal ARDA authorities concerning erosion problems?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the answer is "No." I would think, though, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has no doubt discussed this matter with the federal ARDA authority.

Mr. Paterson: At that same meeting we were discussing the problem of erecting groynes or similar structures along Lake Erie in particular, and there was a great amount of difference in the estimates per hundred feet for these groynes. Has the hon. Minister done any further study in this regard, to come up with proposals for municipalities as to the cost of doing this type of work?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I got the hon. member's question. Is he talking to me about erosion now? Are we coming up with a programme to share with the municipalities? The answer is "No."

Mr. Paterson: Is the hon. Minister doing any study in this regard, to make recommendations to the municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The answer is "No."

Mr. Paterson: One last problem in my area, which is not in a conservation area: There are several streams in which there is a great deal of bank erosion. Is there any one department in the province which is responsible for this, or is this strictly a municipal problem? Who has the authority—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The hon. member is talking about local streams, I take it. I would think it would be the municipality, or the property owner through whose property the stream flows.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I have one further question, and that is concerning the conservation of Peche Island in the Detroit river. Has this department made any study toward the eventual conservation of the island as a wildlife sanctuary?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The answer is "No."

Mr. Troy: In section 6 of this vote I noticed, "Grants to Municipalities for Municipal Camping Areas." A couple of years ago the government provided $200 million to cover the period of the next 20 years, for the purchase of shore line, and other lines needed for outdoor recreation. Would the department of the hon. Minister have anything to do with the administration of those funds?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That comes under The Department of Lands and Forests.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Minister co-operate with The Department of Education in attempting to sell conservation to the students at our secondary schools?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we are co-operating with anyone to sell conservation at any time—not only with The Department of Education but with anyone.

Mr. Newman: Has the hon. Minister's department issued any pamphlets to the boards of education of any municipalities, so that students could be made more aware of the need and values of conservation?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, at the present time we are not issuing any pamphlets. I think two or three, or several, years ago there was an extended programme; and it was thought by someone a couple of years ago that we should cut out some of our publications.

We have some money in our estimates this year to increase that, and we are planning on, I believe, two films under The Conservation Authorities Act—two different films which we hope to produce this year in order that we might sell conservation to groups and schools.

Mr. Newman: Will the department assign someone to go around with the films? I am particularly interested in the secondary school level.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, this will be done through our field staff and conservation authorities.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Minister, I was interested in your reply that you co-operate with everyone. Could you tell us how you co-operated during the past year with The Department of Education? What specifically did you do in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, what specifically did we do in conservation? I doubt if there are too many people in Ontario not sold on the idea of conservation. Our field staff is out there; they are holding meetings; they are out in the province of Ontario holding meetings. The Department of Lands and Forests are holding meetings, talking about conservation. The only point when we sell as a conservation authority is when someone asks us to form a conservation authority within their area. But I doubt if there is anyone in conservation, or Lands and Forests, who is not selling the idea of conservation—or even anyone in this government.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, but you are not answering my questions.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, I am.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, I will answer the question for the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Thompson: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —because I can name specific illustrations, if he wants it.

Mr. Thompson: Good, I hoped the Minister could.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am sure the hon. Minister knows this, because he authorized it to be done.

Mr. Thompson: Why did he not say it then?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is in the particular authority of which I am a party resident. The high school students are taken out on tours by the conservation authorities branch, are given tours on erosion problems, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Essex South. They are given tree-planting demonstrations, they are encouraged to plant trees on their own farm. This is an integral part of the conservation authorities branch in the department of my hon. friend the Minister and The Department of Education, right down the line.

Mr. Thompson: I am delighted to hear that.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like to deal with second readings of government bills on the order paper, House in committee of the whole House for certain bills that are there and when that is complete we will return to these estimates.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister if he still plans that there will be some discussion of the report of the select committee on municipal law before the Easter recess?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I was not aware of any particular desire for this to be debated immediately and I had not really planned for it prior to the Easter recess. We have ample work to keep us going here until the Easter recess. If the hon. member would like an assurance that it will not be called prior to Easter, I would be happy to give it to him.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister, will we be sitting earlier on Wednesday morning? Will there be a night session on Wednesday?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will be in a better position to answer that question tomorrow. If we can finish without a night session, there will not be one, but I would like to have the flexibility to continue on Wednesday evening if it is necessary.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

No. 74

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, April 13, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

Price per session $3.00. Address, Clerk of the House, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, April 13, 1965

Tabling report, committee on legal aid, Mr. Wishart	2183
Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Simonett, first reading	2187
Municipal Act, bill to amend, Mr. Young, first reading	2187
Mental Hospitals Act, bill to amend, Mr. Dymond, first reading	2187
Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-1961, bill to amend, Mr. Dymond, first reading	2187
Pharmacy Act, bill to amend, Mr. Dymond, first reading	2187
Statement re dairy herd improvement association, Mr. Stewart	2188
Energy Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Simonett, second reading	2189
Gas and Oil Leases Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, Mr. Simonett, second reading	2190
Schools Administration Act, bill to amend, Mr. Davis, second reading	2190
Public Schools Act, bill to amend, Mr. Davis, second reading	2190
Separate Schools Act, bill to amend, Mr. Davis, second reading	2190
Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act, bill to amend, Mr. Davis, second reading	2190
Foundation for the preservation of the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife, bill to establish, Mr. Rowntree, second reading	2190
Training Schools Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	2190
Ontario Human Rights Code, 1961-1962, bill to amend, reported	2207
Operating Engineers Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	2208
Recess, 6 o'clock	2212

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, in the west gallery, students from Oak Park junior high school, Toronto and St. Raymond's separate school, Toronto; in the east gallery, Riverdale collegiate institute, Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have received, from the joint committee on legal aid the report which I have the honour to table at this time. In doing so, I should like to make some reference to the committee. It may be helpful if I briefly summarize the views and conclusions which are set out in the report.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that much credit is due to my predecessor, the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Cass), who appointed a joint committee on legal aid in July, 1963. The committee was composed of members of the law society of Upper Canada, nominated by the treasurer, and of members of the civil service of Ontario, appointed by the Attorney General. It was, therefore, a joint committee of the government and the law society of Upper Canada. The appointees of the Attorney General were as follows: William B. Common, QC, then the deputy Attorney General for the province of Ontario, as chairman; Mr. Merion Borczak, the director of welfare allowances of Ontario, from The Department of Public Welfare; Carl E. Brannan, secretary of the Treasury board of the government of Ontario; and R. A. Cormack, QC, of the criminal law section of The Department of the Attorney General.

The members nominated by the treasurer of the law society of Upper Canada were: Gregory T. Evans, Esq., QC, of Timmins, Ontario, a bencher of the law society. I should mention here that Mr. Evans, as he was then, was later appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario and was replaced by Mr. Ralph D. Steele, QC. Another member appointed by the treasurer of the law society was Mr. Isadore Levinter, QC, of Toronto, a bencher of the law society and chairman of the legal aid committee of the law society; and, in addition, Mr. Robert Frank Reid, QC, of Toronto. The law society made available to the committee, Mr. Andrew Lawson, QC, barrister and deputy secretary of the society, who acted as secretary of the committee. The change in the personnel of the committee was caused by the appointment of Mr. Evans in November, 1963, to the Supreme Court of Ontario; and he was succeeded by Mr. Ralph D. Steele, as I have mentioned.

The terms of reference of the committee were as follows:

1. To inquire into and report upon the existing Ontario legal aid plan.
2. To investigate and report upon legal aid and public defender systems in other jurisdictions.
3. To consult any person, organization or association, and to receive their views and proposals regarding legal aid.
4. To conduct public hearings and receive deputations, briefs, and representations in respect of legal aid in all its aspects.

The committee held public hearings in major centres throughout Ontario. There were 90 written submissions received in reply to a questionnaire sent out by the committee and many eminent persons appeared before the committee at its invitation.

Information on legal aid was obtained from other Canadian provinces; from England, Scotland, Australia, New Zealand, and other Commonwealth countries; from the United States of America and elsewhere; and many publications were studied. Members of the committee visited the states of New York, California, Illinois, Maryland—and England and Scotland—in order to study the actual working of legal aid systems in those places.

The committee took part in a conference of 33 county and district directors—that is, directors of counties operating the legal aid plan in Ontario. The conference was held under the auspices of the law society and represented the whole of the province of Ontario.

It is apparent, I think, at once to anyone observing the report and perusing it, that the committee has worked very well and most faithfully. Its study of this matter of legal aid is perhaps one of the most thorough and comprehensive studies ever done on the subject and I commend it to all hon. members of the House. I feel confident, from my own perusal of it, that it will be a landmark in this field and in this subject of legal aid.

A great deal of credit is due to the members of the civil service of Ontario who served on the committee, and we are greatly indebted to the members of the law society of Upper Canada who contributed greatly to the work of the committee.

The report, Mr. Speaker, concludes with a section known as part IV, which is a summary of the views and conclusions arrived at by the committee and these views and conclusions are stated as follows:

1. The present plan of legal aid in Ontario should be discontinued.

2. A new plan of civil and criminal legal aid should be established embodying the following features:

(a) The financing of the plan in all its aspects should be borne by the provincial government.

(b) The administration of the plan should be the responsibility of the law society of Upper Canada.

(c) Lawyers participating in the scheme should receive remuneration on the basis of 75 per cent of a solicitor and client bill, in both civil and criminal proceedings.

(d) Lawyers involved in the administration of the plan, namely, the local committees, should be compensated on a fair and reasonable basis.

(e) Administrative personnel should be paid, whether full or part time and whether they are or are not lawyers.

3. The administration of the plan suggested should be done by the law society and the views are as follows:

(a) A separate legal aid department should be established by the law society with a provincial director as its head.

(b) Local legal aid committees with local directors should be appointed by the law society throughout the province; such local committees and directors should be separate from the local law associations; the administration of the plan should be the responsibility of the provincial director through the local directors and their committees.

(c) An independent advisory committee representing the bench, the bar and the public, should be appointed; the functions of the advisory committee would be to advise the provincial director from time to time and to consider and comment upon the annual report of the law society in respect to legal aid.

(d) The law society should make an annual report to the Attorney General on the operation of the legal aid plan, which report should be tabled in the Legislature.

(e) Provisions should be made for an independent audit of the operation of the scheme; it is suggested that the audit be conducted by the provincial auditor or by a private firm of auditors.

4. Legal aid in civil matters.

Under that heading, these views and conclusions:

(a) Legal aid in civil matters should be available in all courts including the division court.

(b) The exclusions now existing under the voluntary plan should be continued, subject, however, to the removal of the present bankruptcy exclusion.

(c) Domestic proceedings and other matrimonial causes should be specifically included.

(d) Subject to the discretion of the local director, legal aid should be available in: the family court, the administrative tribunals, and in bankruptcy matters, as mentioned above.

A fifth area is legal aid in criminal matters and the views and conclusions stated under this heading are as follows:

(a) Legal aid in criminal cases should be available for all persons charged with indictable offences.

(b) Applications for a sentence of preventative detention should be specifically included—for example, habitual criminals and dangerous sexual offenders.

(c) Subject to the discretion of the local director, legal aid should be available: In summary conviction cases under the criminal code and under provincial statutes where, upon conviction, there is the prospect of serious loss of liberty or economic jeopardy; in cases where the applicant has been previously convicted, provided that the local director is satisfied that the particular circumstances justify the granting of assistance, and in the juvenile court.

The next area is headed "Appeals," and the conclusions with respect to these are as follows:

6. (a) Legal aid in both civil and criminal matters should extend to all proceedings by way of appeal, including such matters as: certiorari; motions of quash; habeas corpus; prohibition.

(b) Appeals would include appeals to: The Court of Appeal for Ontario; the Supreme Court of Canada; a county or district court judge hearing an appeal by way of trial de novo; a Supreme Court judge; and proceedings in the nature of appeals to, or from, administrative tribunals.

(c) Where legal aid has been granted in either civil or criminal proceedings in the court of first instance, it should be extended to appeal proceedings subject to the approval of the local committee; an appeal certificate should only be granted in those cases where there is a reasonable probability of success.

(d) In considering the question of appeal, the appeal committee should consider: A written statement of the prosecutor or plaintiff's counsel; and a written statement of the defence counsel or defendant's counsel; where no counsel appeared at trial, the committee should consider whatever information it is able to acquire.

(e) An appeal should lie from the local appeal committee to the provincial director against the dismissal of an application for an appeal certificate.

(f) Where an appeal certificate is granted, a transcript of the evidence should be furnished without charge subject to any order of the appeal court which might permit less than a full transcript.

(g) Legal aid in appeals should not be restricted to cases where legal aid was granted in the first instance; where, in the first instance, a lawyer had been privately retained, legal aid should be granted for an appeal, if eligibility could be established.

The next area deals with the financial eligibility of an applicant and the conclusions are stated as follows:

7. (a) In both civil and criminal matters, the applicant for legal aid should be required to pay what he can; free legal aid should be granted only to those who can demonstrably pay nothing.

(b) The question of financial eligibility should be determined by The Department of Public Welfare who should designate eligible persons in accordance with the ability of the applicant to pay part or none of the cost of the proceedings; the department should not be restricted by pre-existing categories or financial limitations but should be free to determine, according to formulae developed by the department, who are eligible for legal aid on a free basis and who should be required to contribute part of the cost of proceedings; all questions relating to a maximum contribution, and the payment of contribution in a lump sum or by instalment, should be determined by the department.

(c) In criminal matters, legal aid should be granted immediately on application without any eligibility test; thereafter, eligibility should be inquired into if there is an adequate opportunity for an investigation into financial circumstances; if there is not, legal aid should continue to be granted on a free basis unless it becomes apparent that the applicant is able to pay the whole or a part of the cost, in which event the welfare authorities should be called upon to make an investigation; where adequate opportunity does arise during the course of criminal proceedings, an investigation of the same type carried on in civil cases should be carried out by the welfare authorities.

(d) In civil cases, once the applicant has established financial eligibility, the local committee would then be in a position to consider whether a certificate should be granted, and this question should turn on whether the applicant has, in matters of first instance, a reasonable cause of action, or, in matters of appeal, there exists a reasonable probability of success.

The next heading is entitled "Volunteer panels," under which is the conclusion:

8. The law society should be requested to organize and supervise panels of lawyers who volunteer to participate in all or part of the legal aid plan, both civil and criminal.

The next heading is "Freedom of choice of counsel"; it is the view and conclusion there, as follows:

9. (a) The principle of freedom of choice of counsel should be maintained in that applicants in both civil and criminal matters should be free to choose among the lawyers appearing on the panels; and

(b) It should be made an offence for any lawyer, save the provincial or local directors, to do anything directly or indirectly to influence a choice of lawyer by a person to whom a legal aid or defence certificate has been granted.

The next heading is "Remuneration for lawyers"; conclusions are stated as follows:

10. (a) Lawyers affording legal aid services should be compensated on the basis of 75 per cent of a normal solicitor and client bill, excluding disbursements.

(b) All civil legal aid bills should be submitted to taxing officers for taxation on this basis and, if necessary, a solicitor and client tariff should be established.

(c) Criminal legal aid bills should be settled by the provincial director to whom, at the end of the case, the lawyer should send his file and a detailed statement of the services provided.

(d) The guiding principle which should be adopted in respect to remuneration in both civil and criminal cases is "fair remuneration for work necessarily and reasonably done"; the law society should be requested to develop a tariff applicable to criminal matters for the assistance of the provincial director.

(e) An appeal should lie from the provincial director to the taxing officer at Toronto; and

(f) The advisory committee should be empowered to review the policy of the provincial director regarding criminal legal aid accounts.

Under the heading "Advice," the following conclusion was determined:

11. Legal aid clinics should be discontinued and a provision for advice under the proposed plan should be similar to that under the legal aid and advice plan in England; to entitle an applicant to such advice, he should be required to make a declaration as to his entitlement.

The conclusion, under the heading "Public defender," reads:

12. A public defender system should not be established.

Under the heading "Immediate legal aid," we have the following:

13. A duty roster of solicitors should be established in all areas where jails or lock-ups are established and a sufficient number of solicitors should be on call after business hours to meet the demand for legal aid in criminal matters.

14. Courts of first appearance should be established in Metropolitan Toronto and those other areas where the volume of criminal business would justify their existence.

Under the heading "Release on own recognizance," the conclusion there stated:

15. Consideration should be given to reducing the number of persons held in custody after arrest and before their first appearance in court, by their release on their own recognizance.

Under the heading, "Bail applications after arrest" there is this conclusion:

16. More justices of the peace should be available to ensure that persons in custody after arrest be given ample opportunity to apply for bail or release on their own recognizance within a reasonable time of their arrest.

Under the heading, "Remand to engage counsel," the conclusion under that heading reads:

17. The mandatory seven-day remand to engage defence counsel, as proposed by the county of York law association, would require an amendment to the criminal code and consequently this matter should be referred to the Minister of Justice.

"Legal officers for juvenile and family courts" is the next heading. The conclusion there is that:

18. Municipalities should be encouraged to provide for the full- or part-time employment of a legal officer, to assist these courts.

Under the heading, "Law schools":

19. The participation of law schools and law students should be made an integral part of the proposed legal aid plan whenever possible.

Heading No. 20 is, "Contributions by legally aided persons." The conclusion there stated is:

20. The collection of contributions made by legally aided persons should be the responsibility of the law society and not that of The Department of Public Welfare; it should be made a disciplinary offence for any lawyer or other person to accept any remuneration except that provided by the proposed plan; a lawyer participating in the plan should be prohibited from collecting any contribution made by a legally aided person except the nominal fees for advice as provided in the proposed plan.

21. If the need for a new legal aid plan is accepted, the government of the province of Ontario should request the law society of Upper Canada to propound such a plan.

Mr. Speaker, I would anticipate that this report would form the basis for legislation in the field of legal aid to be presented for the consideration of the Legislature as soon as there has been sufficient time for a proper study of the report and for the preparation of legislation arising therefrom.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT, 1964

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the amendments to this bill have to do with accounting procedures. In section 1, new provisions set out yardsticks which the board must use in approving or fixing rates. In sections 2 and 3, clauses (g), (h), (i) and (j) of section 35 (1) are transferred and appear as clauses (b), (c) and (d) of section 27 (1) as re-enacted, to give greater administrative flexibility.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, in explanation I might say that at the present time, municipalities under section 377 of The Municipal Act are not allowed to pay more than half—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that unless an explanation is asked for, when it is not a government bill there is no procedure by which—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I was going to say that if no one asks for an explanation of the member's bill, then he does not give the short explanation of it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask for an explanation of it.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, since the explanation has been asked for in the regular way, at the present time municipalities under section 377 of The Municipal Act are not allowed to pay more of the premiums of fringe benefits—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He is still not in order, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Is he in order or is he out of order?

Mr. Young: This means that no municipality can now pay more than 50 per cent of such premiums. My bill would eliminate this feature of the Act; it would allow municipalities and employees to bargain up to the full cost of premiums for fringe benefits.

THE MENTAL HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE OPHTHALMIC DISPENSERS ACT, 1960-1961

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE PHARMACY ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. Minister plan to make an explanation of that last bill?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to make one.

The first bill—to amend The Mental Hospitals Act—is to change the name of the class of patients now known as “voluntary patient” to “informal patient,” bringing them into line with patients in general hospitals, and to bring the Act into line with recent jurisdictional changes in The Mental Incompetency Act.

The amendment to The Ophthalmic Dispensers Act is designed to widen the standards under which a person may qualify for registration as an optician.

The amendment to The Pharmacy Act is to add new provisions to the Act that will strengthen the disciplinary procedures of the Ontario college of pharmacists.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), notice of which has been given.

What precise arrangements have been made for the relocation of the 84 households in Alexandra Park that must vacate by mid-June?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, the city of Toronto has appointed a relocation officer who has the overall responsibility of arranging for the relocation of families and persons who are displaced as a result of the Alexandra Park urban renewal scheme. Arrangements have been made to utilize the resources of the Ontario housing corporation, the housing authority of Toronto and the Metropolitan Housing Company. In addition, the relocation officer receives listings of available private rental accommodation. To avoid duplication of effort, all applications for government-assisted housing are reported by the relocation officer to the Metropolitan Toronto central housing registry. The registry then directs the application to whichever housing agency has the accommodation available of the size required, in the area preferred by the applicant. We are advised by the relocation officer that approximately 36 of the 84 householders that must vacate by mid-June will require some form of government-assisted rental housing. The remainder have indicated that they will purchase elsewhere, or that they prefer to rent privately owned accommodation.

I might state that one of the first cases we have had to deal with through the corporation has been for a large family requiring five bedrooms and it has found accommodation.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question of the hon. Minister? For the 36 households requiring some form of public housing, are there any specific prospects in view? I gather that the housing corporation does not intend to purchase units until the end of June so that there will be a gap here that is not going to be filled in the foreseeable future.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I would not think so. With the knowledge that these people are going to be looking for accommodation by that time, the corporation is now working toward finding accommodation for those people who will need it. These agencies here in the city of Toronto already have some facilities available for providing housing, and if they need assistance, they come to the corporation and we provide added assistance.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister, notice of which has been given to him.

Who are the members of the Cabinet committee that is studying reform of liquor laws and regulations?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would say this, that the personnel of various committees of Cabinet varies from time to time. They are established on a completely informal basis, and as they report to the full executive council, it takes collective responsibility. The names of individual members of any Cabinet committee at any given period of time, in my view, is of no significance.

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make a statement on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) whose voice has, but I certainly hope temporarily, left him.

I would like to make a brief statement, which I am sure the House will appreciate is of considerable importance to our dairy industry, which plays a vital part in the well-being of our provincial agricultural economy.

Hon. members of the House who represent rural ridings have full appreciation of the impact that our dairy herd improvement association programme has had in contributing to this important segment of our agricultural activity. At present, 59 county associations are taking advantage of the programme, with approximately 34,000 cows under test representing 1,300 herds.

Recognizing the value of the programme, I am pleased to inform the House that steps are being taken to increase the number of herds being tested. This will be accomplished by the institution of pilot programmes in the Guelph and Kemptville areas and in Bruce county. Dairy-cattle owners in the Guelph and Kemptville areas are being offered an opportunity to enroll in what might be termed an owner-sampler programme. Under such a programme the herd owner reports the weight of milk produced by each cow in the herd and collects a composite milk sample on one day in each month. The DHIA supervisor in the area will pick up the samples and take them to Kemptville or Guelph. In each case, the sample will be tested for butter fat by the infrared milk analyzer.

This technique has proved to be the most efficient and economical method of testing for butter fat. Using this method, it is possible to analyze more than 500 samples of milk per day for each of four analyses: fat, protein, lactose and solids not fat.

Following the test, The Department of Agriculture will process the production records, using the data processing equipment located at the Ontario agricultural college, with the herd owner receiving a monthly report on the production of his herd. It is anticipated that during the first pilot project, approximately 125 herds in each area will be tested in this manner.

By having the owners take the samples, the DHIA supervisor can service several herds each day, rather than service just one herd as is the case when he must be present at milking time to record weights and take the milk samples. It is felt that this pilot project will be of great help in determining the potential of an owner-sampler programme. It will also evaluate the potential value of the infrared milk analyzer for use in central laboratory testing.

Because of improvements in the system of keeping records, the supervisor in Bruce county will be spending less time on keeping records. As a result, he will be able to conduct the testing of milk samples in a number of additional herds enrolled in an owner-sampler programme. It is anticipated that these pilot programmes will be carried out for a period of six to 12 months.

It is also planned to introduce gradually a new record-keeping system in all associations, so that it, too, will be available to every farmer enrolled in the DHIA testing. The cost-of-production report will be available to farmers enrolled on an owner-sampler basis as well as to the regular DHIA members. Cost to the owner-sampler members will be $1 per cow per year, while on the pilot project.

At the completion of these pilot projects it is planned to reorganize the DHIA programme so that as many farmers as possible will be able to participate in the testing programme.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. members of the House will appreciate the value of this service to the milk producers of the province and that it will be a major factor in the continuance of the high quality of our dairy cattle, which is recognized throughout the world.

Mr. D. W. Ewen (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, next week an event of significant importance to our Canadian citizens of Armenian background will be noted. On April 24, Armenians all over the globe, including those under Soviet domination, will recall part of their tragic past, and the day has been set aside for church service commemorations.

Historians tell us that Armenia is more than 3,000 years old. Geography places the ancient land of Armenia at the crossroads of the Middle East in Asia Minor, where invasions and movements of civilization and new spiritual forces laid the foundations for western culture. Much is owed to the valiant people who contributed so much to the arts, science, technology and culture through many centuries. We in Canada can proudly state that we have attracted nearly 10,000 loyal Canadian citizens of this race, who with a sense of belonging and utmost appreciation for the liberty they enjoy with us—without restraint, as equal partners with all others—in mutual respect are helping us to forge the destiny of our glorious country.

Mr. Speaker, I happen to know quite a number of these people and feel proud of their acquaintance, because they inspire me in performing my own duties, as a Canadian-born citizen, to do my utmost in serving my country with sincerity and purpose.

During World War I these people fought for coveted liberation and on May 28, 1918, declared independence and created a republic, which only lasted two years. The year 1965 has been accepted by them as a year of dedication and the day, April 24, the day of mourning for those of their kinfolk who have laid down their lives that others might live in freedom, and in the hope of it. On this day the churches will be holding memorial services and on this day the speakers will call to the attention of our young generations, the work of peace and understanding that lies ahead. It is in the Canadian tradition to honour those to whom freedom of worship means more than life itself.

It is appropriate to call this to the attention of the world that suffering of men should not be permitted again. It is especially appropriate to identify the role that every ethnic group can play in building a world of peace and progress, which is the fervent desire of all men of goodwill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE ENERGY ACT, 1964

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management) moves second reading of Bill No. 83, An Act to amend The Energy Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE GAS AND OIL LEASES ACT, 1962-1963

Hon. Mr. Simonett moves second reading of Bill No. 84, An Act to amend The Gas and Oil Leases Act, 1962-1963.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education) moves second reading of Bill No. 87, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 88, An Act to amend The Public Schools Act.

Motion agreed to: second reading of the bill.

THE SEPARATE SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 89, An Act to amend The Separate Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND BOARDS OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 90, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister say something about this? I have had some correspondence suggesting that this bill is not completely fair to all people who are with the children's aid society. Would the hon. Minister say something about that?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): I have had letters and representations, too, from the children's aid society. I have had one or two meetings with representatives. I think the bill is related to a degree with The Child Welfare Act. All of these bills will be going to committee and I will have some further information for the hon. members at the time the education committee meets.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

BURIAL PLACE OF JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE AND HIS WIFE

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 94, An Act to establish a foundation for the preservation of the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: Thirty-third order, committee of the whole House; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

THE TRAINING SCHOOLS ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 25, The Training Schools Act, 1965.

On section 1:

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Chairman, I move that clause (3) of section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out "county, district or" in the first line.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, before this matter is dealt with under section 1, it seems to me that this bill should not be discussed at this point, that it rather should go to a committee—I suppose labour, legal and municipal bills is the committee to go to—to be discussed in some detail. A great many people are concerned with this bill and certainly, in discussions with various people working in various fields upon which this bill has some bearing, concern has been voiced about the various clauses in it. It seems to me that these people should have an opportunity to have a look at the bill, to discuss it at the committee stage; then, after that is done, it would be reported back here.

Certainly I think the people in the whole field of children's aid, the field of correction, the field of municipalities who are going to be responsible for the bills incurred by these children—all these should be heard at the committee stage. I would urge, Mr. Chairman, that this matter be referred by the hon. Minister to the appropriate committee for a thoroughgoing discussion, clause by clause.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I would be interested in knowing which groups are concerned about any of the sections of this bill. We have discussed this with everyone who was interested in it, and any recommendations which have been seriously made to us are being provided by amendments which are being presented today. Insofar as the municipalities are concerned, any responsibilities attaching to them insofar as this bill is concerned have not been changed. There is no change at all insofar as the municipalities are concerned, so I am at a loss to understand what objection there would be, or which groups would be interested in making any representation. I would be interested in hearing from the hon. member about that.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I want to say "groups"—I meant individuals representing these various groups—people who are in these various groups. Perhaps I should put it, people who are working with the children in various areas upon which this bill will impinge. Anyway, no group has made official representation to me, but I do know that there is very great concern among some people in this respect. I would urge that the hon. Minister allow a full opportunity for discussion of the various clauses in this bill.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I believe there has been at least one piece of correspondence received by the clerk of the Legislature from the Ontario mental health association. It was my impression that a letter had come inquiring as to when this bill might go to committee stage. I would think that there are innumerable child welfare agencies in the province of Ontario which would be interested in section 8 (b) of this bill in particular, and should be able to pass comment on it—namely, the question of whether the care of the child by any other agency of child welfare would be insufficient or impracticable. One could get several representations from interested parties in the field. Certainly, if the number of interested groups who came to make representations to the Minister's committee on child welfare was any indication, then this bill could well come before such groups since it does embody rather new principles for The Training Schools Act.

The other aspect which might be raised in this regard, Mr. Chairman, is that, unless I am mistaken, some of the superintendents within the hon. Minister's own department were not involved in the specific formulation of this bill. It might be possible for the hon. Minister, through his senior civil servants, to bring to a committee of the House and to interested parties, information as to their individual viewpoints. I think that a bill embodying such major principles could well come before a committee of this House; and the health, education, and welfare committee is perfectly suited for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I must say that these objections, which have been referred to here, have certainly not reached our ears, and we have had numerous meetings with numerous people. I have before me a press release from the Canadian welfare council in which they give their wholehearted support to the bill. I have others from the children's aid societies, from juvenile court judges. We have met with them; they helped bring this bill to fruition. They helped formulate this bill; and so far as coming before a committee, and having superintendents of training schools there, that is an unheard of thing.

Mr. S. Lewis: I did not say the superintendents. I said that leading civil servants in the department might convey the impressions of these people directly involved in administering training schools. Surely their views are important to this body?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, there is no real reason why I would object to it going to a committee, except in the interests of getting the business of this House done. It seems to me, unless there is good reason for it, that we can deal with it right here. I have had voluminous correspondence; and I have not had any objection, except in one or two instances to certain clauses, insofar as the technical detail is concerned. These have been straightened out. I am prepared to present to the House here, today, those amendments; they are really a matter of clarification. I have them here and they meet any objections we have had from anyone.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, a year or two ago the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), in explaining what he conceived to be one of the major functions, if not the sole function, of some of the standing committees, said that they provided an opportunity for the public to be heard in cases where it was desirable or expedient for that to be done.

I must say, although I have given some study to the matter, that I have not been able to distinguish any principle by which the government decides when it may be appropriate to hear the public. I have looked at the bills that have been referred to committee and compared them with ones that have not been, and sometimes I get the impression it just depends on the mood of the Minister. Some Ministers like to have them go to committee and some do not. As far as The Department of Reform Institutions is concerned, it does not seem to have a committee that deals exactly with its field of activity. It may be that that is the reason why this bill has not gone to committee.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that a bill of this kind, which embodies an important new principle, is one worthy of a certain amount of public discussion before it becomes law. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister has been in active consultation with interested groups, particularly professional groups, in the community for some substantial time, and no doubt at various stages in the development of the policy embodied in this bill. It would also be useful, however, if the members of the Legislature could hear from these people, too. I am not suggesting that the department has not canvassed their views pretty fully, and given as complete consideration as it could to them, but it leaves us, to an important degree, in the dark with regard to some of the new principles that are embodied in this bill we are being asked to pass on.

The hon. Minister said that he has talked to all the interested groups, or all the ones he knows of, and they are quite satisfied. Well, that may be, but it seems to me that this kind of a bill, with the wide implications that it has and with the various areas of interest involved, could very well go to a committee. It has been waiting on the order paper here for consideration in committee of the whole for some substantial time—I would not, off-hand, say for how long, but at least two weeks—and since it has waited for two weeks, I think it could wait a little longer. I do not want to delay it unduly but still there is time for consideration by one of the committees and consideration at a later date in this House by the committee of the whole.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I hate to put myself in a position where I appear to be hesitant to allow a committee of this Legislature to go into all aspects of a bill. Really, the hon. member again has said that there are people who would be interested to comment and to make representation. There has been no evidence of this at all. Generally, when this occurs one hears from these people in advance and one can generally sense that there is interest on the part of some people from the standpoint of making representation. All the representation I can think of has been made and I have not heard from anyone. We have discussed it, as the hon. member has mentioned, with all of the people who are concerned. Insofar as the principles involved in this are concerned, we had quite a debate on this on second reading. We discussed it in this House. As this is now in the committee of the whole House we are only talking about the details clause-by-clause. It is just the implementation of the principles we discussed at that time.

I think the hon. member for Scarborough West talked about, for example, other facilities available. We are not closing out any facilities in this; we discussed this at second reading when we were discussing the principle of the bill. We are merely providing a better service in the training schools and other matters that come within the purview of this bill, which does not close out anything, and as a matter of fact, holds out some hope for some additional facilities. But the non-passing of this bill or the changing of it would not add one bed to any particular institution and type of system of any kind.

We have a problem in our department, too. We have a deputy Minister who has been ill for seven months; we have other illness in the department and we are short-staffed. As was pointed out in the estimates, we have a tremendous programme under way. We brought our people down here time and time again, and unless there appears to be a very good reason for going to committee, I would like to see us get on with the business of the House and get some of these things under way in the department. Otherwise, we will be delayed again and we have an extensive programme.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister's concern about delay does not seem to ring very true in view of the fact that I have been informed that this bill received second reading on March 2, which was approximately six weeks ago, and there has been no progress on it between March 2 and today.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I think it was held up at the hon. member's request, because this bill was ready to be dealt with—at least as I understood it. That is why it was not called until this morning.

Mr. Bryden: Very shortly after it received second reading, it was suggested that it come forward for consideration in committee, so we will take responsibility for delaying it perhaps one week out of six.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not think it is a question of taking responsibility. All I am saying is that in dealing with this bill in the business of the House, the request was quite normal and ordinary that it be delayed.

Apparently someone in the hon. member's group wanted to look at it and study it and consult, and I am not attaching any blame, if the hon. member understands what I mean. I think it is a normal procedure, but as the hon. Minister says it has been dealt with by everybody who has anything to say.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like first of all to assure the hon. Prime Minister that in future, if we ask him to hold a bill—and he has always been very co-operative in doing that—we will mean only for a day or two, not for six weeks. However, it is the government's responsibility as to when it brings forward matters for consideration by this House. I merely point out that there apparently has not been any sense of urgency up until now.

I would make only one other point. The hon. Minister has indicated that he plans to bring in certain amendments this afternoon which arise out of consultations that he has had with various people who are interested in this bill. I do not know how extensive those amendments are or how important they are, but we receive them without any notice at all. We have now to consider them without notice—we may get a written copy of them, I do not know—but on that basis we have to try to judge whether or not we take the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They do not affect the principle, I can assure the hon. member; they do not affect the principle of the bill one iota. They are merely matters of tidying up in some instances where someone suggested that if something was put in one section, as against another, the bill would operate more smoothly and more efficiently. The amendments which are before the hon. members do not affect the principle of the bill at all, and he can see that, I am sure.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, there is just one further observation I would like to make in this respect. Is it a general custom for bills of any contention to go to committee? The people to whom I talked expressed the opinion that they would like to make some representation at the committee stage. They may not have come to the hon. Minister and made representations to him because they felt they could do this at the committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will tell me who they are, I can inform him as to whether we have had discussions with them.

Mr. Young: Unless we get to a committee there is no purpose in it.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I just add a footnote to that, Mr. Chairman? This argument is being made in good faith. It was in fact in the interim period between second reading and the time for this bill to come to committee that certain of us in this group addressed ourselves to aspects of this bill and found it exceedingly complex and difficult to interpret and having very considerable implications. I do believe there are agencies in Ontario and individuals skilled in the field who could clarify these areas of concern in the minds of hon. members generally. Bills containing principles and sections far less important than this in their implications have come before committees of this House as a matter of course. I want to assure the hon. Prime Minister, and the hon. Minister, that this is done in good faith, that the wish for clarification on some very difficult sections—such as sections 8 and 9, where the new centres should be built; where the municipality plays its part, and the age level—is expressed because these are all contentious and important areas.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect again, I sense an attempt to get the bill to committee merely to go into a lot of broad general principles that have been discussed and are not affected by this bill.

The hon. member has mentioned about where these new centres are going to be. There is nothing in this bill at all that provides for centres of any kind; I do not know where he would get this information.

I am prepared, Mr. Chairman, to stand up here and defend this bill and explain it. As a matter of fact, if some of it becomes too technical I may have to admit that I am not in a position to do it, but I think that there is nothing in here that I cannot explain.

Mr. Bryden: That is another point for going to committee—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me try to get this bill piloted; there are a lot of other things waiting in the department. There are things awaiting in the department in the realm of private training schools as well as the passage of this bill. We are now approaching the end of April and if we wait until after Easter we will never be able to get some of our work done.

Again, as I say, if I felt there was any body of opinion at all that was concerned about any aspect of this bill, I would not hesitate for one moment to say, "In the interests of getting it all clarified by all people who are interested, I would insist myself that it go to committee." But there has been no suggestion of this at all. We had a great deal of interest in this bill, we discussed it with all these people and the ones from whom we have heard are all happy. There has also been a lot of publicity on this bill. We have heard from all of them as far as we know and they are quite happy with what has come out of this bill.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman, on section 6? How often under subsection 5 of section 6 is it expected that the advisory board will be visiting the various training schools to ascertain conditions and report to the Minister? Can he compare it to the practice hitherto?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will expect that the board will visit even more frequently than it has in the past, because it had other duties in the past, which did not give it the time to attend to some of this. We are giving more authority with respect to visiting schools and doing a job that was envisaged in the first place for the training schools advisory board to do. The answer is, we envisage that it will be doing more visiting than it has in the past.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Young: On section 7, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister regarding the inspection—"Every training school shall be inspected at least twice a year by an inspector"—has this been the custom up to this point?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The advisory board, by and large, has done this.

Mr. Young: This will be an inspection staff in addition to the advisory board?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right.

Mr. Young: And is the staff now available or appointed, or is this staff to be appointed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have some staff now. We plan on adding to the staff for this purpose.

Mr. Bryden: Well, what staff does the department have now, Mr. Chairman? And what does it expect the full complement will be when it is—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I could not, at this time, answer that.

Mr. Bryden: Well, could the hon. Minister answer the first part? What staff does he now have available for the purpose?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I could not say at this time. I think this came out in the estimates when I was asked. There is an inspection staff for the department generally, not specifically for the training schools.

Mr. Young: But this will be specifically for the training schools?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This has yet to be worked out. I should point out, too, at this time, that with the adoption of the principle by the government of picking up the complete operating costs of the private training schools, this also is going to require a larger degree of inspection. Obviously, when you pick up the complete cost you have to make sure the costs are approved and the operation of the school is in accordance with what the department would expect with the money expended. So this in itself will cause additional staff.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8:

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I move that subsection 2 of section 8 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

2. Where an application is made under subsection 1 the judge shall

(a) hear the child; and

(b) hear the evidence of or on behalf of the person who has submitted the application and make adequate inquiry into the truth of such evidence.

In explanation of that—I am giving the hon. member a chance to make his notes—it was understood that in each case the judge would wish to interview the child; but clause (a), now introduced, provides an additional safeguard by making this mandatory. No such safeguard existed in the old Act; there was merely a reference to bringing a child to court. I hope that explanation is clear.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, in subsection 1 of section 8, "on the application of any person," I wonder if the hon. Minister would clarify that? Does this mean a neighbour, or is it limited to a parent or relative, or perhaps the children's aid society, or a responsible organization? Does this mean that anybody could make the application?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have some notes on this which I think would be helpful. While, previously, section 7 stated: "any person may bring" a child before a judge—which suggested that the child should be regarded as accused or implicated in some way—now the child, admitted to a training school under section 8, is in no way accused, implicated or labelled. The words used in the new Act, "upon the application of any person," do not mean that a formal application must be made, or that an application under this section must be made, before the court has started to deal with the case. The words only mean that a person, acting in the interests of the child, must state his intention to apply to a judge under section 8. A person may simply be asked by a judge whether he wishes to apply for a court order under section 8. If he confirms, this should suffice. As a matter of fact, we envisage it could be a probation officer, it could be a social worker, it could be someone from the children's aid society—and they would merely go through this informal formality—if I may use that expression.

Mr. Young: Then it is up to the judge to determine whether—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask a question: What would the hon. Minister or the department do if a judge should rule that a child is emotionally disturbed? Where would he send the child?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Without attempting to appear that we are not concerned about this—we went into this the other day, that a great many children, probably the majority of children who are getting into this kind of trouble, are emotionally disturbed to a degree—I do not think I should get involved in what degree that is. I will leave that to the hon. member for Scarborough West as he is an expert on this. He can explain that to the hon. member.

All we are doing at this stage is providing the facilities, the means, by which a child can be admitted to a training school. If, in the opinion of a judge, a training school is not suitable for a particular child, it is up to the judge to make that decision. What he does beyond that is something he is going to have to deal with before this Act is proclaimed. But we are dealing with admission to the training school, and I think the other is a matter of whether this Legislature feels, at some stage or other, that we are not providing the proper facilities for certain emotionally disturbed children. This would be another matter, in my view. What we are talking about now is how you admit a child to a training school.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I agree with this bill. When this bill came before the House for second reading we said we agreed with it in principle. But this question I have asked illustrates the whole weakness of the bill in that if a child really was emotionally disturbed, even in an extreme state, a judge has no alternative under the present circumstances but to send him to a training school whether he wanted to or not, because there is no other place to send him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, again I am not too sure this comes in here, but it is an important bill and there are important principles involved and I do not think they should be ignored.

In the first place—I think I used this expression before, I am not too sure—but we are going to arrive at the moment of truth. We are going to find out precisely how many of these youngsters belong in a training school, or do not belong in a training school. I am firmly convinced that there has been a great deal of misinformation—I am not saying deliberate—and a great deal of misunderstanding, about what uses the training schools are put to, what they can be put to, and whether in fact so many of these youngsters do not belong in a training school. If they do not belong in a training school we are now going to find out; in fact, what we are going to find out is that the vast majority, perhaps 90 to 95 per cent, belong in a training school because the youngsters need a controlled setting which is not available any place else. And if it is made available any place else, if it is in a controlled setting, which it will have to be, then it is a training school under a different name.

We may be wrong, but this, as I say, will be clarified, and we are prepared to take this chance. The judge is now going to have to make that decision on the basis of the evidence before him, and not just on opinions which have been bandied about from one person to another. I think this will be helpful in that respect. Because if there are, in fact, many youngsters who are in a training school and who should not be there, we want to make sure; and I think this Act will help bring about a situation where they are not going to be in the training schools.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, in order to carry out what this section desires to do, the judge will have to be fairly well informed about the child who comes before him. Right now, in the province of Ontario, you do not have the proper facilities to carry out the necessary investigation of a child, or examine his background; so, in order to make this section a workable section and of some use, you are going to have to expand the necessary facilities and to retain far more people than you have. Even the city of Toronto—which, at the juvenile court level, is more advanced than most—still has not got nearly what is needed; and if you look at the province as a whole, you really do not have the staff or the facilities to carry out this section.

What I am saying at this point is that I agree with the section; but, as far as this government's ability to carry it out is concerned, if its record in the past is any indication, and from what I have seen in the Budget, that section is more or less going to be a hope for the future, you are a long way from actually making the thing work.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman; on section 8. This is where I wish we were in committee because I, for one, would like to question a number of people in the field. I think there is a basic fact about section 8 which is open to discussion.

I, for one, do not believe that we should be committing children in the province under the age of 12 to training schools. I do not think that The Department of Reform Institutions, with the inevitable corrective emphasis that is put on it, should supervise children under 12. And that is true of section 9 of this bill; no child under 12 falling within the category of section 9 may be committed to a training school. I think that should also be true of section 8 of this bill.

Last year, Mr. Minister, this argument involved some 104 children in the province of Ontario, according to the statistics from your training schools branch. I suggest to you that the money used to bring six or seven workers into your department to service these 104 children, or indeed the expanded facilities you require to service these 104 children, could be far better used to provide money for family counselling agencies to work with the child and the families involved. There is something profoundly wrong with a society which views, in any sense, a child under 12 as needing the corrective emphasis of The Department of Reform Institutions. The word may not be palatable to the hon. Minister, but that is his department.

I admit I am not sure that one can engage in an arbitrary age cut-off. I am not particularly happy about the age of 12, in personal terms, to tell the hon. Minister the truth. But certainly for the consistency of this bill, since it is mentioned in section 9, we should embody that consistency in section 8.

I am not going to move an amendment to that effect immediately. I intend to do so, but I will hold off until other hon. members have had the chance to make observations.

I do appeal to the hon. Minister: Let us be candid. We know that those who are deemed fit for training schools under the age of 12, will surely be suffering from unhappy environmental backgrounds, severe maternal deprivation, and emotional disturbance of some degree. Such children will obviously better fit into one of the treatment centre areas, or children's aid society group homes within The Department of Public Welfare—if such can be found—but not within The Department of Reform Institutions. I appeal to him to make his own bill consistent. The principle of section 9 should be incorporated in section 8. I will so move later on after other hon. members have given their views.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have gone through all of this with the children's aid society people, and we are in agreement that there is no such thing as deciding that a certain group of youngsters, merely because of age, belong with children's aid societies, or with Public Welfare, or with anything of that nature. It is not that simple. Quite frankly, the suggestion, that the money needed to supply six or seven workers for 104 children would be better used for family counselling, is a dream. Everybody in this field has been attempting to find a way to get through to the family; I think we went into this the other day at some length. It is a most difficult problem. While you are trying to get to the family of some of these people, there would be untold damage done to the child.

In the first place there is the presumption that these 104 children come from families with whom you could do something. This is just not the case. There are some instances where we hope that something can be done with them, and there is family counselling being done by the family service agencies.

Generally, when a child reaches the juvenile court, there is no better place for him than a training school. As a matter of fact, the conclusion seems to be now that these youngsters would have been better put in a training school much earlier, given perhaps two or three months at a training school, and then perhaps sent to a group foster home. I have discussed this with children's aid society people, too; the idea that the training school is going to do them a lot of harm is just not so.

The training school, of course, does some harm to some of them, the same as a group foster home will do harm to some of them.

Nobody has the answers to these things. You can plan—I do not want to use the word dream, because I would rather use the word plan—for all of these things, but they are all in the realm of conjecture. You could not, by any means, for the cost of six or seven workers—although we are not concerned at the moment with the cost—put this money into family counselling and accomplish a great deal with the knowledge and the staff available at the present time.

There is great need for the controlled setting of a training school for many children under 12; again, this Act will bring out whether or not that is the case. There is no reason for a judge to send a youngster to a training school, if in fact he does not belong to a training school; and this is what this Act is telling him. This Act is telling him not to send the child to a training school if, in fact, the child does not belong there.

Insofar as the facilities are concerned, at the juvenile courts all the social history on the youngster, all the information that could be accumulated, is generally available to the judge before he makes a decision. Whether that can be improved or not, is another matter. I cannot think of anything in this whole field that cannot be improved; it can always be improved. But this bill is a great forward step, and will bring all these things to a head; I think that an amendment would only confuse the issue.

We have discussed this with the juvenile court judges. We have discussed it with the children's aid society. We have discussed it with the Public Welfare people. And they all feel that this is the way to approach it. Whether a year from today, or two years from today, we find we have to make further amendments, that is another matter. If further amendments are required, we will be ready to make those amendments. This is a move in the right direction and I think it would be better if we kept exactly to the bill as it is here, because it has been digested and redigested, and it has been studied. We have conferred with these people and we have their approval on it as it is now, and I would hate to present them with some changes which have been made at the last minute.

Mr. S. Lewis: When you say "these people"—have individuals from various treatment centres who deal with this age group indicated their approval that, as a matter of course and of choice, children under 12 should be put in training schools? Has Warrendale indicated approval? Has Boys' Village indicated its approval? Has Sunnyside indicated its approval? Has the Ontario mental health association—which is presently undertaking courses with primary school teachers across the province about delinquent youngsters within this age group—indicated its approval?

Are you suggesting, Mr. Minister, that the children's aid society, as a matter of course and of choice, believes that youngsters within that age group should be placed in training schools?

I suggest to you, sir, that the treatment facilities presently available simply cannot provide it; and, if that is so, as a matter of choice they would not indicate approval. But they have no alternative choice.

Subsection (b) of section 8, as the hon. member for Parkdale has pointed out, is essentially meaningless at the moment. There is no alternative choice, and I think you would be doing a very great boon to this province to incorporate the age category of 12 to 16, in section 8 as well as section 9. Why should it apply differently from one to the other? I strongly urge that the hon. Minister take into consideration that we force the issue—we must force the issue—that we provide the treatment facilities required for children under the age of 12, if it comes to that unhappy pass. No one can state, categorically, that the families cannot be worked with; no one can state, categorically, that detached workers would not be an improvement. But I think the hon. Minister agrees that training schools at that age are unpredictable, at the very best, in their effect on the under-12s.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, insofar as the last statement is concerned, I think all of these institutions, whether they be treatment centres such as Warrendale and Meryvale, are unpredictable. You cannot—

Mr. S. Lewis: Some have had much better results than others.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, that is questionable, too. Nobody can tell you what the rates of success are, because you have to have control groups. It is very difficult to establish control groups because every child is different.

Mr. S. Lewis: There are some.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have seen some of them and, as far as I and some of my people are concerned, they are by no means conclusive.

Mr. S. Lewis: How many?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should tell the hon. member this: insofar as taking this out of Reform Institutions is concerned, just recently—I could give him other people who have the same opinion, very able people in this field—just recently I had a chat with James Felstiner. He is quite involved, deeply involved, in this work and quite knowledgeable in the field. In his view, it would be a mistake to take it out of this department for many reasons—which I could discuss at some length except that it really does not belong here.

As far as discussing this with people like the mental health association and so on, is concerned, I recently had a discussion with the head of Boys' Village; and, along the lines the hon. member was discussing, we are going to carry out a pilot project in collaboration with Boys' Village just to find out, as precisely as we can, whether some of these youngsters, whatever age group we are talking about, would really fit into Boys' Village better than they would in the training school; if so, this will tell the story as far as it is possible to ascertain.

Insofar as the age is concerned, the hon. member has no doubt done a lot of homework on this—

Mr. S. Lewis: I know the other jurisdictions, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are quite advanced over other jurisdictions. Now that he has raised it I think it would be just as well to get it in the record. At the present time, the age limit is ten in Illinois; in England it is ten; in the Soviet Union it is 12; in Austria, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, and some of those countries, it is 14; in Denmark and Sweden it is 15; and in Canada—this is what we are trying to establish—here in Canada nationally it is seven. We think that should be changed and we hope that this bill will do a great deal towards raising it.

Mr. S. Lewis: In every instance you have read, it is, you must admit, an age level above that which this bill leaves open.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No!

Mr. S. Lewis: Under age 12 in this bill, we could still have, as we did in 1964, children of seven and eight committed to training schools. In 1964—the statistics are in your book—admittedly not very many but, it occurred. I think there were 12 children aged nine admitted; 27 aged ten—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Excuse me, perhaps we are talking about two different things. I was talking about criminal responsibility.

Mr. S. Lewis: You are really on section 9.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are talking about criminal responsibility. I did not know to what the hon. member is referring; I am sorry.

Mr. S. Lewis: I shall not pursue it. I was interested in the hon. Minister's observations on Boys' Village. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) will make a statement to the House in the near future about the pilot project which is planned for Boys' Village. It does fall within The Department of Public Welfare and I think that is precisely the place where this kind of activity should work itself out. I think it is an excellent idea, and I wish it were offered as the alternative to this legislation which is before the House today.

Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), that:

Subsection 1 of section 8 be amended by inserting, after the word "child" in the second line, the words "of at least 12 years of age and."

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye." As many as are opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

On section 9:

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I move that clause (a) of section 9 of the bill amended by adding "and" at the end thereof, and that clause (b) be amended by deleting "and" at the end thereof, and that clause (c) be deleted.

Clause (c) of section 9 has been transferred to section 11. This is more logical; this is merely tidying it up. It has no effect on the principle of any of the clauses.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry? Shall section 9, as amended, carry?

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister a question on section 9. Am I to understand, Mr. Minister, that the agencies available to children under subsection (b) of section 8, are also available under section 9? Is it mandatory that, under section 9, the child go to a training school? Would not another alternative welfare agency be available, as it is under section 8? Why are we making this distinction?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It states here that a judge may order that a child be sent to a training school; it does not say he must send a child to a training school. It is entirely up to the judge.

Mr. S. Lewis: It, therefore, means, Mr. Minister, that if the child has contravened any statute in force in Ontario, which contravention would be punishable by imprisonment if committed by an adult, then that child, in the wisdom of the magistrate, could in fact be sent to something other than a training school? Such a child could perhaps go to another institution, in another area, under Public Welfare, or Health, or Education? Or would such a child be absolutely confined to a training school by the terms of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not see how he would be confined because it is permissive; it is not mandatory. It says a judge may order a child sent to a training school. If the judge does not want to send him to a training school, he just does not send him to a training school. Presumably he would give some direction as to where he thought the child should go.

Mr. S. Lewis: I simply wanted to get on the record then that the areas under section 8 are available to children who fall within section 9; because I think, if it embodies that principle, it is an important step forward.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is, "Yes."

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine.

Section 9, as amended, agreed to.

Section 10 agreed to.

On section 11:

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I move that section 11 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

The judge in his order sending a child to a training school shall,

(a) designate the municipality to which the child belongs, if any;

(b) state, where practicable, the name, age, and religious faith of the child; and

(c) provide for the payment of the cost of maintenance of the child in accordance with this Act.

Now, an explanation. This has been changed in order to incorporate clause (c) of section 9, which is fairly clear, which had to do with the provision for payment, and which has been transferred to section 11. This section now clearly defines the information which must appear on the judge's order. It is again merely tidying it up and making it a little clearer.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry? Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I want to underline our whole apprehension about this bill, in that we think the principle of the bill is good but you have not got the agencies to really carry out the principle of the bill. Having said that, I would say that the matter of evidence is another case where we do have a deep concern. Evidence with young children, I would hope, does not imply just court evidence, but I think the hon. Minister has suggested that evidence would include a social history of the family and the background as well.

I would suggest, sir, that there are areas of this province, with the deepest respect for the magistrates and the juvenile court judges, in which the magistrate or the juvenile court judge will make a decision but he will not have the facilities to have received a comprehensive presentence report, and will not have the facilities of a travelling psychiatric clinic, for example, in connection with some young child who for various reasons committed some kind of abnormality and came before the court. In many cases a decision is made on the basis of the crime rather than on the social background. Once again I urge that there will be far more comprehensive coverage by travelling psychiatric clinics to give a full and complete picture to the magistrate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I have not been reading many of the reports which come in from across the province. There may be some areas where this is true. It has not come to my attention because I find the children's aid societies in most of those areas usually are of great assistance to the court. They generally have a pretty good file on these matters, but whether it is efficient and whether it should be improved is another matter.

I would say this, that the juvenile court judges association now meets quite regularly and discusses precisely these matters, and we meet with them. I think the hon. member will find there are great advances being made in this particular area.

I should also point out, however, that if the facilities are not what they should be at the moment they are not going to be any less under the new bill, so really it has no bearing on them. Whether the facilities should be improved or not is another matter. We hope that all of these facilities will improve.

Mr. Thompson: I think it does very much have bearing on this. When you talk of adequate evidence, which I think is the term used in your section, as far as I am concerned, adequate evidence concerning young children being sent to an institution means a most comprehensive social study. I suggest you have not got the facilities and areas to do that in the children's aid societies in which there was a travelling clinic set up by the department in northern and other areas. I suggest there are children who do not have a really good, incisive, capable look made into their backgrounds and who are sentenced more on the basis of their manageability—or whatever the term is the hon. Minister has used—rather than looking at their—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The point I was trying to make is that the old Act referred to evidence as well, so there is no change here. It will be hoped, as I have said, that the concern the hon. member has raised is something which will improve itself or will be improved in the future where it is needed.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13:

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I move that section 13 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

1. A decision under section 8 granting or refusing an order sending a child to a training school may be appealed to the judge of the county or district court of the county or district in which the application was made, but where the judge who made the decision is a district or county court judge the appeal shall be heard and disposed of by any other county or district court judge in the same county or district court district.

2. A decision under section 9 may be appealed to a judge of the Supreme Court.

In explanation, Mr. Chairman, section 13 has been changed to differentiate between appeals under section 8 which require speedy action by another court. Under section 8 most of these will be on request of the children's aid societies, and there has to be some pretty speedy action there because if they wait until the cases get to an appeal court or the Supreme Court, the child may be too old to be handled by the juvenile court.

3. Appeals with regard to the application of section 9 in which the usual practice under federal legislation can be followed.

I should add, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment to the bill has been made on suggestion by the juvenile court judges association.

Section 13, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, there is a discrepancy. I was trying to get the amended copy of the Act and that is the reason I was not speaking from my seat. Is there not a conflict here? As I understand it, in section 1 the hon. Minister has struck out something from the definition or the interpretation of "judge." He has struck out "county, district," and has left only "juvenile and family court."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Or a magistrate.

Mr. MacDonald: Or a magistrate! Okay. Now the hon. Minister has come over to the amendment he has just put before the House. He says:

A decision under section 8 granting or refusing an order sending a child to a training school may be appealed to the judge of the county or district court of the county or district in which the application was made, but where the judge who made the decision is a county or district court judge—

The hon. Minister has struck that out in his interpretation. Under this Act "there ain't no such animal."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it does not say "there ain't no such animal." It means the original judge. However, I will read you a memorandum Mr. Stone has just sent over. He states: "Some juvenile and family court judges are also county court judges."

Sections 14 and 15 agreed to.

On section 16:

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, this section, in my view, should be deleted—right down to section 22, as a matter of fact, because—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What section is the hon. member referring to?

Mr. Young: Section 16. When the child comes into the training school or into the department under its care, then it seems to me the full cost of his maintenance should be borne by the province at that point. These sections provide for the municipalities to be sorted out and the responsibility fixed on the municipality where the boy has last resided or where the mother last resided for a year. If that cannot be determined, then the municipalities are forced to fight it out between themselves or among themselves to decide who in fact is responsible. Therefore, it seems that the simplest way, and the most efficient and effective way here, is for the province to accept the responsibility. The taxpayer at some level must pay the shot in any case, and it is far better for him to do it at the most efficient level which is at the provincial one. So it seems to me that section 16 should be deleted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, of course, this is an entirely new principle the hon. member is suggesting. There is no change here from the present Act.

Mr. Young: Then the hon. Minister should bring in a new Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, you are here touching upon the principle which is inherent in the whole business of grants for the administration of justice, and obviously this would have to be taken into consideration in arriving at those grants. I think that until such time as this whole matter may be reviewed we would have to leave it as it is, because presumably this was taken into consideration when the percentage of those grants was established.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I think the point of the hon. member for Yorkview was well taken, for two reasons; one goes beyond this department and one affects this department right on the point.

In this business of trying to decide where a child comes from, there are many problems, such as not knowing whether a child is from a certain town or a certain city. If the department itself took the responsibility it would help many of the administrative problems in trying to handle the child. Even though the hon. member for Yorkview is introducing a new principle, this would certainly be the time when such a new principle could be brought before this House.

I cannot help but say I feel he is so right, Mr. Chairman.

The second thing is that not only the cost of the administration of justice but the cost of this department is involved. The municipalities are becoming so hard pressed that this is one cost that is eventually going to have to be borne by the province of Ontario, because we can see how the mill rate is going up, not only in the larger centres but throughout Ontario. It is an obvious cost that is going to have to be borne out of the Treasury of the province of Ontario.

For those two reasons—one, in the matter of trying to decide where a child comes from, and two, the problem would be solved if the province of Ontario would take over the cost, because it would be great help for the local towns and villages throughout the province of Ontario—the hon. member is right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perhaps I erred in not bringing out the other very important point in this particular area. The municipalities have the right of recourse to the parent. I think the hon. members of this House will agree that in probably most of these instances where a parent has the ability to pay, he should be made to pay for the child's maintenance. The municipality has the right of recourse to collect this money from the parent. It is much more difficult, of course, for the province to attempt to get the responsible parent to pay toward the cost of the maintenance of the child—

Mr. Trotter: Why?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because the municipal officers are right in the location and know where the parents are—

Mr. Trotter: No, but Mr. Chairman, the problem has been—and it is not only in The Department of Reform Institutions but even in some other areas such as welfare—that the various municipalities, because they are hard pressed, try to escape costs and if they possibly can they will say, "No, this child belongs to the village next door or town next door." There have been great arguments even in this particular area, as to whether the child is in the city of Toronto or the township of North York. In the Toronto area this has been solved somewhat, but we still have the problem, if he is in North York or Markham, of who is going to pay. I think this is something that could be solved under this section.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In many cases the parent will pay for it.

Mr. Trotter: In some cases, yes, but in so many cases where a child is in trouble with the law or comes under any of these departments where the government is involved, the majority seem to involve parents who cannot pay. I do not think it is so much a problem of going after the parents, because if the province really wanted to go after the parents it has far more power than the local village has as far as that goes. The real problem is trying to decide which municipality should look after the child, and this is something that this fails to solve.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member would note under subsection 5, that where there happens to be a difference of opinion, where it is apparently difficult for somebody to come to any conclusion—the judge has the authority to determine which municipality shall be responsible.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, this is the same sort of problem we run into in connection with so many of the welfare provisions. When the select committee on municipal affairs was visiting several Ontario municipalities last summer we came into one where one of the local officials told us quite proudly, quite boastfully, that his municipality was not involved in various welfare payments, this sort of payment and so on, because he made it his business to make sure that such people did not stay in his municipality. He had some mysterious means of getting them out.

I think my hon. colleague and the other hon. members who have spoken have a very excellent point here. This sort of responsibility, not only in The Department of Reform Institutions but in The Department of Public Welfare, should be a province-wide responsibility.

Whether or not the parents are going to be held to be liable for a portion of the cost is academic insofar as this discussion is concerned. Some of the most difficult and bitter and involved litigation, particularly in the welfare field, has been concerned with the question of which municipality is responsible for the person who requires welfare aid or reform institution aid. I think as the hon. Minister brings in a new Act he should begin to establish a new principle, the principle of acceptance of provincial responsibility.

Surely the province has just as great facilities, far better facilities, to identify the parent and to make the parent pay if the parent is in a position to afford it. What you would be promoting if you established this principle now, at the beginning, is a situation in which local municipalities would not act in the way that many of them do. Local administrators would not be given the power to try and root these people out, to try and look for technical, legal defences to take into court to say they are going to knock a few dollars off their tax rate because they are not going to pay when another municipality will.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They could not do that in this area.

Mr. Singer: They could! They could and they will; because there is a question if you look into the technical language on the purpose of subsection 2:

For the purpose of the section a child shall be deemed to belong to the municipality in which he last resided for the period of a year.

We have great arguments about what “resided” means. Did he reside here because he lived here for a little while and then moved here, or he lived in one municipality? Some of these people may have lived in a half a dozen municipalities over a period of 12 months. This is how you get into court—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member reads the balance of that particular subsection.

Mr. Singer: It reads:

But in the absence of evidence to the contrary, residence for one year in the municipality in which he was taken into custody shall be presumed.

All right, and then you get the autocratic municipal official, and we saw at least one this summer, who says: This is not going to go on in my municipality. As soon as they come as far as the town borders somehow he manages to get them out. What we saw in that particular municipality was no credit to any sort of government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was not in St. Andrew riding?

Mr. Singer: No, no; it was quite remote from the whole municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

I think the only way in which this can be properly controlled is by the government. I think this should be the beginning of the recognition of a principle which I hope the hon. Minister's colleague, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, will adopt in his legislation.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has gone to all the trouble of consolidating and revising this statute and bringing in a shiny new bill which, as he says, has been subject to a great deal of consideration in the department in consultation with outside parties; and then in sections 16 to 22, inclusive, he brings forward a principle that comes out of the Ark.

This approach to the whole welfare problem in its broadest sense is completely antiquated. The idea that all these things fall back on private charity or the local municipality is surely obsolete, and particularly in this setting. We have a situation here where the municipality has no discretion or responsibility of any kind. The only responsibility it has is to pay certain money under certain circumstances to the province. It has no control over the situation under which a child finds his way into one of these provincial institutions, it has no discretion of any kind. We talk about municipal autonomy but our statutes are laced with provisions that deprive them of any sort of autonomy; impose financial obligations upon them without them having any say at all. It surely is a principle that ought to have been abandoned in toto and certainly should be abandoned in the specific instances now before us.

There may be some difficulties of adjustment within the government as between The Department of Reform Institutions and The Department of Public Welfare; but why should the municipality have to bear the brunt of your problems? You fellows see each other every day, surely you can get that settled. I know the hon. Minister of Public Welfare is a very easy fellow to get along with. I am sure if the two Ministers sat down for 15 minutes they could get this thing straightened out.

At any rate, why pass your burdens on to the municipalities? This type of obsolete provision should certainly not appear in what purports to be a new revised and up-dated statute. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he let the bill stand while he thinks about it for a little while. I think if he thinks about it he will decide that sections 16 to 22, inclusive, should go out of the bill and that whatever adjustments have to be made between him and his colleague, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare should be made. This bill should not be conditioned by those internal administrative problems.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of section 16, please rise.

All those opposed, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes are 68, the nays 25.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the section carried. Section 16 agreed to.

Sections 17 to 22, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 23:

Mr. Thompson: On section 23, I would, through you, sir, like to point out to the hon. Minister subsection 2 of section 23, which I am going to read at this point:

During the period that a child is a ward of the training school the rights and duties of the child's parents or any other guardian in respect of the care and custody and control of the child are suspended.

I note that in the whole of this bill there is nothing about the responsibility of the parents. I frankly believe that the root cause, as we have talked about it before, of many a child who goes into an institution is right on the shoulders of the parents themselves. I think we are ignoring this point, Mr. Chairman.

I know we have discussed it and said some effort has been made, but it is really a sickening thing to see a number of young children, particularly about the age of seven, which was mentioned before, in institutions. When you look at the home you recognize that it is the parents who are really at fault and are guilty.

I think of my own experience, and I can go into case after case where young people have been put into institutions and when you went to look at the home life you find that the parents are at fault. In one case I remember a child would be sent out to get them fresh flowers from the park. The child would steal the flowers and come and put them on the kitchen table. The parents did not go to jail. It was the child who was sent to an institution.

I would hope that you would take that situation into account by putting the age at 12 to 16 and that you are hoping that the federal Juvenile Delinquents Act may shed some light on the system and bring about a new approach, a new inspiration and that we will not send children, at the age of seven, into institutions.

Similarly, I had hoped that under The Juvenile Delinquents Act—which does have a clause suggesting that someone who has contributed to juvenile delinquency is liable to a $500 fine or a term in prison—I had hoped that you might put in your subsection 2, and this would be an addition to it, the authority by which, if required by the judge, the parents will have to report regularly to an accepted family counselling agency.

As far as I am concerned I would really like to see, in the treatment of the situation in which a child has gone into an institution, a new focus placed on the parents. I would like to see, through some mention of this in your legislation, some encouragement to magistrates so that they would suggest to the parents of a child, particularly if the magistrate thinks that the parents are delinquent in their responsibility, that they have got to report for some kind of family counselling regularly and they have got to improve their situation so that when the child comes out there is an improved home situation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I concur wholeheartedly in the theory that parents who are in fact responsible for these conditions should be made to pay a penalty, if in fact you can make them pay a penalty.

Mr. Thompson: Something constructive!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes; but it seems to me, and I am not a lawyer—I know the hon. member for Scarborough West can say this is a good reason to send it to a committee and get the lawyers' views—it seems to me that under the criminal code or The Juvenile Delinquents Act, the judge still has that authority. We are dealing here only with the method of admitting to a training school. It has nothing to do with the penalties imposed by a judge on anyone for contributing to juvenile delinquency or anything of that nature.

It seems to me the lawyers in the House can probably give better advice in this respect than I can. The judge still retains that authority and, in fact, is probably doing precisely that in some instances.

Mr. Thompson: I am really just standing up to re-emphasize my point of treatment. The whole purpose of your institution is for the treatment of the child so that he will come out a more mature and responsible child. I am suggesting that when we get this first opportunity for some discussion of the parents—we talk about the fact that the rights and duties of the child's parents will be taken away from the parents and given to another guardian. I would like to see an overall emphasis placed, because it is you who are treating the child in an institution and you who are giving authority by which the child will be placed in the institution, and at some point you, the Minister, will mention treating the parents, because I think they need as much treatment as anyone.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not within the purview—

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister is saying it is not under his purview—this matter of getting the age of seven raised to 12; but by suggestion or by hope or something—I do not know how the hon. Minister is doing it—he at least might move it up to 12.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The way we are accomplishing that is by merely providing the requirements for admission to a training school. Now, how the hon. leader of the Opposition's suggestion could be brought into this, I really cannot say.

I can appreciate what he is trying to do.

He thinks that in some way or other we could emphasize this, if only for the purpose of sending a message to Ottawa. It would be a good thing but I do not think it can be incorporated in this particular Act. It does not belong in The Training Schools Act, in my view.

Mr. Thompson: If I could just once again read this to the hon. Minister.

During the period that a child is a ward of the training school, the rights and duties of the child's parents or any other guardian in respect of the care and custody and control of the child are suspended—

The hon. Minister is obviously taking away something in respect to the parents. I am suggesting, that as well as taking something away, the hon. Minister should suggest some kind of treatment which the judge might have the authority to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think we had better discuss this with our lawyers. I do not think—

Mr. Thompson: Fine. I raised it for the consideration of the hon. Minister.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on the first portion of section 23, subsection 1:

Upon admission to a training school, a child becomes a ward of the training school.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister would wish, and is apt to invoke, the most up-to-date thinking possible in this field. I point out to him that recommendation number 1, of the report of the advisory committee on child welfare to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, reads as follows:

That the Crown in right of Ontario be designated as the legal guardian of children who are permanently removed by the courts from the custody and control of their parents.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that his Act be amended to align itself with that principle. Within the context of this Act, other various groups can come together to set up a training school; and that wardship, if extended, should be extended to the Crown in right of Ontario. That will make this legislation coincident with the likely amendments to The Child Welfare Act which we will receive after Easter, and to the most advanced thinking on the subject as a whole.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course I take it that, in effect, the superintendent of a training school is acting for the Crown anyway. As to the hon. member's suggestion of a new group coming in, no new group can come in, without the approval of the department, and establish a training school under this Act. It has to have the approval of our department; and, presumably, if they were not the kind of responsible people who could be entrusted with this sort of guardianship, we would not approve their operating a training school.

Insofar as what is presumed to be in a new child welfare Act, or amendments to The Child Welfare Act, is concerned, if, in fact, such legislation is brought forward and this legislation does not appear to be in conformity with it, we will make the necessary change. But this appears to be the best way, insofar as the administration of a training school is concerned. We have to give the superintendent certain authority, which he requires, for the proper administration of the school itself.

Mr. S. Lewis: I respect that. I suggest to the hon. Minister that, in fact—assuming that the recommendations of the child welfare committee mean anything—his Act will have to be again subsequently amended. And I think that establishing now the principle of the equality of facilities via Crown guardianship is good.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There does not appear to be any contradiction between this and the Crown becoming the guardian of the child.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, in subsection 3 the hon. Minister may at any time after the release of a child from a training school, order that the wardship of the training school shall cease. I wonder why the hon. Minister did not include here the words "or a judge" after the word "Minister." To get the child into the training school and under the wardship, the county court judge or judge has to take action; and then later, in section 28 (d), prescribing conditions under which children may leave the training school, it seems to be far better to put it here under regulations than to prescribe that the judge himself may have the final word. This allows an appeal from the Minister, and it seems to me it is using the same technique in getting the child finally discharged as when the child went in.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, do I understand the hon. member to suggest that every youngster who is released from a training school, before the department releases wardship of that child, should go back to court?

Mr. Young: The parents may want to get the wardship back before the Minister may, in effect, be willing to grant it. This allows a final appeal to the court if the people concerned with the child may wish it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That would not be practical in the first place. We would hope by that time that all thought of the juvenile court, and all the things that preceded the youngster going into the training school, will have been forgotten. He is out on placement, either to his own home—and if it is the kind of a parent who is really that anxious to have a child at home, and if it is the kind of home the child should go back to, this is in effect to where the child will be released. And I cannot conceive of the kind of situation to which the hon. member is referring.

Certainly, unless there is a practical reason for it, I cannot see the point of it, really.

Sections 23 to 25, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 26:

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I move that subsection 1 of section 26 be amended by striking out the word "the" in the fourth line and inserting, in lieu thereof, the letter "a." Actually this is to correct a typographical error in the original printing.

Section 26, as amended, agreed to.

Section 27 agreed to.

On section 28:

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I know the short word I am about to utter is doubtlessly futile. But much of politics is made up of futility and I shall utter it anyway.

I believe that Acts such as this are drastically undermined in the eyes of many hon. members by the lack of specification, by confining all the substance and the meat of the Act to regulations. This is true of much of our legislation under The Department of Public Welfare, and it has become true within The Department of Reform Institutions. I say to the hon. Minister opposite that the vagary enunciated here cannot possibly make hon. members confident that the kind of regulations we might have will fulfil the spirit of the Act. Too often the regulations countermand the spirit of the Act.

I think it would be important to spell out, within the confines of the Act, how the hon. Minister expects these training schools to be run. It is not too much for members to ask, within the context of the Act itself, which schools will have an academic emphasis, which schools will have vocational emphasis, what the likely treatment complement is going to be, what the philosophy about detention is likely to be—in other words, some coherent and systematic approach to the way in which the Act is to be administered.

Instead, when the regulations emerge, we may find that all the high-sounding phrases in sections 8 and 9 cannot, in fact, be fulfilled. I remind the hon. Minister that, in The Department of Public Welfare, in such Acts as The Children's Institutions Act and The Charitable Institutions Act and The Homemakers Act, the regulations frequently defeat the intent of the principle. I appeal to him that in future bills within his department, this Legislature be given a more specific lead as to what his intentions are. I simply make that observation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to add to that observation. The hon. member's speech almost sounds like a speech I made as a private member. Perhaps I should not be saying this but I must, in all honesty, say that as a private member this was the way I felt; and, as a Minister, I try to incorporate this philosophy in legislation, but in all honesty it is impossible to do. If we were going to bring forward regulations today for the operation of the training schools—and, quite frankly, we are not ready for it anyway, we would have to wait until the session was over and waste another year, or lose another year—even if they were ready they would be so voluminous and so detailed that we would be sitting here for a week just discussing the regulations. So, while I agree in principle, I think principle is one thing and practicability is another.

Mr. S. Lewis: I just wanted to add that no one is suggesting that the hon. Minister bring in all the regulations. He appreciates that. It is an effective debating point, but it does not persuade me.

I know he is not expected to bring in all the forms which have to be filled, and I do not expect them to be subject to debate in this House. I do expect that, in legislation fundamental as this, some greater area of specification be made; just a little more, so that the members will have some idea about treatment, about detention, about educational courses—no precise stipulation, but at least something from which to operate—because at the moment we have no idea at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I do not think these should be in the regulations anyway. It should be a matter of policy.

Mr. S. Lewis: Then, if it is a matter of policy I would suggest the bill as a matter of policy should embody it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perhaps we should have discussed it. I think we did when we were discussing the principle.

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe we should discuss it in the committee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It will not meet.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I have always felt that if the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions would spend more time reading some of the speeches he made when he was a private member he would be a better Minister. I appreciate that there are difficulties in incorporating in a statute all the details that one puts in regulations, but this question of regulations is really getting beyond all reason, not merely in this jurisdiction, but in all jurisdictions. It is a matter of concern in most jurisdictions.

The Legislature actually does not do much legislating at all. It passes a few bills that Ministers bring in, which they often will not allow to go to standing committees, and most of the real legislative authority is delegated to somebody else, so that the Legislature in fact does not know what happens in the field. I would think this is a matter that would be of concern to the government.

I would suggest to this hon. Minister that he pursue the idea with his colleagues; one way of getting around the difficulty is to have a committee similar to the select committee on statutory instruments in Great Britain, and similar to a committee that now exists in Manitoba and has existed since about 1962.

This, sir, would be a committee of this House that would review legislation passed under statutory authority by way of regulation, so that there would at least be a group in the Legislature that would have to make it its business to keep track of what is being done under the authority granted by this Legislature, and which would be in a position to report back if it thought that the authority was being improperly exercised. As my hon. friend from Scarborough West has pointed out, there is a widespread feeling that the real intent of some quite worthy statutes is defeated in regulations, and I think there should be a regular procedure for reviewing all regulations passed under authority of—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member want me to put that into this Act?

Mr. Bryden: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member want me to incorporate it in this bill?

Mr. Bryden: I am just reminding the hon. Minister that he has said that he agrees there is a problem—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am always conscious of it. I am always conscious of it.

Mr. Bryden: If he is always conscious of it I would suggest that he start talking to some of his other colleagues and make them conscious of it—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And so are they.

Mr. Bryden: —and perhaps we can get a change in direction in government policy and have some sort of rational way of dealing with this great mass of legislation that is passed and never comes before this Legislature at all.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, there is one further question I would like to ask the hon. Minister. Is there any reason why, under the regulation, no mention is made of the matter of visitors to the children in the institution? Certainly I can understand that perhaps it might be best for the parents not to have the right to come in when and if they wish, but if there is no mention in the regulations of visits to the inmates of the institution then is there any legal right for anyone to see the child at any time? Should this not be at least mentioned within the regulations themselves?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member can rest assured that one of the most important factors in treating the youngsters in our school is to try to get the families to come and see them as often as possible. It would be in the regulations, of course, I suppose, insofar as hours are concerned and so on. The hon. member may rest assured this is not only condoned, it is encouraged, and this is what we are trying to do at all times.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, let me assure the hon. members that there will be nothing in the regulations which will be contradictory to the spirit of the bill itself. They can rest assured on this point.

Section 28 agreed to.

Sections 29 to 31, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 25 reported.

THE ONTARIO HUMAN RIGHTS CODE, 1961-1962

House in committee on Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Ontario Human Rights Code, 1961-1962.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, in the matter of section 2, we have discussed this matter at some length on second reading and I do not intend to go into this whole section once again, because what we have had to say has been said.

But, Mr. Chairman, I did want to move an amendment to this section and it is for this reason: Section 2 as it is now before this committee, says:

We shall not deny to any person or class of persons, occupancy of any commercial unit or any apartment in any building that contains more than three self-contained dwelling units.

It is this matter of the three self-contained dwelling units, or section (b) where it refers again to three self-contained dwelling units, that I want to discuss.

When this bill was before the House in another sitting of the Legislature, the number was reduced to six, and now we are reduced to three. We are supporting this bill in principle because we felt that half a loaf is better than none, but we are obviously moving toward the situation piecemeal, step by step, in doing away with discrimination in this province, and for the life of me, Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why a government does not wipe away discrimination once and for all—why it has to do it in this matter of just moving bit by bit. It is so obvious that public opinion, and literally world opinion, is coming to judge individuals as individuals regardless of their creed or colour or anything else, but rather by what is the worth of the person, and this is the basic principle that we in this House should be guided by.

There are other jurisdictions in the world that have not moved as far as we have, and there are some that have moved further, but it is a duty incumbent upon government to lead the way. I will be the first to admit that prejudice is not voted away. Prejudice is something that has been ingrained from generation to generation and it is only a matter of good practice and open minds that is really going to bring about that happy day when we wipe away bigotry and prejudice for good. But at the same time, in our legislation, especially when it is called The Ontario Human Rights Code, we should not have such an offensive section as we have in this section 2, for we are literally still allowing discrimination and prejudice to exist in the province of Ontario.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I wish to move an amendment to section 2, which would be as follows:

(a) deny to any person or class of persons, occupancy of any commercial unit or any apartment in any building, and (b) discriminate against any person or class of persons with respect to any term or condition of occupancy of any commercial unit or any apartment in any building.

With this amendment, and I do hope that the government will see fit to vote in support of it, this House can go a long way in showing that the province of Ontario, the banner province of the Dominion of Canada, is against discrimination of any kind, in any form, and certainly we are going a long way in helping to educate not only the people of Ontario and Canada, but throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes are 23, the nays 65.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Section 2 agreed to.

Sections 3 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 30 reported.

THE OPERATING ENGINEERS ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 35, The Operating Engineers Act, 1965.

Sections 1 to 23, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 24:

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, on section 24, subsection 1 (j), I would think that this section is not necessary. If we read subsection 1 of section 24, the board:

—may cancel or suspend a certificate of qualification if the operating engineer or operator—and then (j) says:

—leaves the employ of his employer without having given his employer at least seven days' notice in writing of his intention to leave—

Mr. Chairman, there is no place in the Act or in the section that gives the employee that kind of protection, in as much as if the employer wants to dispense with an operator's services he has to give him seven days' notice.

There are sections of the Act that gives adequate protection in regard to safety for the coverage of the job. If we turn to section 19, it provides for absences due to sickness or holidays, in which case the employer can cover the job with an operator with a lesser qualification or certificate.

There is also coverage in section 20 for temporary absences, and the whole of those sections relates to the safety angle of the Act, and to having the equipment covered by a certified engineer while it is in operation. Therefore, I do not think it needs to go as far as to demand that if an employee is going to sever his employment that he must give seven days' notice. This could be a hardship on an employee. In the case where he is offered, all of a sudden, a better-paying job, and the offer demands that he be there in a couple of days or almost immediately, he could not fulfill those stipulations.

If we turn to section 28, it also makes provisions for the engineer being absent for certain reasons. He has to cover his job by notification to the chief engineer or the chief operator on the shift in which he is working. The purpose of these sections, as I have said, is to make sure that the equipment is covered with an operator. I feel sure that all those other sections cover this situation adequately without subsection (j) being in there, where it relates to seven days' notice on the termination of employment. Therefore, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Woodbine, that clause (j) of section 24, subsection 1, be deleted.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I spoke on this bill, when they had that big gathering in here because there were too many of those engineers to contend with in that one room, if you will recall.

Mr. Chairman: Are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Bukator: I am speaking to the amendment, yes. As a matter of fact I moved the resolution, at that time, that all the subsections from (a) to (1) be amended, or deleted, except subsections 2 and 3.

What I do not like about the bill is that most professional men who have jobs today are not bound by a set of rules other than the ethics of that particular profession. And when you spell out, in this particular section, the conditions under which a professional engineer has to conduct himself, I think you are taking away some of the privileges of an individual who has certain rights; and I do believe that a man can be fired at any time if he is not doing the job correctly. The thing I do not like about the bill is the fact that "the board may cancel or suspend a certificate of qualification if the operating engineer or operator (a) is habitually intemperate in his use of alcoholic beverages or is addicted to the use of drugs."

In the first instance, no one would hire a man like that; and if he were hired and they found out, shortly after, what he was, I think they would discharge that man. And you spell out in, "(b) operates a plant when his ability to do so is impaired by alcohol or a drug"; again, that man certainly would not be maintained too long by any particular group if he were found to be a drug addict or an alcoholic. It does not take too long to find out whether or not a man is drunk. So I do not think these conditions should be spelled out.

Now, about: "(c) is declared to be mentally incompetent or becomes physically incapable of safely performing his duties"—and this goes on right down to (1)—I cannot understand why these sections have to be in here; because if he is a professional engineer, or an operating engineer who knows his business, but is either mentally ill or not capable physically, or has these habits he should not have, then the man could be fired anyhow. And I do not believe that this should be spelled out in this particular bill. That is why I support the amendment.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in support of the amendment but not on the same broad terms as the hon. member for Niagara Falls. I believe that it is legitimate to provide, in the statute, certain conditions, where safety may be imperilled, under which an operating engineer's licence may be suspended or cancelled. I think that is reasonable; but the specific clause to which the amendment is directed does not fall in that category at all. It merely provides that a man's certificate could be cancelled or suspended if he, in effect, violates The Masters and Servants Act, if he leaves his employment without giving due notice.

There is a remedy for that under The Masters and Servants Act, and the remedy is equally applicable to employers and employees; the employee is also entitled to certain notice under the general law of the province and he is required to give certain notice. That matter surely can still be left to regulation by The Masters and Servants

Act, but there is no valid reason for the additional and very harsh penalty of cancelling a man's certificate and thus depriving him of his ability to carry on the occupation for which he is trained, merely because he has failed to give seven days' notice. This does not affect safety at all.

As the hon. member for Wentworth East has pointed out, the safety factor is already covered by clause (i), which provides that a man's certificate may be cancelled or suspended if he fails to give the notice required by section 28. Section 28 provides, in effect, that if an operating engineer or operator knows that he is not going to be on the job to look after the boiler he has to notify his chief engineer. If he fails to notify him, then he could have his certificate cancelled. That is fair enough; if he just let a boiler go unattended for an entire shift, when the law requires that it must be attended, in my opinion that would be a just cause for disciplinary action—either suspension or cancellation of the certificate under the Act.

But surely the matter of giving seven days' notice is a civil matter, between the employer and the employee; let the employer, if he feels he has been adversely affected by the failure of the employee to give seven days' notice, follow the ordinary provisions available to every employer under the law—and, also, the provisions which are available to every employee. The inclusion of clause (j) in this subsection as it stands, is giving a weapon that is quite unnecessary and quite illegitimate to an employer who may wish to use it against an employee with whom he has had some difficulty. As I have pointed out, it is not necessary for safety; the safety factor is already well covered by the subsection; therefore, I do not see any reason why it should be in. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should accept the amendment. If he is not prepared to accept it, I would appreciate it if he would explain why not, because I cannot see any reason at all for leaving clause (j) in subsection (1) of section 24.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept the amendment and I urge the hon. members of the House, and of the committee, not to accept it.

This is not a situation which can be described as a master and servant relationship. This is entirely a matter of safety.

Mr. Bryden: Clause (i) covers safety.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just a moment now; (i) refers to some offences in section 28, to do with leaving the equipment unattended, in effect. That is the general area of it.

I take it, from the debate, that it is assumed that there will be an operating engineer available around the corner, or within five or ten minutes, to take the place of the departed man. This is not the case. It might be the case in a built-up industrial area but it is certainly not the case, in general, across the province as a whole. I point out to the House that this Operating Engineers' Act—one of the things about which inquiries have been made to me—has to do with the status and the privilege of holding an operating engineer's certificate. And I have given my assurance that the status of persons holding an operating engineer's certificate would not be disturbed. It is important to these people that this status factor—and it is a legitimate one—be maintained. But by the same token, if there is a status and a privilege in holding a certificate, then there is a responsibility that goes with that certificate. And this applies in other areas, with respect to certain offences which do not meet a standard of conduct. Others holding certificates are subject to having their certificates suspended, whether it be a lawyer or a doctor or what it may be.

I urge that these matters be left as they are. I think that item (j), which is the test area that has been selected, is a reasonable thing. It is not a question of an employer vis-à-vis an employed engineer; it is a question of the care being given on a continuous basis, or against an undertaking to take care of it in the course of discharging duties under the certificate of an operating engineer. I think that this is a reasonable thing and I ask the House not to support the amendment now.

But the significant thing about the points made by the hon. member for Woodbine is that here we have the matter spelled out in detail, and on a previous bill, just a few moments ago, The Training Schools Act, complaint was made that the Opposition wanted them spelled out. Here in this Act, they are spelled out. I say everything is on the table, everything is declared, and yet the hon. member is against this. I would think the hon. member would want to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if the hon. Minister is just deliberately trying to confuse issues—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not at all.

Mr. Bryden: I certainly took the position that as far as possible matters should be spelled out in legislation and I stand by that position, but it does not follow that if they are wrong we should vote in favour of them merely because they have been spelled out. I am suggesting to him here that he is completely off the beam in the argument he put up.

He made some comment to the effect that (j) had been selected as a test or something like that. I do not know what he meant by that but if he is suggesting that either the hon. member for Wentworth East or myself, as the seconder, was using this as a test to object to the whole of subsection 1 of section 24, he is quite wrong. We agree with the other provisions of that subsection; we just believe that this particular provision is out of place. The matter at issue, as the hon. Minister has said, is safety. The matter for which the extreme penalty of loss of licence should apply should only be if an operator leaves a boiler unattended, or leaves the employ under such circumstances—if you want to put it that way—that the boiler will be unattended. But it certainly does not automatically follow that a boiler will be unattended merely because an employee has given less than seven days' notice. That does not follow at all.

I am suggesting to the hon. Minister that the extreme penalty that is provided in this section therefore should not apply except where safety is at stake, and it should be very clearly worded that it is only where safety is at stake that this penalty can be imposed.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just let me clear up one point. It is not a case of selecting an arbitrary position of a case where safety exists or does not exist; in every case that would be considered where this might apply. Safety is a factor, because an engineer with a certificate is involved and obviously required to supervise that equipment. Therefore, safety is a factor in every case.

Mr. Bryden: Just a second. Safety is a factor if the boiler is unattended and it does not automatically follow from the failure to give seven days' notice that a boiler will be unattended. If, because of some act of the operator, the boiler is unattended, then I say that he should be subject to the penalty, but this is much broader than that. I think I was quite right in suggesting that it is putting on an additional and very harsh penalty to enforce The Masters and Servants Act. The employee has no similar redress against the employer—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is not a matter of a master and servant relationship, it is a matter of securing the services of a man with a certificate to supervise boiler rooms.

Mr. Bryden: I tried to suggest to the hon. Minister that by the way he has worded it, he has brought it into the area of The Masters and Servants Act.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not at all.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister certainly has, because there can certainly be many cases where, even without seven days' notice, arrangements could be made for the boiler to be attended.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member did not read the opening sentence of the section.

Mr. Bryden: I did.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is not a mandatory suspension; it says "may" and where "may" exists it means you automatically take into account all of the circumstances—

Mr. Bryden: But it still gives the board the power to act in an arbitrary way. I am tired of hearing Ministers of the Crown come forward and say that certain arbitrary provisions in the law are matters that should not concern us because we can rely upon the administrators to be fair and reasonable. I believe that, by and large, administrators are fair and reasonable, but I also know of cases where administrators have not been fair and reasonable. I think we should be very careful when we define the powers that we give any board or other agency, and we should define them specifically to meet the situation and nothing more.

As the matter stands now, the board in this particular case is given far more power than it needs to ensure safety in the operation of boilers. I believe that there are fundamental civil rights involved here, that this should be defined much more clearly than it is at the moment. The hon. Minister may have a point in suggesting that (j) should not be struck out altogether. If that is so I would be prepared to listen to his point, but I believe he should redefine it to make it clear that it is applicable, and that the power may be exercised only when safety is in danger because a boiler was left unattended through the actions of an employee.

I think that is a fair proposition in protection of basic civil rights of individuals. After all, it is a pretty serious matter for a man who has spent years acquiring the skills of a stationary engineer, to be faced with the loss of his licence. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that we should be very careful in spelling out the conditions under which he can be deprived of that right, which he acquired so arduously.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the hon. Minister? I would like to make it clear in my own mind. I do not want to try to put words in the hon. Minister's mouth because I am not capable of that, but I recall that when we discussed section 24, he was going to take this particular section under advisement with his department heads, or take another look at it, I think that is the expression he used. Has the hon. Minister done this, Mr. Chairman, and decided to leave well enough alone?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: At the committee meeting—and I think the hon. member for Niagara Falls was one of those who raised the point—I undertook to take this matter under advisement and review it. I have done this in some detail and I am satisfied, for instance, that seven days is at least a reasonable period. It is not unreasonable to ask for seven days' notice; most of these people are paid by the week, and the law itself requires notice equivalent to the pay period. I think that seven days is the minimum. I would not think of anything more than this seven days; but, in all the circumstances, and having in mind the explosions which have taken place, and having in mind the possibility of a shortage of skilled engineers—qualified engineers—I am unable to recommend a change.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I still have a word to say on this. I do not think that the hon. Minister has given any logical reason to have that restriction in there; and I do not think, if he approached most of the responsible employers who have industries which need these types of employees, that they would insist that they wanted that kind of coverage. Most of the industries have trainees—back-up people on every shift; and if you take Stelco or Westinghouse or Firestone, they have people booking off every night, telephoning in and saying that they are sick, or that they have had too much to drink, and should not report to work that night. They cover the jobs because they have prepared for them.

After all, in this Act, and such an important piece of legislation in regard to safety, the employer has some responsibility. All the responsibility cannot be laid on the shoulders of the engineers. If it is so important that these jobs should be covered then, in some instances, the employer must be responsible for covering his jobs in case of this sort of situation. He has to cover them for vacations, well in advance; he has to have people there to look after sickness. If a man dies on the street, they just do not pick another one out of the air and put him on the job.

This restriction is on the employee who might want to leave, without giving seven days' notice, to go to another job; and there is no reason why it should be in there. There is ample protection; and if there is not, then something should be put in there to put the responsibility on the employer to cover his jobs.

Mr. Chairman: Moved by Mr. Gisborn, seconded by Mr. Bryden, that clause (j) of section 24, subsection 1, be deleted.

All those in favour of the amendment please say "aye."

All those opposed please say "nay."

I declare the "nays" have it.

Section 24 agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

No. 75

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, April 13, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

Price per session $3.00. Address, Clerk of the House, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, April 13, 1965

Settlement by arbitration of labour disputes in hospitals, bill to provide for, reported	2215
Mining Act, bill to amend, reported	2215
Trustee Act, bill to amend, reported	2215
Proceedings Against the Crown Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, reported	2215
Coroners Act, bill to amend, reported	2215
Public Hospitals Act, bill to amend, reported	2215
Community Centres Act, bill to amend, reported	2216
Resolution re Bill No. 80, concurred in	2216
Legislative Assembly Act, bill to amend, reported	2216
Junior Farmer Establishment Act, bill to amend, reported	2216
Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, bill to amend, reported	2216
Brucellosis Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	2216
Live Stock Community Sales Act, bill to amend, reported	2218
Corporations Act, bill to amend, reported	2219
County of Peel, bill respecting, reported	2219
Loan and Trust Corporations Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2219
Estimates, Department of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Simonett, continued	2219
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2244

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

THE OPERATING ENGINEERS ACT, 1965

(continued)

Sections 25 to 37, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 35 reported.

LABOUR DISPUTES IN HOSPITALS

House in committee on Bill No. 41, An Act to provide for the settlement by arbitration of labour disputes in hospitals.

Sections 1 to 16, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 41 reported.

THE MINING ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 42, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Sections 1 to 13, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 42 reported.

THE TRUSTEE ACT,

House in committee on Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Bill No. 70 reported.

THE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE CROWN ACT, 1962-1963

House in committee on Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Proceedings Against the Crown Act, 1962-1963.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): I move that the bill be amended, Mr. Chairman, by renumbering sections 3 and 4 as sections 4 and 5, respectively, and by adding thereto the following section 3:

Section 19 of The Proceedings Against the Crown Act, 1962-1963 is repealed.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What is the section that is being repealed?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The section being repealed is replaced by one of the sections in the new Act.

New section 3 agreed to.

Section 4, formerly section 3, agreed to.

Section 5, formerly section 4, agreed to.

Bill No. 71 reported.

THE CORONERS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 72, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Sections 1 to 18, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 72 reported.

THE PUBLIC HOSPITALS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 76, An Act to amend The Public Hospitals Act.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 5:

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, I move that the proposed section 36 be struck out and the following substituted:

Where the privileges of any member of the medical staff are restricted or cancelled for any reason by specific resolution of the board of governors or where any disciplinary action is taken by a board or medical advisory committee against a member of the medical staff because of incompetence, negligence, or any form of professional misconduct, the administrator shall forward a report of the action and the reason for it to the college of physicians and surgeons of Ontario.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 6 to 7 agreed to.

Bill No. 76 reported.

THE COMMUNITY CENTRES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 78, An Act to amend The Community Centres Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 78 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor recommends the following:

That,

(a) an indemnity at the rate of $8,000 per annum shall be paid to every member of the assembly;

(b) an allowance for expenses at the rate of $3,000 per annum shall be paid to every member of the assembly representing an electoral district within the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and at the rate of $4,000 per annum for every member representing any other electoral district; and

(c) there shall be allowed to each member of the assembly in respect of fifteen trips per annum from his place of residence to the seat of government at Toronto ten cents for every mile of the distance between his place of residence to Toronto and return, which distance shall be determined and certified by the Speaker, as provided by Bill No. 80, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Resolution concurred in.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 80, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 80 reported.

THE JUNIOR FARMER ESTABLISHMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 82, An Act to amend The Junior Farmer Establishment Act.

Sections 1 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 82 reported.

THE MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT CLAIMS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 86, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 86 reported.

THE BRUCELLOSIS ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 91, The Brucellosis Act, 1965.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, with regard to this section, I would ask the hon. Minister if he feels at this time that the main reason for removing the compulsory aspects of the previous bill is that the disease is now under complete control?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, there are many reasons for this, and that is one of them; but I would say that the chief reason for it is the fact that the federal government feels that the brucellosis disease is sufficiently under control in Canada that a brucellosis-free area can now be declared across the nation and, as such, the compulsory aspect of vaccination need not be adhered to.

I would point out to the hon. members of the House, Mr. Chairman, that if anyone wishes to vaccinate their female calves in Ontario the cost will be paid for, and it will be done by a veterinarian registered and certified under this Act to do such work. Previously any veterinarian could vaccinate calves and they could charge it through The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Nixon: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. Minister concurs with the federal view that Canada is now a brucellosis-free area, he would be considering removing the support of the government for the vaccination procedures. I do not really understand why, if the hon. Minister agrees that Canada is now a brucellosis-free area, he should continue supporting this. In my view, I hope that it will be continued because I think that the hon. Minister and his counterpart, federally, are very optimistic in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am glad to know that my hon. friend thinks that my counterpart in Ottawa and I get along so well together that we are—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): If they do not, it certainly will not be the hon. Minister's fault.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Of course, it could not be otherwise—I am the soul of good-naturedness, really.

The reason we are continuing the vaccination programme, and paying for it on a voluntary basis for those who wish to vaccinate their female calves, is that there are many countries which will not accept animals unless they are vaccinated because they are not brucellosis-free areas as is ours; so, for export purposes, an animal must be vaccinated to go into most countries. As you know, Canada, and Ontario in particular, enjoys a wonderful reputation as to the health standards of our livestock and we want to maintain that; so we are paying the costs of the vaccination of female calves for all who want to have it.

Mr. Nixon: At the risk of running the hon. Minister's voice down farther, I would ask him if he and his department are recommending to the farmers of Ontario that their livestock be vaccinated.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say to those who are maintaining breeding herds that it would be a good idea to keep vaccinating them. The problem has been in the past that a great many female calves are brought into Ontario—beef calves for feeder purposes—and the fact is that we have been paying for the vaccination of those calves which were never intended to be used for breeding purposes. They went directly to the slaughterhouse and it was, to my mind, a waste of money—and I thought this from the start. This is one way, I think, we can accomplish the purpose for which the Act was intended and still save a considerable amount of money, and a good deal of trouble, for those farmers who brought feeder cattle in and had to have them vaccinated; as well as for a great many other farmers who raise cattle of their own, who have no notion of keeping the female stock for breeding purposes, and are just raising them for beef purposes. To me it was just a waste of time to have those calves vaccinated.

I think we will accomplish what my hon. friend feels must be done, and that is protect the health standards of our livestock—and, indeed, the health standards of the people because we know that brucellosis has been the source of undulant fever in many instances. This is one of the reasons why we believe that we should do everything we can to keep the disease under control; but, once it has been brought under control and the province declared a brucellosis-free area, surely we do not have to go on spending money and doing things that are not apparently and obviously necessary.

Mr. Nixon: Can the hon. Minister tell me when the testing procedures were completed in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I cannot tell the hon. member the exact date. I was invited by my counterpart at Ottawa, the hon. Mr. Hayes, to go with him to participate in the final blood testing of the last cow in northern Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: Since Christmas?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, no. It was months ago; it was sometime last summer—or last fall.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to inform the hon. Minister that many of the herds in Brant county have been tested since Christmas on a full herd scale; and it seems to me that, regardless of what the federal declaration has been, the hon. Minister may be acting precipitately in removing the necessity for vaccinating calves which are going into milk production. Everything does not have to be thrown out with the dishwater—but it might very well have been, if the hon. Minister had considered this.

Nevertheless, I would bow to the advice that he has received and I would sincerely hope that the future of the industry is in no way put in jeopardy because of his action.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I concur, Mr. Chairman; but thorough consideration has been given to these very points, and they have been thoroughly discussed. We feel that, certainly, any farmer who is interested in maintaining a healthy standard in his herd is going to continue to vaccinate. The reason we have—

Mr. Nixon: That farmer's neighbour might not.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, he should if he is not doing so.

Mr. Nixon: That is why you have made it obligatory.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It may well be, but I think we have to recognize that there is some responsibility on the individual. Surely to goodness, if the farmer is offered the service free of charge he will take that service, if he has any respect for his livestock and wants to have them vaccinated for sale purposes, if for no other reason. I cannot see any reason why it should be necessary for us to vaccinate every female in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Every milking female; now there is a difference.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not think there is any need for that whatever.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has received any representations, from organizations across the province, regarding this bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I cannot recall any. I cannot recall having received anything objecting to this. No, I cannot say that I have. I know that I announced that we were considering doing this at at least two or three conventions which I attended, and I have never heard a word of criticism from anyone other than what I have heard across the floor of the House.

Mr. Nixon: And you can say that you had no misgivings about this Act whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say that I had some misgivings when it was first presented to me. The points were brought up first by the hon. member for Grey South, then the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) raised them on second reading, and then the hon. member for Brant raised them now.

I must confess that I looked into these very aspects of it when it was first suggested to us that this be done or that we repeal this Act as far as the compulsory aspect was concerned. My mind was set at ease as far as the standards being maintained. I think when one recognizes the fact that some female stock that has been sold, as I pointed out the other day, has been denied the right of export because it showed positive or doubtful in the blood test prior to export, it was a clear indication to us that all, even in the compulsion, left something to be desired.

I think that we should go along with this and try it. Frankly, I do not think there is any real danger but I can assure you that if there is we shall have to implement the thing on a compulsory basis again. I feel sure that everything is all right; I would not want it to be otherwise, I can assure you.

Section 3 agreed to.

Sections 4 to 15, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 91 reported.

THE LIVE STOCK COMMUNITY SALES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 92, An Act to amend The Live Stock Community Sales Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell the House under what authority the inspectors have been appointed until now.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The inspectors, I must say, have not been appointed with the full sanction and authority of the House. One of the things we noticed was that there was no real legislative authority for the appointment. They have been appointed and have acted all the time under order-in-council, but this is a statutory order.

Mr. Nixon: When were the first inspectors appointed to inspect the livestock sales?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: When were they appointed?

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I could not say how long ago it is, quite frankly.

Mr. Nixon: They have been in operation a long time?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, yes, that is right.

Mr. Nixon: I think you should have let sleeping dogs lie.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Perhaps, but you see, with great respect to my friends in the legal fraternity, when they find something like this, they come along and say: "Now, look, you had better clean this thing up"—

Mr. Nixon: Too bad you did not find it first.

Hon. Mr. Stewart:—and I am always ready to go along with my legal friends.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Is there any statute that says an inspector has to inspect the community livestock sales barn at a stipulated time?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not think there is anything rigid about it. I think he is supposed to be there at the time the cattle are coming in to the sale or at some time during the sale, but as to whether he has to be right there on the job all the time, I am not too sure. Are you referring to the clean-ups such as between sales, or something like this?

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, I was wondering about the clean-ups between sales. I thought that perhaps the inspectors would be required to be there at that time.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think there is a requirement that they have to clean up after every sale, as I understand it, but I cannot tell you whether the inspector has to go back the next day or the day after or at some time. However, he has to be satisfied that everything is cleaned up from that sale because one of the conditions of the licensing of the sale is that it be cleaned up.

Sections 3 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 92 reported.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 93, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 93 reported.

COUNTY OF PEEL

House in committee on Bill No. Pr25, An Act respecting the county of Peel.

Sections 1 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. D. Bales (York Mills): In the absence of the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mackenzie), I move an amendment to section 9, that the Act come into force January 1, 1966.

Section 9, as amended, agreed to.

Section 10 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill No. Pr25 reported.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee rise and report certain resolutions and certain bills and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain resolutions, and certain bills without amendment and certain bills with amendments, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE LOAN AND TRUST CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 95, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 51st order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

(continued)

Vote 604 agreed to.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could skip vote 605 and go on to vote 606?

Vote 606 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to skip votes 608 and 609 and go on to vote 610, under capital disbursements.

Vote 610 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, if we might revert back to vote 605.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that during the consideration of this estimate, it would be an appropriate time to acquaint the Legislature with some of the activities and forward steps that have been taken by the Ontario water resources commission.

Let me preface my remarks by saying that the time I have served on the Ontario water resources commission has been one of the most rewarding experiences I have enjoyed in the years I have given to public service. On the commission itself and on the staff I have found a group of men and women who are keen, alert and dedicated; dedicated to the basic policy of making Ontario a healthier, happier, more prosperous place in which to live, and in which to do business.

In the main, we have had wonderful co-operation from our municipalities and from industry, as we have developed and expanded our programme to bring pollution under control, and to provide safe water to supply the growing needs of a rapidly expanding population, and the greatest industrial expansion we have witnessed in the history of our province. The Ontario water resources commission, in its short life, has played an important part in many phases of our economy, and I am quite convinced from the observations I have made, that as the years go by we will recognize more and more the importance of the work of the commission.

Water is perhaps the most valuable resource we have in the province. When you look at a map of Ontario, you will immediately realize that Ontario is unique. On its borders and within its boundaries lie more fresh-water lakes, rivers and streams than in any similar area anywhere in the world. With water in abundance, it was natural that in the early days the waterways would be the main traffic arteries. With a sparse population and few industries, most of the waters in the lakes, streams and rivers was pure. Since water was in such abundance, and nature has its own way of purifying water if given time, it was the most economical place in which to dispose of waste. For many years this system of waste disposal operated fairly well. But, Mr. Chairman, conditions changed; Ontario grew; its population expanded; the traffic on the waterways became heavier; the forests were cleared away, and water ran off with greater rapidity.

As the population grew and industry expanded, the consumption of water increased, and with increased consumption of water by people, livestock and industry, the quantities of waste also increased, until it was found that many of the waters were no longer able to purify themselves by natural processes. The heavy consumption of water in certain parts of the province led to a scarcity of sufficient quantities of suitable water for all needs.

Mr. Chairman, under the sound policies that have been developed in Ontario, we have witnessed tremendous growth and expansion in all phases of our economy. Since the end of World War II, our population has grown by nearly 2.5 million people. I believe more than half of the new industries that have come to Canada have come to our own province. To provide the necessary foodstuffs that are needed to feed an expanding population, agricultural production has been stepped up. People, industry and agriculture all require great quantities of water of suitable quality.

With these facts in mind, in 1955 the government appointed a special committee to investigate the situation that was developing. On the receipt of the report of this special committee, legislation was introduced, and in 1956, The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act was passed. The commission was appointed, and staff was assembled, and in 1957 the commission began functioning with direction and powers granted by the Legislature under The OWRC Act. There have been amendments to the Act at several sessions of the Legislature, to keep pace with the challenges that have been presented in a rapidly expanding economy. With all of the expansion that was taking place and is taking place in the province, we must keep in mind that there has been little change in the amount of available water in the province. Indeed, in recent years, in some areas of the province, there has been below-normal precipitation, which has aggravated the water supply situation in those particular areas.

Mr. Chairman, the Ontario water resources commission programme is to assist municipalities, people and industry in the development of suitable water supplies, and in the control of pollution wherever pollution may exist. The year 1964 saw an overall expansion in the various activities of the commission as it endeavoured to keep pace with the booming economy, and at the same time pick up the backlog that had developed throughout the years preceding the establishment of the commission. In my remarks at this time, I want to try to give to the Legislature a cross-sectional report of commission activities.

Before I report on the activities of the commission, let me say 1964 was not all sunshine. Early in the year we lost two valuable members from our commission. Mr. A. A. Wishart, QC, was appointed as Attorney General of the province. Our loss was others' gain. In the years I served with Mr. Wishart on the commission I developed a great appreciation of his sound judgment and his dedication to honourable public service. I am sure that Ontario will benefit from the wise administration he gives in the office of Attorney General.

Everyone on the commission who knew Arthur Melville Snider was saddened when, following a brief illness, he passed away on Sunday, June 7. Mr. Snider had been most active in OWRC affairs up to within a few weeks of his passing. Perhaps his dedication to public service, and the active leadership he provided even when his health was failing, may have been factors that hastened his death. However, those who knew Mr. Snider and knew his dedication to public service, are aware that perhaps he would not have had it otherwise.

Mr. Snider was the chairman of the special committee that was set up by the government in 1955. When the commission was established, he became its first chairman, and served in that capacity until his passing. Mr.

Snider gave strong leadership to the commission in its early days, and in the early years when policies were being developed and staff was being organized. Ontario owes much to the dedicated leadership that was given by this great citizen.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should mention at this time that the late Mr. Snider was a grandson of Mr. E. W. B. Snider, of St. Jacobs, who with D. B. Detwiler, preceded Sir Adam Beck in the development and transmission of electric power in Ontario.

Following the loss of Mr. Wishart from the commission to the Attorney General's office, and the passing of Mr. Snider, the commission was reorganized. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council appointed four new members. At the present time, the commission is organized as follows: Dr. James A. Vance, of Woodstock, chairman, a man with wide experience in engineering and construction; Mr. William Conklin, QC, a lawyer and businessman from Kingsville; Mr. Hugh E. Brown, deputy Provincial Treasurer; Mr. D. Aubrey Moodie, reeve of Nepean township, where he has been elected for some 17 years; and Mr. Leo E. Venchiarutti, a prominent architect from Toronto.

Mr. Louis Desmarais, a chartered accountant and member of Sudbury council, has tendered his resignation. During the time he served he was a valuable member of our commission. I have the honour to serve as vice-chairman. I think hon. members of this House will realize that with this cross-section representation, both geographical and vocational, the commission is well balanced at the present time.

The work of the commission is carried out through a number of divisions that operate under the general manager, Mr. Dave Caverly, and the assistant general managers, Mr. George Galimbert and Mr. Len Owers.

Mr. Chairman, when the commission was formed it was forecast that over a 20-year period it would require something like $2.4 billion to overtake the backlog of necessary works that had built up through the years, and to keep pace with the expansion that was projected into the future to provide the necessary water and sewage works. The commission has been operating for something like eight years since the staff was organized and I want to report to the House on what has been accomplished in that period, and in particular, in 1964. As we move into 1965, we are approaching the $1 billion mark. If we were to include the value of the certificates issued by The Department of Health after The OWRC Act was passed and while the commission was being organized, the total value of certificates at the end of 1964 would be approximately $1,050,000,000.

In other words, our programme is running right on schedule. In fact, when you realize that our programme is expanding, perhaps we are even ahead of schedule. Mr. Chairman, to give hon. members some appreciation of the magnitude of the task that confronts the commission, perhaps I should put in the record that we are dealing with some 978 incorporated municipalities, and approximately 1,400 industries. To reach good standards of pollution control, municipalities are required to secure certificates of approval from the Ontario water resources commission for proposed water works and sewage works. In 1964, some 1,668 approval certificates were issued at an estimated value of $134,634,078. Since 1957, some 13,342 certificates have been issued.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should point out at this time some of the larger municipalities, after they have received approval for their proposed works from the OWRC, develop the projects with their own staff. Other municipalities, particularly in the smaller and medium sized municipalities, enter into agreements with the Ontario water resources commission, and we develop the project, construct the system, and operate it for the municipality. In 1964, 100 certificates were issued in this category that had an estimated value of $24,856,136.

At the end of 1964, the OWRC had entered into agreements with 198 municipalities, where some 314 projects had been constructed, were under construction, or were under agreement to construct. At the end of 1964, our division of plant operations was operating some 230 projects for municipalities. These projects included 134 sewage projects, and 96 water projects. Further breakdown indicates that there were 46 treatment plants, 31 sewage lagoons, 57 pumping stations and sewers, this in the sewage field. In the water field, we were operating some 20 water treatment plants, 23 wells, 7 lake intakes, 33 watermains, and 13 storage facilities.

During 1964, 39 projects came under the division of plant operations, namely, 28 sewage and 11 water.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to advise the hon. members that at the end of 1964 there were many projects under way or in various stages of development. They are as follows: Proposed projects, 37; number of projects under agreement, both preliminary or final, 40; there are 18 projects under construction, and at the end of the year 16 projects were inactive, for a total of 111.

At the end of December, 1964, some 980 water pollution surveys had been carried out on a municipal basis, and water quality surveys on a grab samples basis totalled 852. Of this number, 129 water pollution surveys on a municipal basis were carried out in 1964, and water quality surveys on a grab samples basis 134. Twelve county surveys have been completed to date. Of this number, four were carried out during 1964. County surveys were carried out in Middlesex and Kent in 1958; in Elgin and Essex in 1959, the district of Sudbury and Carleton in 1960, Peel and Norfolk in 1963, and four surveys were carried out in 1964 in Welland, Brant, Halton, and Frontenac. The Halton and Frontenac surveys were not quite completed at the end of the year.

In 1964 there were 190 water quality monitoring stations in operation for detection of pollution and variations in water quality in strategic areas on a monthly basis. Co-operative schemes were carried out with the conservation authorities in the Maitland and Moira and Raison rivers. Intensive studies were begun in Elliot Lake, Black Creek, the Credit River, Welland River and Duffin Creek. Planning was begun for studies of the St. Clair River below Sarnia during July and September of 1965. Data was obtained on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario for the United States public health service.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few comments about our division of water resources. This division provides much valuable assistance to municipalities and individuals who are endeavouring to secure suitable water supplies. For example, in 1964 this division licensed some 412 well drillers. These drillers are required to keep records and report to the department required information associated with each well that is drilled in the province. To date, this division has records of over 100,000 wells on hand.

In 1964 some 8,544 records were recorded. These records give the commission a lot of valuable information about ground water, the quality of ground water in various parts of the province, and at what level one might expect to find a suitable water supply. In certain areas we have recording wells that give us valuable information regarding the rise or fall of ground water tables. Surveys by this division are of great value in our water-taking permits programme.

At the end of 1964, 3,283 permits had been issued for people taking over 10,000 gallons of water per day under the requirements of our Act. Of these permits, some 2,909 had been issued for irrigation purposes.

Hon. members of the House will know that the permit legislation was passed to make it possible for the water resources commission to endeavour to control a fair distribution of water in areas where there was keen competition for the available water supplies. I might say that a great many of these permits, perhaps a majority of these permits were issued in areas of cash crop production, such as tobacco, fruits and vegetables. Other permits were issued in areas where municipalities have high producing wells and the heavy taking of ground water could interfere with the rights of other users in the area. Section 28B of The Water Resources Commission Act says:

No person shall add any substance to the water of any well, lake, river, pond, spring, stream, reservoir, or other water or water-course for the purposes of killing or affecting plants, snails, insects, fish or other living matter, or things therein, without a permit issued by the commission.

Under this section, some 54 permits were issued for the control of aquatic nuisances in 1964.

Mr. Chairman, the OWRC has one of the finest laboratories of its kind in Canada. The services provided by the division of laboratories concern for the most part analytical, investigative and research data on samples of water, sewage and industrial wastes. This programme is carried on through a number of branches. For example, in 1964, 196,918 tests were made at the laboratory. The tests carried out in 1964 were some 37,581 in the bacteriology field, 1,975 in the biology field, 145,806 in the chemistry field, 11,556 in the purification processes field. The laboratory is a most important part of our organization. It is of tremendous assistance in all phases of our work.

At this time, I would like to make a comment about our division of research. This division is responsible for carrying out applied research into a broad spectrum of water resources topics concerned with the quality, supply, and purification of water, in addition to the biological and chemical hazards, control and treatment of sewage and industrial waste water. This programme gives preference to investigations of problems that are currently before the commission.

When the commission was confronted with the problem of treating canning wastes in the Chatham area, our division of research carried out a pilot project on an aerated lagoon. The pilot project was successful. As a result, this form of treatment is being developed in Chatham and in Essex. Previous to this development by our division of research, spray irrigation seemed to be the answer for most canning wastes, but this form of treatment required large tracts of valuable land, and in the wet season was not too satisfactory. Among the current projects that are under research study by the division is the control of the nuisance of algae growths of cladophora in the Great Lakes. These growths seem to have an affinity to sewage pollution, or the effluents from sewage plants. Studies currently stress aspects of mechanical removal and growth inhibition by chemical treatment, but more fundamental investigations are also being used to seek the causes of this algae's unusual environmental pre-eminence.

Another topic that is under study by the division of research is the evaluation of oxidation ditches, as a potentially more economic variation of sewage treatment for some municipalities. Still another important study has begun on tertiary treatment lagoons for effecting quality improvement of sewage treatment plant effluents through the removal of soluble substances not completely removed by present treatment methods. It is the hope of the commission through research we can develop a higher quality effluent to reduce the quantity of water required in our streams to dilute sewage effluent that may be discharged particularly into some of the smaller streams and increase the ability of larger streams to carry greater flows of treated effluent.

These are but a few of the matters that we have under investigation by our research division. Projects being considered for future study may stress needed improvements in the solution of major industrial waste problems as they occur in the excessive discharges of phosphates, toxic metal contaminants released from industrial sewers changing quality of effluents that are brought about by new developments by industry.

Mr. Chairman, the commission is stepping up and expanding its programme to bring industrial wastes under control. In the main, industry has been co-operating, but we on the commission feel if we are to achieve our objectives we have to step up this programme. It is our hope that if our budget estimate is passed, we can expand our industrial wastes branch and give more attention to this sort of pollution.

During the summer and fall months, the chairman and myself, and other members of the commission made a cross-section survey of the pulp and paper industry, which, according to an article in the February 1965 issue of Canadian Municipal Utilities, has a biological oxygen demand equal to an equivalent population of 6.5 million people or the total population of Ontario. We visited mills in all parts of the province as far west as Kenora, and as far north as Kapuskasing and Smooth Rock Falls, along the north shore of Lake Superior, east to the Ottawa and St. Lawrence valleys and down into the Niagara peninsula.

Following this survey we have asked the pulp and paper industry to step up its programme of pollution control to give us a report of what has been accomplished and a forecast of what they hope to accomplish in the next few years. We are asking them to report annually, with the objective of bringing the wastes from this industry under control in the near future. We intend to make the same requirements of all industry in the province. If we are to achieve our objective it will be necessary for us to expand our staff. It is the hope of the commission that the Legislature will back us in this programme.

Mr. Chairman, to give you some idea of what is involved in industrial wastes, let me tell you that it takes anywhere from 5,000 to 65,000 gallons of water to process one ton of paper, depending on the type of process that is used. When you realize we have paper mills in Ontario producing over 1,000 tons of paper a day, and there are over 40 different types of paper mills in the province, you can appreciate the importance of bringing the wastes from these mills under control.

I could remind you that it takes anywhere from 9,000 to 19,000 gallons of water to produce a ton of finished steel; from 25 to 200 gallons to produce one No. 2 case of cannery products; 700 to 800 gallons of water to produce a barrel of oil; 300 gallons of water to produce a barrel of beer; 50 to 200 gallons of water to produce a gallon of proofed spirits; 30,000 to 60,000 gallons of water to produce a thousand pounds of textiles, wool or cotton; 1,500 to 5,000 gallons of water to produce 1,000 pounds of dressed meat; 300,000 gallons of water to process 1,000 hides in a tannery.

These are a few examples that will indicate the importance of pollution control in the fields of industrial wastes. Our surveys indicate that if we are to achieve the objectives we have in mind, large sums of money will be involved. We visited one steel company recently, that has a $6 million pollution control programme scheduled to bring some of its wastes under control.

I want to say that industry has been co-operating and has been spending great sums of money running up into the millions of dollars but much more will need to be done if we are to keep pace with the expansion of industry in the province.

Mr. Chairman, I will sum up these observations about industrial wastes by saying that we have paper mills in this province that use almost twice as much water every day as the city of London, we have steel mills that use five or six times as much water as the city of London. There is no easy answer to the problem of industrial waste. At the beginning of my remarks I mentioned there were some 1,400 industries in the province. When you stop to think, there is no similarity between pulp mill wastes and the wastes from a dairy industry, there is no similarity between the wastes from a steel mill to the wastes from a packing plant, from a mine to the wastes of a canning factory. We think of tanneries, textile mills, plating industries, and all the new processes that are being developed, the petroleum industry, the brewing and distilling industry, every waste probably requiring a special treatment.

Incidentally, the petroleum industry has spent great sums of money in bringing their waste under control—millions of dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say something in regard to water supply itself. The problems of the past, the equitable distribution of available supplies and the meeting of the needs of water-scarce areas has been compounded in recent years by increased use in sprawling heavily populated industrial areas, by light precipitation in many districts, and the resultant lower ground water tables. Despite the disturbing lower levels of the Great Lakes, Ontario still has plenty of water, but it is not always in the right place. As a result, commission policy within the past year was broadened to include the building of water supply pipelines from available supply sources to areas in short supply.

Mr. Chairman and hon. members are no doubt aware that this programme is to be financed by the province and directed by the commission, with communities on or close to a pipeline route buying water from the commission at a figure to be worked out from the actual capital and operating costs of the project. In other words, the investment will ultimately be recovered in the rates charged for water. The first such project of this programme, with the work already started, is a pipeline from Grand Bend on Lake Huron to Arva. This project is known as the Lake Huron water supply system, and will bring water to the city of London, and will have water available for other municipalities on or near the pipeline route.

Indications to date are that there will be other municipalities taking water from this pipeline. For the information of the House I could say that the contract for the intake pipe and the filtration plant has been let. It is expected that we will be calling for tenders for the pipeline very shortly. In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, we are acquiring the necessary easements for the right-of-way for the pipeline.

In this regard, I might tell the House that some 128 properties are concerned. The commission has endeavoured to draw up what we feel is a fair and equitable offer for the necessary easements, and I must say that we have been more than pleased by the response of the people along the pipeline route. We started negotiations with the farm people and others who are concerned around the first of November, and as of March 31, 112 agreements have been negotiated, leaving only 16 outstanding. In recent weeks the commission has concentrated on delivering the cheques and to date some 96 cheques have been delivered. I must say that we are pleased at the friendly relations we have had with the farm people and others along the proposed route.

Mr. Chairman, I point out that commission-sponsored hearings have been held in other areas where there seemed to be some indication of a shortage of water. Hearings were held at Chatham for Kent county, in Sarnia for Lambton county, in Brantford for the Grand Valley area, in Napanee in the county of Lennox and Addington. No definite decisions have been made in these areas as yet regarding pipelines since it will be necessary to have engineering surveys carried out to see whether pipelines in the areas are economically feasible and sound. I might say that surveys are underway at the present time in the lower part of Peel county and in Essex county. The commission has authorized the appointment of engineers for Lambton, the lower Grand Valley area and Kent county. And I believe, since I prepared these notes, an engineer has been appointed in Napanee.

From these hearings and surveys other pipelines may develop, but I should say that much will depend on the length of the pipeline, the volume of water contracted for, and the costs of purification and pumping. The power costs alone on a pipeline project are a continuing charge against water through a pipeline, as well as other costs of maintaining and operating the system. However, the water resources commission is prepared to assist municipalities in water-scarce areas with projects of this kind where they are economically feasible and sound.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention at this time to get into any debate regarding lake levels, although I must say that the water resources commission has a number of intakes into the lake. Sewage effluent is being discharged into the lakes, and any reduction of quantity of water in the lakes quite naturally means a greater concentration of the sewage effluent. The OWRC appreciates the fact that the international joint commission is making a study of the factors which affect the fluctuations of water levels in the Great Lakes and their connecting waters. I am sure hon. members would like to have information regarding public hearings that the international joint commission intends to hold. With that in mind I am going to read into the record the notice of the public hearings so that every hon. member will be aware of the time, place, and purpose of the hearings. This is the notice:

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION
UNITED STATES AND CANADA PUBLIC HEARINGS GREAT LAKES LEVELS

PUBLIC NOTICE

The international joint commission has been requested by the governments of Canada and the United States to study the factors which affect the fluctuations of water levels in the Great Lakes and their connecting waters; and to determine whether in its judgment action within the Great Lakes basin would be practicable and in the public interest for the purpose of bringing about a more beneficial range of stage for and improvement in:

- (a) domestic water supply and sanitation;
- (b) navigation;
- (c) water for power and industry;
- (d) flood control;
- (e) agriculture;
- (f) fish and wildlife;
- (g) recreation; and
- (h) other beneficial public purposes.

The international joint commission, in accordance with its rules of procedure, will hold public hearings at the times and places listed below for the purpose of receiving testimony and evidence relevant to the subject matter of the investigation. The hearings will provide convenient opportunity for any interested person to express pertinent information and opinions to the commission. Oral submissions will be received but, for accuracy of record, all important statements of fact and argument should be submitted in writing, where possible, to one of the two secretaries in advance of the hearing.

Dates and places of public hearings are as set out below. Persons intending to appear and give evidence should attend whichever hearing is convenient to them.

9:30 a.m., Monday, May 10—Education Centre, Toronto Board of Education, 155 College Street, Toronto, Ontario.

11:00 a.m., Tuesday, May 11—City Commission Room, City-County Building, 325 Court Street, Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.

9:30 a.m., Tuesday, May 25—Dieppe Room, Cleary Auditorium, Windsor, Ontario.

9:30 a.m., Wednesday, May 26—US District Ceremonial Court Room, 25th floor (Room 2525), 219 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.

The two secretaries are: D. G. Chance, Secretary, Canadian Section, International Joint Commission, Room 303, 75 Albert Street, Ottawa 4, Ontario; and W. A. Bullard, Secretary, United States Section, International Joint Commission, 1711 New York Avenue, NW, Washington, DC. 20440.

That is the end of the quote from the notice. I am putting this in the record so that every member will know where they can appear and make representations on lake levels. You will have a chance to make floor speeches. There are four public hearings and, if you advise the secretary that you are coming, they would like a prepared brief if that is possible.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot close my remarks without complimenting the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer) on the fine statement he gave to the House on Great Lakes water levels on Wednesday, February 3. I was interested in his moments regarding proposed diversions of water from the Arctic watershed into the Great Lakes basin. Before we go into wholesale diversion of water from the Arctic watershed, I think very careful studies should be made to be sure that we do not need the waters in that area of our province.

During the short time I have been in this Legislature I have witnessed many new developments, and have seen new towns spring up in northern Ontario, towns that did not exist a few years ago, towns built around the mining developments, pulp and paper industry; and with the coming of gas through northern Ontario we have really no idea of what the developments will be in the future. I predict there can be nothing but expansion and increased development in that area. With that in mind, I think we should be very careful about diverting the water that may be needed in that area into the Great Lakes basin before we have made careful studies regarding future requirements in the north.

Let me give you a few figures regarding present water consumption in that part of our province. I have been advised by our division of sanitary engineering that there are approximately 140,000 persons in the Arctic watershed, with a total water consumption of 5.29 billion gallons per year. In addition to the municipal water consumption, the amount of water required for the dilution of sewage effluent is equivalent to 14 billion gallons per year for secondary treatment, and 110 billion gallons per year for primary treatment. Therefore, the total water requirement for the present population in the Arctic watershed will vary from approximately 20 billion to 115 billion gallons of water per year. The tourist industry, which means much to the economy of the northern part of our province and, indeed, to all parts of the province, depends on clean waters which will support fish and wildlife and unpolluted beaches and resort areas.

In addition to the consumption by the people in the northern watershed, I have received some information from our industrial wastes branch regarding industrial water use in the Arctic watershed. I have been advised that the industrial water use of the Abitibi Power and Paper Company at Iroquois Falls is 22 million gallons of water per day; the Abitibi Power and Paper Company at Smooth Rock Falls, 18 million gallons per day; the Kam-Kotia Porcupine Mines Limited at Timmins, 7.2 million gallons per day. I was not able to secure the figures for other mines in the Porcupine area, so there will be another substantial quantity of water recorded for those mines. At Kapuskasing, 30 million gallons of water per day is used for the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company and the Kimberly-Clark Pulp and Paper Company; at Kenora, 24 million gallons by the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company; 18 million gallons at Fort Frances; the Steeprock and Caland Iron Mines Limited at Atikokan, 50 million gallons per day; the Dryden Paper Company, Dryden, 29 million gallons of water per day; the Cochenour-Williams Gold Mines at Cochenour, 1.7 million gallons per day. I was not able to secure data for Red Lake and other area mines. The areas I have mentioned have a total consumption of approximately 189.9 million gallons of water every day. Keep in mind I have not covered all of the industry in the Arctic watershed.

Mr. Chairman, I mention these statistics to give you some idea of the importance of water in that part of our province. Additional water will be needed to dilute treated industrial waste effluent. At the present time, many of the pulp and paper mills are increasing their capacity, which will mean increased consumption of water. New mining developments will require ever-increasing quantities of water. Expansion of industry and of mining will attract more people. These are some of the reasons why we on the water resources commission feel very careful studies should be made before there is any wholesale diversion of water from the northern watersheds into other water systems.

We have pulp and timber resources in the north to develop. We have mining developments. We have an expanding tourist industry. We are generating hydro-electric power and gas lines across the northern part of our province. Let us be sure that we do not jeopardize developments in that part of the province by draining away valuable water resources that may be needed as the area develops—water for people, for industry, for pollution control. I would suggest that we should await the decision of the surveys and studies that are necessary. Let us not be swayed by the oratory of some who may not have given enough consideration to what is involved, and in so doing jeopardize the future development of that part of our province.

When I read, and hear people quote, the fantastic figures that are mentioned to finance diversion schemes, I sometimes ask myself: Would it be a sounder policy to spend some of this money building traffic arteries into the northern part of our province, making it more attractive for industry to go into the north and there process raw materials and discharge the treated effluent from the industries and the municipalities that will develop around industry into the northern rivers, where the effluent would find its way into the Arctic ocean? Should we not keep these ideas in mind and perhaps take industry to the water, and scatter our waste effluent—rather than bring the water into the Great Lakes system and increase the load of effluent in the lakes and the associated algae growths that go along with the discharge of sewage effluent, all of which must find its way out of our province through the St. Lawrence river system and through our sister province of Quebec. When we think of future development in the northern part of our province, let us keep in mind that all the developments in Canada from Vancouver to the Ontario boundary lie north of a line that runs a few miles south of Cochrane.

Mr. Chairman, I have tried to give to the Legislature a few of the highlights of the expanding programme of the water resources commission. I could go on and tell you of the work of our legal department, our personnel department, the project development division, the project control section, the property branch, and the information branch that gives out news releases advising the public of the work of our commission, and that prepares exhibits for the Canadian National Exhibition, booklets and pamphlets, all designed to play their part in giving information to people and developing our pollution control programme. I have touched on some phases of the division of sanitary engineering. I could have said something about our division of construction, which is responsible for administering the commission's contracts with the consulting engineers and contractors.

I could have said more about the division of water resources, which is responsible for both surface and ground water, the conducting of water resources surveys and investigation programmes in which hydrologic surveys are undertaken for municipalities, and test drilling and well construction programmes. I could have talked about our finance division, which is concerned with the financial affairs of the commission. This includes financial planning and the development and implementation of financial controls, the formulation of accounting policy, the preparation of required financial statements. This division is responsible for the banking and custody of the commission's moneys and securities, the procurement and protection of assets, the collection of payments due from municipalities, the provision of insurance.

All of these matters might have been described in greater detail. But I trust, Mr. Chairman, that I have given to the Legislature a good cross-section of our activities, which will indicate the importance of maintaining and expanding the programme of our commission, a programme that I believe is so necessary to the future development of our province. Let me conclude by reminding the House that the commission's programme involves the commission with some 978 incorporated municipalities and approximately 1,400 industries. When you think of the magnitude of this challenge, it is hard to realize that so much has been accomplished by the dedicated staff of the commission, a staff that numbered 375 on January 31, 1965, made up of 92 persons in the engineering field, 21 in the scientific, 84 in the technical, with 174 administrative office and service personnel backing up these highly trained persons. Out in the field, some 199 persons were full-time employees and 12 were part-time employees operating the various systems that the commission operates on behalf of the municipalities.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that Ontario owes much to this small group of dedicated public servants—men and women who are protecting and developing our greatest renewable asset, the water resources of the province.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin on his very detailed and interesting remarks and analysis of the situation of the Ontario water resources commission.

I think, sir, all of us have come to realize that water is something about which we have to have far more concern than we have had in the past. This may seem unusual to us. We have, I suspect, across this province, felt that with our abundance of water we can be somewhat casual about this great resource. We probably have the three largest lakes in the world—certainly one of the major large lakes in the world—around our province, and yet we have parts of the province where there is a real concern about the scarcity of water. I am thinking of southwestern Ontario, and as the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin outlined, the fact that we have to have pipelines. We know that it has caused concern about drought and is affecting the agriculture in that area.

I might say that this is not just a concern to Ontario, as has been discussed in the past; it has now become a concern to the whole world, to examine the abuse and use of water. I notice, and I am sure that the hon. member who just spoke with me has paid a great deal of attention to this, that the nations of the world are going together in what is called, I believe, a hydrological five-year plan in which they are trying to do research throughout the world. I understand that Canada is playing a part.

I was interested in reading a monthly letter from the Royal Bank of Canada and seeing the interest that is taken by industry and business with respect to the use and the abuse of water in Ontario and Canada. The letter was explaining that the concern we have today is really to get some research into the problem of our use of water—to get some answers. It was for that reason that I was interested in what the hon. Minister had to say about his research division. I realize that he himself said he could have talked about the financial section and a number of other sections, but I would like to focus on the research division he has within the Ontario water resources commission. First of all, let me emphasize the problem again. I am sure the hon. Minister, because I have heard him speak time after time on this, has been concerned in connection with the Great Lakes—and here again I quote Professor Langford. He explained to us that there are 2,000 square miles of dead polluted water within one of our lakes, Lake Erie; and if we do not do something within the next ten years then these will be ten years in which nothing will be done.

I notice, in travelling around the province, that the situation of polluted waters is beginning to affect communities all over this province. We noticed during the summer that there was a sudden outcry of concern from the people of Elliot Lake in connection with water, and we saw the scurrying of four deputy Ministers who, I think, were going to examine that situation. We will be interested in knowing what you are doing about that.

However, in connection with all of these problems, the question I am particularly interested in is: What are you doing with research? I have looked at other states to see what they are doing and I find, for example, that Governor Nelson Rockefeller has proposed $1.7 billion be spent for a six-year programme to control water pollution in New York state.

And again, quoting from this Royal Bank of Canada monthly letter:

The problem comes up constantly that we do not know enough to cope efficiently with the complicated water problem. We need facts, to think clearly, to judge wisely and to build effectively.

I know that in the previous estimates of The Department of Lands and Forests we heard that $150,000 was being given to the Great Lakes institute in order to do research there.

I looked through the hon. Minister's annual report, the last annual report, in connection with the research he is doing. And here is what I found, and I present this to the hon. Minister. He is as aware as I am of the enormous problem we are faced with, I presume—and he can correct me if I am wrong—but almost every river in southwestern or southern Ontario is being polluted. This is probably one of the effects which come with a progressive industrial society if there is not careful planning against the abuse of water.

But, looking at the facts within the annual report, I find that there was one study on taste- and odour-producing substances in water which was started last January. Let me say this: It had to be halted; it had to be halted until June because the bacteriologist working on it had resigned; and he was not replaced until the end of 1964. I suggest, if this is the fact, and it certainly appears to be, that in the annual report I do not see any deep concern to get at the research to study the problem with effective, capable research people. I admit that the men the hon. Minister has, are hard-working, able and dedicated, but I suggest there are not enough of them if he has to delay some of his studies because one bacteriologist happens to resign.

I notice another—and I am quoting from the hon. Minister's annual report, which says:

The number of requests for viral studies in drinking water, recreational water, streams and lakes, indicated that some monitoring facilities would be required.

But the OWRC is not equipped for such studies, from what I can gather. You do not have a virologist to carry them out.

And another point:

The biology branch has a staff of four biologists and one technician.

And I ask the hon. Minister whether he considers this enough to cope adequately with the problems arising from the effects of pollution and the like in water.

Taking another quote from the hon. Minister's report:

A number of special projects of interest were undertaken during the year. And because of scuba-diving ability of some members of the branch staff, a request was made for an inspection and repair of the Ontario water resources sampling pipes installed in Lake Huron at Grand Bend. The inspection and necessary repairs were carried out over a distance of two miles on this line.

Well, I suggest, sir—and I can appreciate the interest that some of the department's personnel may have in scuba-diving—but somehow it would seem to me that is not the most effective use to be made of the key research people. Perhaps it is, and the hon. Minister can clarify that for us.

Turning to the hon. Minister's industrial waste branch, we find this statement in the annual report:

The continuing large-scale industrial growth in Ontario, impressive in all types of industry, but most noteworthy in the chemical industry, continued to outstrip the capacity of the branch to provide complete field coverage. In addition to the establishment of new industries, continuing change in processes and production in existing plants gave rise to increasing water use and the continuing introduction of new waste components for which treatment and controls were not always readily available.

I think these are strong words in a government report and I suggest, to support the charge that I am making, that this government is neglecting the assault, on our water resources, of unchecked and increasing industrial pollution.

Let me take some more statistics—the Ontario water resources commission's own statistics, I think, make this charge:

Of 477 inspections of discharge of industrial waste into surface waters, the industrial waste branch found 311 discharges unsatisfactory. Only 166 were satisfactory.

What is being done now you have found this? I raise that question with the hon. member.

Two industries alone—pulp and paper and, of course, uranium mining, which hit the front pages in connection with the radioactive contamination of Elliot Lake—alone present problems in research and development of waste treatment techniques which would tax the resources of the best-endowed research establishment.

I want to say again, to emphasize, that the men you have, the research scientists and the technicians you pointed out in your own report, are hard-working and are dedicated; but I suggest, in view of the small numbers, that I do not see how they can possibly do the job. Obviously, more must be done. Both the division of laboratories and the division of research, in the Ontario water resources commission, must be strengthened and expanded.

We want no cut-back on construction of water treatment and water supply plants and equipment. This work, as you pointed out, is vital and must be carried on at full speed. Though we have urged revisions—and I hope that the hon. member and the hon. Minister have considered these—of financial arrangements to ease burdens on municipalities and make it economically feasible for certain industries to treat their waste, I re-emphasize again that it is obvious you need an expansion of research staff and facilities.

Let me just go through the points I have made from your annual report: You have the loss of a bacteriologist. The study was stopped because you could not replace him. You had four biologists. Perhaps this was part of their duties, but the annual report explains that they were spending their time in scuba equipment inspecting pipes. I am not a technical person, so I do not know if this was part of their research studies or not. We find that you were unable to undertake studies of virus contamination because you do not have a biologist, and you have the commission's own report which admitted that industrial pollution problems are getting out of hand.

At this point, I would like to remind the hon. member of the remark of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) in his Budget address at the opening of the session, and I quote:

To combat water pollution resulting from industrial waste, the commission is planning to intensify research into methods of treating such wastes and to provide greater surveillance and control of industrial pollution.

We have heard recently that the government intends to launch a five-year programme to reduce pollution caused by our pulp and paper industry. I was interested in your remarks and I took the privilege of getting a copy of them. I think it is on page 8 that you explain there are 1,400 industries in the province. You, at this point, are just tackling one of those—the pulp and paper industry.

I would feel that we have got to have a far more concerted effort on the problem of water pollution—a far more concerted attack on the problem. Just to have a five-year programme—and I notice that you are hoping to have the pulp and paper industry report to you each year—seems to me a very laissez-faire approach to take to the whole problem of industrial pollution.

May I say, sir, that I have looked with considerable interest—and I am repeating what my hon. friend said in his remarks in reply to the hon. Minister's opening statement on energy and development—at other communities to see whether this problem of water pollution is impossible to tackle. I was very interested that the Ruhr River in West Germany—and I am repeating this again to re-emphasize it to you—which in comparison with our major streams is a small trickle of a stream, I suppose has almost 40 per cent industrial growth around it. The interesting thing is, that because of the water pollution approach, in Western Germany, I understand that not only are they able to use the water for recreational purposes—they can actually swim in the water and use it for recreation—but in some cases, and I think one is a steel plant, the water is used, comes back again into the river and is used again by the plant.

Here is a small trickle of a stream, and I emphasize that, in comparison with the great water resources that we have, and yet they are able to keep it free from pollution. I suggest we could do something like this, if we were to tackle the problem in the same way that they are attacking it.

I was interested to see just how they are going about it. I notice that the feeling that they have is that you tackle the problem from the source, that is from the industry. I am fully aware that the hon. Minister has suggested, and I agree with him, that we do not want to close up all the industries because of the fact of pollution, but we want to get the industries working with us to cut down on the pollution into the streams. As I understand, as a layman looking at this problem, the approach taken in the Ruhr Valley is that each industry is assessed at source on the amount of what is called biochemical oxygen demand, BOD; which means, I presume, that oxygen is the means by which you take away the pollution.

My hon. friend over here is nodding to me. He is more expert than I am.

They can assess the degree of the effluents and discover how much they are polluting a stream. On this basis, the industry has a choice: Either to put in equipment in order to cut down on contamination into the Ruhr River; or if they do not want to put in equipment to clear up the pollution, then they must pay a heavy tax for the amount of pollution that flows into the river. They have a choice of one or the other. It means that there is a sum collected to tackle pollution in the Ruhr River.

I just raise this: It is obvious to me on two counts, sir, that with the real concern we should all have about pollution of our streams, I do not think we are tackling this aggressively and with enough concerted action. I do not think we are putting enough research into it. As I look at this annual report, unless the hon. Minister can convince me otherwise, I see very clearly that the government is not doing a sufficient job at getting at the facts and doing something about it.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, we have heard again tonight the account from the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin of the water resources commission and what it is doing and planning to do. I think we all appreciate the fact that the water resources commission is a body of effective people who are doing, I think, an important job in this province.

The studies they have undertaken—the water pollution surveys, the initiation of pipelines, the study of industrial wastes and how that can be overcome—all these are important and vital, I think, in the whole problem of cleaning up our rivers and streams and lakes.

I was very interested in the statement he made about the attempt they are making to work with large industry to clean up the pollution there. I am interested also in the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition in this respect, but I do call to his attention the fact that very often much of the pollution in the streams of our rivers is from small industries—the small plants, which somehow are not hooked into the sewer systems, where they do exist—and industries which are pouring their pollutions into the streams and rivers of this province.

There has been a great deal of concern about the levels of the Great Lakes, and I am not going to spend too much time on that. It was my privilege last summer to be in West Lansing at a conference in respect to this matter. At that time it was pointed out by the chairman that, just slightly over a decade before, there was a conference in exactly the same place dealing with water levels.

My friend, the hon. member for Muskoka was there, and they pointed out that this conference was held because of the extremely high levels of water in the Great Lakes. So perhaps the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin may have something when he says that we do not want to panic and think of bringing water from the north down here; already the cycle may be reversing itself, because the lakes are now starting up. We will not know for certain for some time whether this, in effect, is true. But certainly they are inching up at the present time and we hope that this is the beginning of a new cycle of higher water; so nature herself may restore the balance and we may be in a good position here.

But the fact remains that there is very grave concern in spite of this hope of the long-term effect of what is happening. This, of course, is exactly why the Ontario water resources commission is in operation. They are concerned with this and the government is concerned with it, but the big question we have to face, and the question which the hon. leader of the Opposition raised, is whether we are acting fast enough to do the job that must be done before we face pretty dire things around our province.

As he has mentioned already, we already have a very large area in the bottom of Lake Erie which is being polluted more and more each year and the level of that is rising all the time. Even Dr. Langford tells us that he was shocked to find a patch of algae along the shores of Batchawana Bay in Lake Superior, and I think that this was mentioned by the hon. member across the floor tonight. He traced the source of this to an open sewer dumping raw waste into the bay; so even Lake Superior, that great volume of water, although it should prevent disaster there, is not preventing this kind of thing from happening.

Every year we are told that more and more citizens are asking the water resources commission when they are going to clean the algae from our beaches. In the Toronto Globe and Mail of August 9, last year, we were told that, every year, commission spokesmen politely explain that they have neither staff, funds, nor authority to deal with the algae problem. The commission's function is advisory; it is conducting research on how to combat algae; but the methods of control, it is discovering, will have to be applied by some other agency.

The United States health department has told us about Lake Michigan, and Dr. Langford mentioned this again recently when he said:

If the present increase in algae growth in Lake Michigan continues at its present rate, the lake will become useless as a source of potable and industrial water within ten years, unless drastic and expensive filtration is applied.

And so we have the situation where slowly, but with terrible certainty under present conditions, death is building up from the bottom of the Great Lakes. The fields of phenol-saturated garbage and urban waste, poured into the once-pure bodies of water by a careless civilization, are spreading across the lake bottoms and rising nearer to the surface with every passing year of neglect. Already fish life is being affected. The fishing in Lake Erie and some of the other lakes is changing. Beaches, once clean, are now being washed with polluted water. And more and more the question arises as to whether beaches are safe; over a year ago one of our experts told us that he doubted whether any of the beaches around the periphery of Lake Erie is safe all the time for swimming. So this doubt is rising in people's minds, and in the minds of the experts.

Around Metropolitan Toronto "No Swimming" signs are in evidence. And as those multiply across this province, the tourist industry is bound to suffer to some extent. And industry, we know, is concerned about the source of fresh water here around the Great Lakes region in the years to come.

And some of them are already casting exploratory eyes in other directions.

We have been warned by those who have long been concerned about the situation, that the civilization centred around the lakes may well be writing its own doom in its careless disregard of its own wastes.

During this past year, and before that time, the Ontario water resources commission has done an outstanding job in the field of looking at sources of pollution and making recommendations. I have collected, as I think all the hon. members have, over the past year, a great file of these reports which have been issued. And I am going to quote from a few of them tonight just to emphasize some of the difficulties that we face in this province at the present time.

On July 14, the middle of last year—and some of these situations mentioned have moved a bit towards solution, but not by any means all—of the 22 cities, towns, and villages situated along the Grand River and its tributaries, they have told us, 12 municipalities have some form of sewage treatment. But these 12 include about 95 per cent of the urban population of the drainage area, so this puts the thing in proportion. However, significant quantities of contaminating waste are discharged directly in the stream by a lengthy list of industries with a wide range of manufacturing processes and resultant varied wastes. In Kitchener and Waterloo, for instance, industrial wastes are accepted in the municipal sewage system. However, complications developed at the Waterloo plant due to excessive organic loadings.

"The industries," the report said, "should be obliged to construct their own treatment works." And the report also stated that:

Pollution is evident in the following regions: Speed River, from Guelph down to where it joins the Grand River; the Grand River, extending 20 miles downstream from Bridgeport, approximately 20 miles downstream from Brantford; and then extremely degraded conditions exist downstream from Elmira.

Domestic and trade waste, discharged without treatment from the town of Dunnville, has created objectionable conditions in Sunfish Creek and along the east side of the Grand River downstream from the town.

This is along one of our major waterways. Then we are told, with reference to the Thames:

Serious pollution problems are evident in those parts of the town of Ingersoll—

It mentions others but Ingersoll seems to be singled out in this particular report, which is dated May 8, 1964. I continue:

A survey revealed that sanitary and industrial wastes were being discharged into the Thames River and tributaries without adequate treatment.

The municipality had an efficient sewage treatment plant but it was evident that certain sections of the municipality were not serviced by municipal sanitary sewers.

And this is one of the problems we have, even in the towns and cities where we have efficient plants. New subdivisions sometimes are spawned without adequate facilities, and they are not hooked in.

Eight municipal storm drains were found to be discharging sanitary sewage into the water courses, while four industrial outlets were found to be the source of serious pollution. It was suggested that the high concentration of ammonia being discharged by one industrial plant may have contributed to fish kills in that particular section of the Thames River. So we have these smaller industries which, so far, have not taken the action they should have taken.

The January 5, 1965, report mentions the town of Petrolia. It tells about the saturation of oil into the soil there, and about 32 oil drilling operations which were discharging oil into the Tank Street open drain, and Buttermilk Creek. In this regard, the report recommended that adequate treatment of the oil waste being discharged from the various drilling operations should be provided by the owners of these operations. I hope that something is being done and I am sure the hon. member will see to it that the recommendations of the OWRC are looked at.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton East): We will look after that.

Mr. Young: Fine. This is being looked after, we are assured by the hon. member concerned. Is it already looked after?

Mr. Henderson: It is taken care of.

Mr. Young: Well, "taken care of" may mean one year, two years, or five years from now—we are not sure just what. We are not assured the situation is looked after. It is being looked after all in its own good time.

On March 10, the industrial waste report states that of Orillia's 39 industries, 16 with industrial waste discharges were surveyed. This report suggested that the sewerage of industrial ditches into ditches, a common practice in Orillia, should be discontinued.

Also, all industry should pretreat their waste to such a degree that those wastes could be discharged to the sanitary sewers.

Then on January 19 of this year, the report states that in Lindsay, although it has acquired a waste stabilization pond—and, of course, waste stabilization ponds are not too efficient ordinarily for the treatment of sewage flows—it is obvious that a considerable quantity of sewage is discharged through the municipal storm sewer outlets to the Scugog River, and therefore it does not receive treatment. Also there are objectionable flows from some industrial plants in Lindsay.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): There are some objectionable flows from over here.

Mr. Young: The report added: "It is gratifying"—and this again follows up what my friends here have said: "It is gratifying to report that the local officials are aware of these conditions and are pursuing a programme to rectify these problems." The river received objectionable flows from some industrial plants. Some of the companies provide industrial waste treatment, but it is evident that additional effort would be necessary in order to control the quality of industrial waste discharges. Where manufacturing firms discharge industrial wastes directly to water courses, adequate treatment of these wastes should be provided in order to minimize the occurrence of adverse effects in the receiving water.

In Mildmay, in the county of Bruce, in the same report, we are told that the OWRC recommends the discharge—the hon. member is not here at the moment, but he is no doubt aware of this—of contaminated water waste to Otter Creek to discontinue. A report of the survey carried out during the summer of 1964 stated there was no indication of improvement in conditions since a sanitary survey conducted by the Bruce county health unit in 1953. I suppose that is because of the present incumbent. It indicated at least 107 locations where waste reached the river. This is many years ago. According to the report, a preliminary engineering report was submitted to council in January of 1963 for the construction of a staged sewerage system. To date, the report said, the OWRC has received no word of what action the Mildmay council will take. There are no treatment works in the village at the present time.

On January 18, we had the matter of pulp and paper waste. The disposal of pulp and paper mill waste, and the pollution of receiving water resulting from it, has been a matter of concern to the Ontario water resources commission for a number of years, and we heard something of that tonight. Although significant improvements in production methods and equipment have been and are being made, waste disposal and water quality surveys showed that the provisions of The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act are not being met by the industry at large and that waste treatment and control, in addition to that which is now provided, is required at most mills in the province. In keeping with the scheduling of municipal control undertakings, in which the staging of the works over a number of years is agreed to, the commission requests—and these words appear time and time again, “the commission requests”—that all companies operating pulp, paper, and paper product manufacturing processes in the province, undertake effluent improvement programmes at all mills.

Tillsonburg—we are coming down into that area—late in 1963—this report is dated May 27, 1964, and we hope something has happened in the meantime—reveals that serious pollution of Big Otter Creek was continuing despite the fact that 70 per cent of the town was served with sewers and sewage treatment plant. Laboratory analyses of samples taken during the survey conducted by the OWRC indicated that the creek deteriorated appreciably as it flowed through the municipality. Investigations revealed that certain drains were contributing to serious pollution in the creek, and the more serious of these were the drains from milk processing plants. These are places where small industries seem to be operating to pollute our streams.

Drainage from municipal refuse disposal sites also was contributing to the pollution of the watercourse. In other words, in many cases where we do have operating disposal sites or disposal plants, we still get a certain amount of pollution because they are not as efficient as they might be. But it was expected that this problem would be eliminated in the future, so we hope that will happen very quickly.

The village of Grand Valley, in Dufferin county, should consider the establishment of a municipal water and sewage works system which would provide an adequate and safe supply of water and prevent pollution of the Grand River, and this was recommended in 1964.

We come to Dufferin county; samples collected by the Dufferin county health unit from wells in the area revealed, on bacteriological examination, that a number of the wells were contaminated. Domestic sewage in most instances was discharged to private systems, but some domestic and industrial waste was discharged to municipal storm sewers which emptied in the adjacent watercourse, the Grand River. The report suggested the existing pollution of wells may be attributed to contamination from these private sewer systems. Two storm sewer outfalls discharging to the river were located. One received discharges from a creamery. And a number of private dwellings caused gross pollution where it entered the river. So again we have the creameries mentioned and these are, of course, sources of serious pollution.

Burks Falls, away in the north: The practice of discharging inadequately treated waste into the river and its tributaries at Burks Falls, a village in the district of Parry Sound, I understand, should be discontinued. The report noted the village is served by a waterworks but no sewage works. One source of pollution was from a pond which received waste from a laundromat located on the west side of Highway 11. The waste disposal system serving the two schools and the local hospitals proved to be inadequate. These problems can be rectified with the installation of municipal sewage works.

There are a great many more here, Mr. Chairman, of the same tenor. The town of Ridgetown, November 13, 1964, permitting the discharge of inadequately treated sanitary and other wastes to the surface water drains, is a major factor in the pollution of the receiving watercourse, McGregor Creek. The town of Ridgetown is in the county of Kent, I understand, just to the south of—

Mr. Henderson: Some of the better parts of Ontario.

Mr. Young: And then we have the town of Penetanguishene, up on Georgian Bay. The report stated that the conclusion to be drawn from the survey was that a large volume of heavily polluted wastes originating in Penetanguishene was discharging from sewer and ditch outlets into the harbour. These discharges were affecting adversely the quality of the receiving water. Also, effluent from the municipal refuse disposal area was reaching Copeland Creek. The report noted the municipality was provided with a sewer system consisting of combined sanitary and storm release sewers discharging into the harbour. This system serves approximately 50 per cent of the municipality. A survey of the unsewered area revealed that close to 60 per cent of the private sewage disposal system failed to meet generally accepted standards.

At a public hearing before the Ontario municipal board in the spring of 1964, an application by the OWRC on behalf of the municipality, for approval for Penetanguishene to enter into an agreement with the OWRC for construction by the commission of a sewage project works, was turned down. The survey report resulted from the OMB's request for a verification of the commission's opinion on pollution in that area and I hope that the verification has been carried through and has been presented, or will be before long.

Extension of municipal sanitary sewers to the north-west section of Collingwood, and expansion of facilities to the municipal sewage plant, should be considered.

An hon. member: No, they are all right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Henderson: They mailed those to us at home.

Mr. Young: So all these, as I told you, are examples from across this province. Unfortunately, I have just come to the end, just as you have spoken, because it has all the appearance that you may be shutting me up and I do not want to have that.

But there is one other—all of these reports came in the mail, I agree; they all came in the mail. But the fact remains that even though they came in the mail, and even though we have seen example after example of failure of our sewage systems, of failure of our villages and towns and cities to establish proper sewage disposal facilities—

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): In Toronto, right here.

Mr. Young: Right here is one of them; I agree, I have no quarrel with that. The fact is that we are here tonight to discuss this problem and we are going to discuss it.

One other matter which I would like to bring to the attention of the assembled multitude, and all my friends here, is the situation in the Burtch industrial school—I see the hon. Minister is not here and perhaps I should leave this for the future. But this was mentioned the other day, and I have the information for him that evidently the Burtch industrial plant, which was installed three years ago, has not been adequate; and the Ontario water resources commission, in very recent days, as a matter of fact on February 23, 1965, pointed out that this system is now overloaded. It may be that we have too many customers there, but something needs to be done in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, I have read at some length, into the record, some of these problems which demonstrate first of all, I think, the effectiveness of the Ontario water resources commission in spotting difficulties and in pointing out these difficulties. The source of the build-up of slow death in our lakes, which I have mentioned, is there for us to see. And the second thing, I think, is the almost unbelievable way in which we have slowed down or perhaps deliberately not speeded up the financial arrangements which are needed to change this situation. We know what the techniques are. The finances should be available in a civilization such as this one, in a province like Ontario—available to check and then reverse the present trend toward disaster in our streams and lakes. Right across our province the rivers and streams are being polluted by our industry, our cities and our towns, in spite of the job which the OWRC is doing. And pollution is being poured in almost unlimited quantities into the lakes.

Mr. Knox: Especially in Toronto.

Mr. Young: I agree, especially in Toronto. The rivers are being fouled and the lakes are building up their heritage of trouble for the future. I hold no brief—Metropolitan Toronto is moving towards a solution here, and I hope that solution is soon discovered. And I understand that Lambton county is pure and undefiled; they have cleaned up all their problems there.

Mr. Knox: I will go along with that.

Mr. Young: We are delighted to find that out.

An hon. member: It has some defiled people.

Mr. Young: Oh, well, that is for the hon. member to say.

But the Ontario water resources commission, during this past year, has almost weekly been warning us of danger; yet, so far, no power exists in order to clean up areas of specific danger. Last fall, we heard the explosion when the radioactive wastes in Elliot Lake and Bancroft were discovered; and I would hope that some of the hon. members who are close to the situation will deal with it in more detail.

But again I quote from the Toronto Globe and Mail of November 14, 1964, in dealing with this story. It says this:

Emphasizing that the commission will try again to get the mining companies still operating in the Elliot Lake area to cooperate in reducing radioactive pollution, Mr. Galimbert said, "All the companies are equally responsible for overall pollution."

But what I want to point out here is that he said that the commission will try again. The commission has no power, of course, to enforce its suggestions and its recommendations. And this government has not the power; it cannot order a municipality to put in sewage disposal works.

Mr. Knox: Oh, yes. I object to that, because the city of Sarnia was ordered by the OWRC to put in a sewage disposal plant, and was given so many days to do it; and so was the municipality of Sault Ste. Marie. This is the No. 1 and No. 2 order from OWRC, and we obeyed them; and do not let anybody ever tell you it is not effective because I, being the junior member of the council at the time, asked the question, "Supposing we don't desire to proceed with this, what happens?" And they said, "We have authority from the Supreme Court to enforce it and if you don't like to do it, we will do it and charge you." So do not let anybody say they do not have the authority; they do.

Mr. Young: I appreciate getting this information, Mr. Chairman, from the hon. member for Lambton West.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I think this might be a point of privilege. I agree with the hon. member who spoke and said the water resources commission does have power to order, but for the sake of the good name of the city of Sault Ste. Marie I think we got to the job before they actually issued the order.

Mr. Knox: I might take exception to that, Mr. Chairman, because the community of Sault Ste. Marie was No. 2 on this order, and I might say that the city of Sarnia went to bat on behalf of Sault Ste. Marie and got it assistance from the federal government which, up to now, it has never recognized; this gave the city of Sarnia considerable help with respect to its operation. I think that the hon. Attorney General might concede that No. 1 on the order from the OWRC really did a tremendous effort for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. S. Lewis: Is the hon. Attorney General properly humbled?

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, this is an exceedingly interesting bit of byplay here. All it demonstrates is that when things get polluted badly enough so that people no longer can live, when their health is completely endangered by a city or municipality, then there is no alternative but to say, "Move in and get the job done." Sault Ste. Marie evidently had not reached that point and they were willing to go ahead and do the job. Evidently Sarnia reached the point of complete pollution and so the OWRC had to move in and had to order the job to be done.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Nonsense!

Mr. Knox: Mr. Chairman, I object to that.

Mr. S. Lewis: Total pollution.

Mr. Young: Yes, total pollution, or something like this.

Well, then, Mr. Chairman, may I ask someone at what point the OWRC has the power to move in and do what they did in Sarnia? Could the hon. Minister enlighten us on this, if I ask him the question? Then I will complete what I have to say in a very few minutes.

Mr. McKeough: Would you complete the question?

Mr. Young: The question is: My hon. friend mentioned that the OWRC had the power to order certain work being done.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we have.

Mr. Young: In the case of Penetang where it was ordered, but the OMB said no. In this case, evidently it was ordered. Now my question is: At what point can the OWRC move in and make this order?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand that there was no order at Penetang, but the OWRC has the power to order.

Mr. Young: All right. Then the OWRC has the power to order at any stage. All right, then I stand corrected and I appreciate getting that information. But it seems to me with the kind of information I have placed before this House tonight, that orders ought to be given in many instances where they are not given. Why are they not given? Is it because this government has not yet made it possible?

Mr. McKeough: Read tomorrow's Globe and Mail and find out.

Mr. Young: Good, we will have the information tomorrow. But the fact is that, right across this province, pollution is taking place, our streams are being fouled, and the wastes in the bottom of our lakes are being built up.

An hon. member: What about Toronto?

Mr. Young: Toronto, too. All right, I am not excluding Toronto, and you insist on nattering about Toronto; fine. How many times does one have to tell a member that we agree with him before he understands it? But the fact is that across this province, in stream after stream and lake after lake, we are facing a pollution problem which demands action; and if the OWRC has power to move in and say, "Act now" before this pollution gets far worse, then I say that the OWRC ought to move in.

An hon. member: They do.

Mr. Young: My feeling was that perhaps it was lack of backing on the part of this provincial government, and lack of financial resources being made available; so what has happened here tonight is that my hon. friends are now placing the blame directly on the OWRC. That is where it belongs then, and I am glad to be enlightened; and so my charitable feelings about the OWRC are changing at this point. My suggestion is that they should immediately tackle this job, that they should begin to move in on these situations, that more orders ought to be made, and that we should reverse this trend; and perhaps, in a matter of a decade or so, we will once more find pure water in our rivers and lakes, if action is taken.

The fact is—in spite of what is being done, in spite of what all my friends are saying over here to my left—that pollution is increasing in the lakes. Pollution is increasing in our rivers and we are not catching up with the job that has to be done.

So let us say tonight to our friends on the Ontario water resources commission, since my hon. friends to the left insist it is they who are responsible, I say to them that they have their mandate tonight, from this House, to go out and order these municipalities and these industries to clean up the situation and do the job that needs to be done. If this is the case, then let us have action and let us have it fast.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, may I reply, or would you like to go ahead, sir?

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Oh, it is all right. If you are going to reply, I would be glad to hear it. We have not had many answers to questions from the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is not what the North Bay Nugget says.

Mr. Chairman, after listening to the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Yorkview, I first thought the way they started out, that they were going to agree with the government and admit—and I believe they did partly admit—that the OWRC is doing a good job and has done a good job in the province of Ontario.

I would like to remind the hon. members opposite that the OWRC has only been actively engaged in this work for eight years and I just heard the hon. member for Yorkview say that pollution was on the increase in the province of Ontario. I think, sir, that statement is wrong; and I think, if you go any place in the province of Ontario, they will prove it wrong, because you have no figures to substantiate such a statement.

Mr. Young: I just have the words—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You just have the words you have been reading, and you have not been across Ontario to see what is happening, because I can take you to many places where water was polluted eight years ago, and it is pure water for drinking, swimming, or whatever you want, today.

Mr. Young: I can take you to—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I would also like to—

Mr. Thompson: Do you have the figures? Do you actually have figures?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I said I could take you to many places in the province of Ontario where water was polluted eight years ago, and it is pure for drinking or swimming today.

Mr. Thompson: Well, surely, sir, it is not like a picnic. You are not treating this really serious problem like a picnic tour?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We are talking about pollution.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, do you know from figures that it is not on the increase, from research?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Certainly we know. If you want to check on it, they can prove it.

Mr. Thompson: Will you show us?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I must say, to the hon. members opposite, that the Great Lakes are bordered by many states, as you know; and I think that they would agree with me that perhaps we, in Ontario, have done a better job than the other states surrounding the Great Lakes, as far as cleaning up pollution is concerned. I do not think you should look to Ontario and Ontario only, when you speak of pollution in the Great Lakes.

The hon. leader of the Opposition is a great man for research. He is always talking about research, and I will admit that research is something, but research is not the answer to everything. I think he overplays that once in a while. I would say that as far as the OWRC is concerned, we have only had a research division for one year. We are just getting it underway, and if he will look in the estimates of this year he will see that we have doubled our estimate for research, and at the present time we have a four-point programme.

The research division is engaged in applied research. The staff of the commission is continually studying research that is being carried out elsewhere. Each division is carrying out a certain amount of research work specifically connected with its own field of activity, and industry, other government agencies and equipment manufacturers and suppliers are continually doing research work. The commission keeps abreast of these developments.

I think if we took the total of those programmes altogether and if we took what industry, other government agencies, equipment manufacturers and those other people are doing we would find that a lot is being done in research as far as pollution is concerned in the province of Ontario.

Both hon. members have spoken about industrial wastes and I believe I understood the hon. leader of the Opposition to say that we seemed to be following one line of industrial waste, and that was from the pulp and paper mills. Did I understand you correctly, when I heard you say that we seemed to be following one line?

Mr. Thompson: No, sir. I noticed that the report by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin implied that the commission was getting reports from the paper and pulp industry every year. He said this was one group that he had studied, and I was suggesting that since the commission had mentioned there were 1,400 industrial groups, this was really just a small approach to the problem, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: There are 1,400 different industries, not industrial groups.

I could give you some figures as to what the pulp and paper industry is doing to clean up its waste. I might just quote a few here.

Mr. Thompson: He did.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Did he quote them in detail? I do not think so.

Mr. Root: I just made an overall comment that the industries were spending millions of dollars. I did mention the steel industry, the petroleum industry and many industries, and I said that we are setting standards for all industries.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes. Well, I will not go into detail on them, but we are, as the vice-chairman has just said, working with all industries in the province of Ontario. In fact, I think most of the industries were contacted by members of the OWRC during the past year. The hon. member opposite has mentioned that we have a five-year programme, and the OWRC feels that if industry will co-operate and can clean up its industrial wastes within five years, that would be an excellent job. I think he agrees with me that we would hate to issue an order and actually close a mill down or make it close down production and put people out of work, to clean up the pollution.

I take from his remarks that the hon. member for Yorkview would issue the order regardless of whether the industry closed or it was a hardship on the municipality, just to get it cleaned up. It does not matter what happens; let us do it today and then we will start when it is cleaned up and will go on from there—this is what I took from his closing remarks.

The hon. member for Yorkview was reading from a report of the OWRC, and it was nice to hear him reading from some of these reports. The hon. leader of the Opposition was doing the same.

Mr. Thompson: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You were reading from the annual report.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, is there anything wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised, and I think you would agree with this remark, that the staff of the OWRC is actively engaged all the time in following up these recommendations. Surely it would not make the recommendations unless it were following them up. Although we agree on this side that there is much to be done in water pollution in the province of Ontario, I would think that in eight years the progress that we have made and information that we have gathered and the manner in which we are continually expanding our programme, would make the hon. members of the Opposition agree that we have done a fairly good job. This year we are asking for more money so that we might improve our job in the following year.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. Minister that the OWRC is trying to do a good job. I know every hon. member in this House receives continuously the information service bulletins of the department, and as the hon. member for Yorkview pointed out, its recommendations, suggestions and so on. I am glad to note that the commission has the power to order. I should think also that if municipalities or industries do not do the job, the penalty should be exacted. They should be given a certain time to clean up the pollution and that is it.

The hon. Minister was pointing out places that were polluted years ago, and are now. I can take you also to a lake where there is a sewage plant right near the lake—Lake Nipissing. We used to be able to swim in that lake in the vicinity of the plant, but we cannot now. The board of health has banned swimming there; the city will not provide lifesaving equipment. I do not know why the pollution is there but it is worse than it was. It must be polluted because people are not allowed to swim.

The hon. member for Yorkview mentioned Elliot Lake. The OWRC, on November 13, 1964, sent out a bulletin which says that the commission and The Department of Health consider there is no immediate radioactive hazard to persons in the Elliot Lake area as a result of the uranium mill wastes which have found their way into some of the waters of the Serpent River watershed. The commission goes on to say, in an issued report in regard to the situation:

The OWRC and the provincial health department are more concerned with the possibilities of the long-term hazard which could develop.

Control measures have been carried out. We take necessary steps to ensure that adequate protection of the local water resources is effective.

I do not know just what the control measures are, but I also have in my possession here a letter which was sent out from the assistant general manager on January 28, 1965, to Mr. R. A. Giles, secretary-manager of the northern Ontario tourist association. His home is at Rutter. This letter to Mr. Giles says:

I wish to acknowledge your letter of January 23 concerning the reports of radioactivity in the Quirke Lake area of the Serpent River watershed.

The reason Mr. Giles got in touch with the commission is, as you know because as I mentioned, he is secretary-manager of the tourist association and since that is an association which covers all northern Ontario he is quite concerned about the Elliot Lake situation because it is also a tourist area. The letter goes on to say:

Radiological survey of Quirke Lake was carried out in 1963 by the Ontario water resources commission and a report submitted in May, 1964 to our association indicated that this lake had a radioactive content of approximately 40 picocuries per litre. The Ontario Department of Health has through the years been carrying on a monitoring programme of sampling which indicated agreement with the report prepared by the Ontario water resources commission.

The maximum standard indicated to the Ontario water resources commission through the years by The Department of Health has been 10 picocuries per litre.

You may or may not know that The Department of Health is the only organization with a laboratory that can carry out the determination in this particular field.

In that paragraph, Mr. Chairman, it said that in May, 1964, it indicated the lake had a radioactive content of approximately 40 picocuries per litre and that the maximum standard is 10. Does that mean that it is four times as dangerous then? The letter goes on:

I note from your letter that your organization requires information on this situation and what is being done to correct it.

I would first like to say something about the radiological contamination that has occurred and the information that we have obtained from experts of its effect on humans. Dr. L. B. Leopard, senior physicist of the radiation protection unit of The Department of Health, has indicated radioactive standards for water qualities set by The Ontario Department of Health is so strict that water polluted several times higher than the standards allowed would not be expected to produce any symptoms of illness even after a person had consumed it for years.

The opinion of all medical and radiological experts that we have consulted agree unanimously with Dr. Leopard that there is no harm in drinking water on a periodic basis. The danger might arise if one used the water continuously through a lifetime of 50 years at levels above those that are indicated for Quirke Lake. It was because of the long-term possibilities and the lack of immediate danger that the Ontario water resources commission was working quietly with the mines to achieve correction.

We were receiving co-operation and changes were being made in the operation of the tailings disposal system. One mine in particular, and one that is in relatively close proximity to Quirke Lake, has already reduced the amount of its discharge by 75 per cent and has built two dams to retain the reduced discharge. Other mines in the area are going forward with similar programmes. These changes are certain to effect a reduction in the radioactive content in the waters of Quirke Lake. Sampling in 1965 should show that trend.

Now the letter concludes:

I would like to point out that all experts that we have consulted have stressed the point that there is no harm from drinking the water of Quirke Lake on a periodic basis. As you will note from my letter, steps were being taken with the full co-operation of the mines to achieve an elimination of a long-term hazard.

It is regrettable that there was so much publicity about this matter as the correction could have been achieved without it.

And the letter is signed by the assistant general manager. Now I note it says "a periodic drinking of the water will not create any hazard." I just wonder what you mean by "periodic." People live near that area and live on that lake, or in the vicinity, or use the water that flows out of it. I am sure that they will be using it continuously. Is there any danger that those who live near that region would be affected?

I do not know what the reference is in the latter part:

As you will note from my letter steps are being taken with the fullest co-operation of the mines to achieve an elimination of the long hazard.

It is regrettable that there was so much publicity about this matter. The correction could have been achieved without it.

Mr. Chairman, I presume it refers to the publicity of last fall when this situation was in the public press. No one can blame the people of Elliot Lake for being concerned. They had enough disappointments and enough setbacks already and then when it was reported that there were radioactive elements in the water, one could not blame them for being very much concerned.

The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar) cannot be blamed for being concerned when it says in the hon. Minister's own information service bulletin:

Control measures are being carried out to take all necessary steps to ensure that adequate protection of the local water resources is affected.

Can the hon. Minister assure the House now that there is no possible immediate danger? While there may be a long-term hazard, I am not certain the hon. Minister can explain how serious it is when the radioactive content is 40 picocuries per litre considering the maximum standard indicated to the water resources commission had been 10 picocuries per litre. Does that mean that the radioactive content is four times as great or not?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that this water could be used for many years without any harmful effects.

I might explain to the hon. member that this is a problem we inherited. If we go back to its beginning we will find that it started at about the same time as Elliot Lake. It was back in the late war years. The hon. member knows when it started and why. At that time I doubt if we were putting too much stress on the tailings that were going out as we had another job on hand at that time.

There is a committee of the Ontario government working and studying this matter at the present time and I understand—although I have not seen any report yet—that it is the old dumps that are causing all our trouble. In order to get uranium when they needed it, and they needed it in a hurry, they were not too careful, I guess, as to how the dumps were sealed—or however they handled these dumps.

This committee, sir, is working and studying this matter and I expect that in due course they will report back to the government and whatever steps are necessary to remedy this situation will be taken.

Mr. Troy: Then I can assure not only the hon. members of the Opposition, but all hon. members of the House and the people of Elliot Lake and the people who will be going there, that there is no danger from drinking the water in that area.

It is quite a problem; probably nobody knew just what the problem was and what possible dangers might exist—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We were at war and we wanted this material—

Mr. Troy: That is right; but I do not know who the dickens we were at war with at that time—

An hon. member: With the Tories!

Mr. Troy: That was after Korea, I thought! I notice certain mines—Noranda for one I believe—are bringing certain tailings back into the mine and using them to fill up the stopes. I do not suppose—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: This could not be done with these tailings, these are different tailings that we are handling.

This is why it takes some study, and I understand that the committee went down to Colorado to see how they handle it. Evidently they have something there, they put the water through a process and can remove this material; but these things are only in the experimental stage yet. We are dealing with a different kind of mine tailing than those which are just refuse.

Mr. Troy: At least we have definite assurance then from the hon. Minister that there is no immediate, nor even long-term, danger in that area.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is right, sir.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, just along that line, does the committee of deputy Ministers report to this hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: They will report to the Ontario water resources commission and to the government.

Mr. Nixon: We were informed in the committee a few days ago that the Ontario water resources commission no longer had the responsibility for clearing up the problems of contamination by radioactivity in the Elliot Lake area.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is right, Mr. Chairman. We have the committee working on it. I think there is some federal responsibility here; but the committee is composed of a man from The Department of Health, one from our department and one each from The Department of Lands and Forests and The Department of Mines.

Mr. Nixon: Would you say that the committee has made all the trips that will be necessary and they are presently working on a report, or are they still making the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand that they are still investigating; I do not know whether that investigation is within Ontario. I have not heard them say that they were making any trips recently.

Mr. Nixon: Would the hon. Minister say then that in the realm of radioactivity it would not be the responsibility of the Ontario water resources commission to control any pollution?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: As I explained to the hon. member for Nipissing, this is a matter that came about through the federal government going in there to get uranium for the purposes for which you know some of it was used. Now at that time, for some reason, between the Ontario government and the federal government, nobody was worrying about whose responsibility it was for pollution caused by this mine. This is one of the things being sorted out by the committee, and whatever steps need to be taken to remedy this condition—

Mr. Nixon: Yes, but right now the Ontario water resources commission evidently does not have the responsibility. We in this province are building two nuclear-powered electricity plants and if it is not the policy for this commission to control any effluent from those plants then who would have that responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Any effluent from the nuclear plants will be the responsibility of Hydro, and this will never get out in the streams because it is contained right within the plant.

Mr. Nixon: So that in the special case of Hydro, which, in fact, is another industry in the province, the water resources commission will have no direct control over the effluent from those plants. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: There will be no effluent from the plant.

Mr. Troy: Since the water resources commission does not have any laboratory—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Has not what?

Mr. Troy: Has not a laboratory.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Who said they had not?

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister's general manager.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The hon. member is talking about a radiation laboratory, that is different.

Mr. Troy: Let me finish, sir.

The hon. Minister may or may not know that The Department of Health is the only organization with a laboratory to carry out a proper examination in this particular field, so there must be constant co-operation and harmony between the two departments then.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I would hope that there would be good relationship between two departments of this government; in fact, there is good relationship between all departments of this government.

I am instructed by the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) that they have a new modern laboratory on Christie Street that will take care of this problem.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, it seems that I do not get into these debates until late in the night and I would like very much to hear the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) say that he is going to call it off for the night.

I will have quite a lot to say about this. I think it is a most interesting subject and I think that one should take part in this debate.

I get up annually on the same subject and if I appear to be picking on some of the Ministers' departments, I do not want to give anybody that impression. I would like to relate some facts to the House though.

I have no quarrel with the water resources report that the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin read off. It gives the facts of what they have done up to this point. I have been fortunate enough to have been with not only the hon. member of that water resources commission, but the hon. Prime Minister himself when they opened the large plant in Niagara Falls, the sewage disposal plant, on which they spent some $5 million.

Coming down the river, though, getting back to Lake Erie from Crystal Beach, they have a small unit which was possibly one of the first sewage disposal units in the province of Ontario. They are compelled, I think, to add an addition to that one, or they are doing something about it. Not too long ago, the member of the water resources commission was also at Fort Erie when they opened their new plant there.

What I am trying to draw to your attention is that they have this water that flows down the Niagara River, and I realize that on the American side they have many more industries than we do and maybe the pollution on the east side of the water, for want of better direction, is much greater than it is along the Canadian shore. But back in 1921 they changed the flow of the Welland River, better known as the Chippawa Creek, for power purposes so this water would come down the river, go on to the falls and the Welland River would flow into the Niagara. They changed the course of that for about two miles and took it down to Sir Adam Beck power plant No. 1. With the flow of the water coming in off the Niagara River into the Chippawa Creek down to the Queenston power house. That particular area had pure water—green or blue, call it what you like, but it was beautiful, until two years ago. Then the power people decided to block the man-made canal off and let the water flow naturally back into the Niagara River. Immediately they did this, they found that they had flowing through the village of Chippawa—instead of the fresh water emptying into the Niagara River—polluted water that came down from industries and from my hon. friend's (Mr. Morningstar's) riding, the city of Welland. In many instances, we have raw sewage flowing down that river past this particular village.

Last summer they blocked the water off to repair the old canal and in so doing they have polluted these waters where people have been swimming and fishing for many years. This year they are repeating the same performance. Through the winter months, apparently they could not work, so now they are going to do it again this summer.

What I am trying to draw to your attention is that here we have an isolated area in which we know where the pollution comes from. I have had a chat with the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, and he did say that the city of Welland had a problem financially. It has an intersection of waterways and it is to build quite an elaborate unit there, but it is polluting the waters. Regardless of whether they come to Chippawa and over the falls or whether they go through the canal, they go through the county of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch)—he is not here—and they flow down to Niagara-on-the-Lake and the waters there are polluted.

I am wondering when this government, and I think it is a fair question, is going to do something about that particular problem, with which it is so well acquainted. Are there plans to eliminate this pollution, or will we have to put up with two more seasons of pollution in an area of water where it does not have to be, but where, because of the change of the flow of water, this condition comes about?

Regardless of whether the authorities change it or not, there is still pollution in that area, and I think that if the water resources commission has the authority to compel someone to do a job on it, I think this is the time to pick it up. I would like to say more about it, but I would like the hon. Minister's answer, if he has it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Would you like me to answer that question?

Mr. Bukator: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised that the sewers are being installed in Welland at this time and that a contract will be let for a secondary treatment sewage plant within the next three months.

Mr. Bukator: Then no doubt we will have to contend with this change of flow for one more season. In the following year they can eliminate it there?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised that it should be completed and in operation by 1967.

Mr. Bukator: It sounds very good. Thank you.

The other question I would like to—

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): I might say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to that, the city of Welland is spending around $8 million on the treatment plant and the sanitary sewers in the hopes that this pollution in the Welland River will be cleaned up.

Mr. McKeough: Are you lending them the money?

Mr. Morningstar: Some of it.

Mr. Bukator: I may draw to the attention of the hon. member who spoke last that we are both former wardens of the county of Welland, and just beyond the county court house and the county buildings there is a little swimming pool that the youngsters enjoy. The pool filters its own water, but you can look just beyond the walls and you see the raw sewage floating about. There is a lovely swimming area there, created behind an old wall; the hon. member for Welland knows that. The operators filter the water and the youngsters swim in this. It is a kind of natural pool. But beyond that the raw sewage is floating around in that particular canal and it flows on eventually down into the Niagara River. This should be eliminated. I am glad to hear that you are spending some money.

But I would like to get a question or two answered here. The association of Welland county conservation clubs sent a letter to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) and it says:

During the past ten years there has been a steady decline of catches of walleye in the eastern end of Lake Erie off the shore of Welland county by the commercial fishermen and anglers alike.

I realize this is a problem for the department handling game and fisheries, but I have found that in this House one can make quite a few miles politically by reading clippings out of papers. I have become accustomed to some of these methods that are used, but I am not going to read the whole thing, Mr. Minister, I will just read one paragraph.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Do not stoop to that; you are a better debater than that.

Mr. Bukator: I would like to read this, because these are facts, apparently from Dr. Langford:

The algae thrive on pollutants and pollutants are being poured into the Great Lakes at an alarming rate. Dr. Langford said that recent estimates showed that 400 barrels of oil were poured into the Detroit River every day.

I am just wondering if this is so.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: In the Detroit River?

Mr. Bukator: Yes. I am just wondering how that comes about. Is that true? Does someone have the answer to that? It is most interesting.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, we do not have an answer for it. I think the only proof that we would have here, is what we read in the paper. I do not know how you estimate whether 400 barrels or 1,400 barrels are in the river. Even a little bit of oil can make itself seen on the water.

Mr. Bukator: I was amazed to read this account. No doubt your people are looking into it. This could be the reason why so many of the fish are dying off in the lakes, because of the oil that is spilled on the waters. But it just boils down to the thing we have been talking about here all night. Pollution is a very serious problem to this province and I am sure the water resources commission is doing what it can, but these two or three instances that I have brought to your attention are things that are annoying to our people and I am hoping that very soon this matter will be cleared up.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on what my hon. colleague here has mentioned about Lake Erie, and also the remarks of the hon. Minister in regard to pollution in Lake Erie. I was glad to hear him say that he set up a research branch in his department, and he has left the impression with me this evening that pollution is not getting any worse in this province, or in the Great Lakes. But the part where I come from borders on the shores of Lake Erie, and it is hard to leave the impression with me that pollution is not getting worse, because on the shores of Lake Erie this year, for the first time, we had signs saying: "Swim at your own risk; water polluted."

We also learn about the disappearance of different species of fish from Lake Erie. We have mink ranchers in southwestern Ontario who were putting scraps of fish caught in Lake Erie in their mink food, and those who were feeding this scrap mixed in along with other meats had a tremendous loss of the young mink last year. They practically lost all the young, and at that time I contacted the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests and he sent his officials down there and took samples of this food. It contained perch, or other fish that were caught in Lake Erie. The officials took samples of it and sent it away to have it analyzed, but we have no results of what they have found in the tests yet. However, mink ranchers who mixed fish which came from the Maritimes with the meat and fed it to the mink, did not have a loss. This left the impression that the Lake Erie fish scraps which were mixed in with the mink feed were poisoned or diseased, because they caused a considerable loss to the mink farmers.

I have an article here from the Sault Ste. Marie newspaper which says "Old Age Hits Lake Erie." It is from the Daily Star, January 2, 1965, and says:

Two thousand square miles of Lake Erie are dead. Water has been polluted by a combination of salts, phosphates, nitrates, potash, mixed with organic material. That has caused the loss—to nourish algae in the lake.

At Lake Erie we have a dramatic, devastating effect of water pollution. We all know the results—beaches closed to tourists, fishing grounds lost to the commercial fishermen, and the resulting loss to the economy surrounding the lakes.

This is of concern to those of us who live along the shores of Lake Erie, and it appears to us as if the pollution is getting worse. I hope the hon. Minister with his new research branch makes a study to see what can be the solution.

We know some of our towns have no sewage systems. As the hon. member for Yorkview said, you practically must have the Ontario water resources commission force these towns to put in sewage systems. But one of the problems is money, Mr. Chairman. I know every town and village in our part of the province would be glad to have a sewage system, but one of the problems is finances. The debenture debt has reached a saturation point. Perhaps we will have to take another look at this whole situation in order to stop this pollution, to stop some of the things that are polluting our waters in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has mentioned Lake Erie, and of course when I said we had made great strides in cleaning up pollution in Ontario I was not referring altogether to Lake Erie. We know there is a problem and of course if the hon. member looks at some of the IJC reports—international joint commission reports—he will find that we are getting a lot of pollution in Lake Erie from Detroit, Toledo, Buffalo and many other areas.

Now the hon. member said there were towns and villages in his area that would like to have sewage disposal plants. Are there many of those along Lake Erie that are causing much pollution as far as Lake Erie is concerned?

Mr. Spence: I would not say so, Mr. Chairman. Of course no doubt some of the sewage does get into Lake Erie, but I would say not too much.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised too that the international joint commission has now a reference to study pollution in Lakes Erie and Ontario and the St. Lawrence River.

Algae was mentioned several times this evening. I just got this interesting note, and this is something I had never known before, that there have been algae blooms in the western end of Lake Erie since the first settlers came to the area. Now I cannot prove that, but perhaps the man who wrote me the note could.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: There are some there, too, I do not know where it came from, whether it came with the Indians or before.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like to take third readings, and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor will be standing by to give Royal Assent to bills which have passed third reading; we will then resume the estimates of this department.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.05 of the clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Wednesday, April 14, 1965

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Wednesday, April 14, 1965

Ontario Municipal Board Act, bill to amend, Mr. Spooner, first reading	2248
Registry Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2248
Land Titles Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2248
Partnerships Registration Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2248
Limited Partnerships Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2249
Establishment and operation of the centennial centre of science and technology, bill to provide for, Mr. Auld, first reading	2249
Statement re annual conference on addictions, Mr. Grossman	2249
Tabling answers to questions on the order paper, Mr. Robarts	2249
Tabling annual report, Ontario council for the arts, Mr. Davis	2252
Third readings	2252
Royal Assent to certain bills, the Lieutenant-Governor	2257
Estimates, Department of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Simonett, continued	2259
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2280

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome as guests to the Legislature today students from the following schools: In the west gallery, St. Mary's separate school, Toronto, and Deer Park public school, Toronto; and in the east gallery, Earl Haig secondary school, Willowdale.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka) from the committee on privileges and elections presented the committee's report, which was read as follows and adopted:

The committee recommends to the House that the report of the special commission on redistribution of electoral districts in Ontario be referred back to that commission in order that the commission may give consideration to submissions relating to electoral district boundaries made by interested persons or to be made by such persons during such period as the commission may prescribe; in considering such submissions the commission also consider population trends and up-to-date population figures and to report to the legislative assembly at the next session thereof.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, the motion for the report was made by myself, and it seems to me that one part of the motion was left out of the report. I feel that it should be included; that was where the commission found it necessary to make changes during their reconsideration, that the submission that justifies the changes be added as part of the commission's final report to the House.

I would ask that that be recorded and that if the committee members agree, that could be part of the report.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I think I might point out that it is customary in presenting reports to this House on the part of select committees, Royal commissions or commissions of this House, that submissions made to any commission are listed as a part of its report. I presume that this commission in its wisdom may decide to list such submissions as it may receive.

I think, therefore, that it is hardly necessary for us to instruct the commission in this respect, since the fact that the words are not in this motion does not inhibit the commission from listing submissions in the normal, customary way.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, this then leads me to a slight criticism of the procedure of the committee. We, of course, followed the usual procedure as the committee convened to elect a chairman. In this particular case there was no secretary elected or appointed to keep track of the procedure of the committee and subsequently the chairman took it upon himself to act as both chairman and secretary. I agree that this is a most difficult thing to do, to act as chairman of the committee, of a large group, and to keep track of the proceedings and the minutes of that particular committee.

I do think that this kind of report deserves pretty special attention. This should be made as part of the report because if we are going to send the redistribution report back to the commission, which we all felt was a fair way to handle it, then we would like to know on what justification any changes in any boundaries were made.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): The motion which formed the substance of this report was written down by the chairman, and was read by the chairman to the committee. The hon. member for Wentworth East voted for that motion. While he may have been confused at the time, he may not have understood, he was the only one on the committee who did not understand it. Certainly all other members from both other parties were entirely familiar with the content and the purport of that motion.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I really do not think that is an adequate explanation. The motion, as I understand it—

I was not present, I am merely going on what I hear now—but according to what the hon. member for Wentworth East has said the motion that was voted on was a motion moved by him. I would assume that he knows what is in his own motion. It seems to me rather unusual that a report should not be strictly based on the motions that were adopted.

Mr. White: There were three motions on the floor.

Mr. Bryden: Well, all right, I think the text of the motion should become the report, that it should not subsequently be revised, even if in perfect good faith in line with the chairman's ideas of what is the best procedure. I think that the text of the motion should have become part of the report and been before this House.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this appears to be a procedural matter and I think everyone is pretty much agreed on what the committee wants to report. I would suggest this report be taken back to the committee so the committee itself can come to full agreement on the report to be brought back here.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until three of the clock on Tuesday, April 27.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to amend three sections of the present Act. The first is to provide that the approval of the municipal board is not required for contracts entered into by district assessors. Another amendment is to clarify a section of the Act with respect to bylaws passed by municipal councils. The third amendment is to reduce the period of time in which an appeal may be entered to the Lieutenant-Governor in council in connection with any order or decision of the board.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): What is the reduction?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: From 60 days to 28 days.

THE REGISTRY ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Registry Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, a brief explanation of the purpose of the bill: It is to clarify certain procedures in the registry offices under The Registry Act, particularly with respect to such things as amalgamation and annexation orders, and to complement a bill which is at present before the House effecting a new system of registration of regional grants from the Crown under The Public Lands Act and orders under The Quieting Titles Act and matters which relate to judges' plans.

THE LAND TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Land Titles Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is just one effective amending section of this Act to bring it in line with The Public Lands Act, now providing for registration of an original grant from the Crown and providing that the master of titles shall register such grant.

THE PARTNERSHIPS REGISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the registration of a partnership declaration where the partnership has extended out of one registry division and is carrying on business in another division, or other divisions, so that the provisions of the present Act requiring registration wherever the business is carried on shall be effective in the new areas.

THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Limited Partnerships Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This amendment to The Limited Partnerships Act is complementary to The Partnerships Registration Act amendment introduced a moment ago.

CENTENNIAL CENTRE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of the centennial centre of science and technology.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the operation of the centennial centre of science and technology.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to announce that arrangements have now been completed for our second annual conference on addictions, which is to be held at the Alex G. Brown memorial clinic, Mimico, on Thursday and Friday, April 29 and 30.

This conference is being presented in order to provide an interchange of ideas and methods and to present current research to those who are interested in the rehabilitation of persons addicted to alcohol, narcotics or barbiturates.

Many eminent specialists will be participating in this conference, including two visiting speakers from the United States, Mrs. Marty Mann, founder and executive director of the national council on alcoholism in New York, and Mr. Robert Jones, assistant director of the summer school of alcohol studies at Rutgers University.

Papers will be given by Canadian specialists in this field: Dr. J. S. Olin, who is a medical research associate at the alcoholism and drug addiction research foundation, and Dr. Gordon Bell, who, besides being medical director of the Bell clinic, is a consultant psychiatrist with our department.

Psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, chaplains and rehabilitation officers from our own department will be presenting papers and participating in panels.

Invitations have been extended to agencies and societies working in the field of addictions, as well as police departments, magistrates, probation services and university and Department of Education workers in this field.

Last year, when announcing this conference, I indicated that I hoped it would be the first of many. The 1964 conference proved to be very successful in assisting the interchange of ideas and it further cemented existing co-operation between those working in many branches of this field.

Its success was such, that both from within and outside the department there has been a definite interest in making this an annual affair.

I extend an invitation to all hon. members who are interested in these problems to spend as much time as they can spare at this conference. I am sure that those who can attend will find it most worthwhile.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship) begs leave to present to the House the following reports:

1. Report of the public service superannuation board for the year ended March 31, 1964.
2. Report of the provincial auditor on the public service superannuation fund for the year ended March 31, 1964.
3. Report of the provincial auditor on the public service retirement fund for the year ended March 31, 1964.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to table the answers to questions 8, 20, 52, 81, 93, 109 and 110.

The hon. Prime Minister tabled answers to questions as follows:

8. Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Inquiry of the Ministry: (a) Has the Attorney General, or any of the officials of his department, received any written or oral complaints concerning the activities of Magistrate Dnieper as a magistrate since his appointment? (b) If so, how many such complaints have been received? (c) If so, what generally has been the nature of such complaints? (d) If so, have any such complaints been received from the law society of Upper Canada, any legal organization in the province of Ontario, or any police body? (e) If so, what action, if any, has the Attorney General taken, or does he propose to take in the future, in connection will such complaints?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

- (a) Yes.
- (b) Seven.
- (c) Critical comments of the magistrate during court proceedings.
- (d) Yes.
- (e) The complaints have been drawn to the attention of the chief magistrate and the magistrate concerned.

20. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: Will the Attorney General advise if there is any conflict of interest in the continuance in office as head of the Upper Thames river conservation board of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Pittock) while he continues to sit as a member of this Legislature?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

The hon. member has resigned as head of the Upper Thames river conservation authority and the question is now redundant.

52. Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Inquiry of the Ministry: 1. Will the hon. Prime Minister inform the Legislature of the complement of the Ontario northland transportation commission, indicating also the offices they hold on the commission, their salaries and emoluments, and their places of residence? 2. With the present development in the mining industry in northeastern Ontario and the possibility of other major discoveries following the planned airborne magnetometer survey this year, has the Cabinet taken any steps, or will it take any steps, to instruct the commission of the Ontario northland transportation system to conduct further feasibility studies of a branch line from North Bay to a terminal port on Georgian Bay? 3. (a) What is the mileage of the spur line to service the Adams Mine; (b) what was the cost to the commission of this line? 4. (a) What is the mileage of the projected spur line to service the Texas Gulf property in Kidd township; (b) will the commission assume the cost of building this line; and (c) what is the estimated cost? 5. Since the mining companies concerned have decided to proceed with the development of the iron ore resources at Temagami: (a) will the Ontario northland transportation commission assume the cost of building a spur line to the properties; and (b) what is the estimated cost of such a branch line? 6. (a) What is the policy of the Cabinet in relation to the location of smelters to process ores produced in northeastern Ontario; and

(b) when may we expect an announcement regarding the location of a smelter for the Texas Gulf ores?

Answer by the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett):

1. W. A. Johnston, chairman, South River, $9,000 per year; R. Brunelle, commissioner, Moonbeam, $2,000 per year; J. A. Kennedy, commissioner, North Bay, $2,000 per year; W. R. Thompson, commissioner and industrial commissioner, Swastika, $2,000 per year and $4,000 per year.

2. At the present time no requests have been made for movement of any large rail traffic to a Georgian port. The projected iron ore movement from Temagami involves a Hamilton, Ontario, destination. This obviously will go by rail from the mine. Since no decision has apparently been made on shipments from Texas Gulf sulphur mine at Timmins, no decision regarding the Ontario Northland Railway extension for this purpose can be considered at this time. The Ontario northland transportation commission is prepared to study feasibility of any branch lines as the occasion requires.

3. (a) 4.8 miles; (b) $1,400,000.

4. (a) 16.1 miles; (b) This is at present under study and no comment is possible; (c) $3,000,000.

5. (a) This is presently under study and no comment is possible; (b) $1,000,000—engineering cost not yet determined, but this estimate based on a spur four miles in length at cost of $250,000 per mile.

81. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: Will the Attorney General advise: (a) what was the total cost to the province of Ontario of the shelter promotion programme; (b) the total cost of the province of Ontario for construction of any shelters that were built; (c) what expenditures are planned for the current year in regard to a home shelter programme?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) There is no provincial financial assistance programme for the building of shelters.

(b) $5,000 for the building of demonstration units.

(c) None except for postage for the distribution of federal literature.

Note: The fallout shelter programme is entirely carried on by the federal government. Provincial emergency measures organizations assist the federal government in the distribution of information material relating to such programme.

93. Mr. Singer: Inquiry of the Ministry: Will the Attorney General advise: (a) how many local police forces were evaluated by the Ontario police commission in the year 1964; (b) at whose request was each of these evaluations made; (c) if the Ontario police commission investigated and evaluated any local force: (i) how many such forces did it investigate on its own initiative, (ii) with the consent of the municipal authority; (iii) without the consent of the municipal authority; (d) how many recommendations has the Ontario police commission made to municipal authorities as a result of such investigations; (e) how many such recommendations have been carried out; (f) where such recommendations have not been carried out, does he intend to take any further action in regard thereto; (g) if so, what action does he intend to take?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

(a) 182.

(b) Two at the request of the boards of commissioners of police; two at the request of chief constables; 19 at the request of municipal authority; 159 at own initiative of the Ontario police commission.

(c) (i) 159; (ii) No consent of municipal authority required (Section 39b (d) of The Police Act); (iii) 159.

(d) Many recommendations were made as the result of the surveys conducted, the major recommendations being as follows:

Additional police personnel, to provide adequate policing. Revision of duty schedules. Permit chief constable to attend police college at Aylmer. Permit police personnel to attend police college at Aylmer. Police education to be continued by in-service training. "Rules and Regulations" to be compiled for local use.

Additional clerical staff. Improvements in local telephone service to police department. Improvement in compilation and maintenance of records. Compulsory instruction and practice in use of revolver. Additional mobile and radio equipment. Purchase and use of radar equipment. Amalgamation with other area police departments.

Identification of police cruisers. Additional supervisory personnel. Formula for promotion of police personnel (written examination). Uniform system of indexing and filing of police records. Boards of commissioners be constituted. Educational tests for all applicants. Enlarged accommodation and new buildings where required.

Revision of salary schedules. Compliance with provisions of The Police Act when recruits are appointed. Proper reporting by chief constable to police committee or council.

In addition to the many recommendations made to the various police departments, the Ontario police commission provided assistance to five municipalities in their selection for appointment of applicants to the position of chief constable.

Surveys with recommendation for amalgamation with other area forces were made in the case of 17 local departments in various parts of the province.

(e) Will be determined when return visits are made by advisers to the municipalities concerned.

(f) Discussions will be held with municipal officials and police governing authorities with a view to the implementation of any recommendations so made.

(g) One of the many functions of the Ontario police commission is to provide to boards of commissioners of police, police committees of municipal councils, other police authorities and chief constables, information and advice respecting all aspects of police and policing calculated to assist in the management and operation of police forces. The provisions of the statute are being met by the recommendations made.

109. Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Inquiry of the Ministry: Is it planned to use the Ontario Northland Railway to assist the regional development of northeastern Ontario by: (a) reducing incoming freight rates on primary products such as gasoline, fertilizer, seed, etc.; (b) providing preferential freight rates to northern farmers for the shipment of agricultural products to the metropolitan areas; (c) promoting tourism through special northern excursions and by direct assistance for the development and use of ski tows and ice fishing?

Answer by the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

1. (a) At the moment, there is no reduction in freight rates contemplated. Second, the Ontario Northland Railway is not in a position to reduce freight rates from southern Ontario to northern Ontario without first consulting with the Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and other rail carriers concerned. All rates involving traffic originating outside of the territory served by the Ontario Northland and destined to its area, must be negotiated with its connections.

For several years the Ontario Northland has participated with the other rail carriers in providing a reduced rate on limestone for agricultural purposes in line with The Ontario Department of Agriculture limestone freight assistance policy to farmers.

Negotiations are under way between the major oil companies and the railway for adjustment in petroleum products rates.

(b) There is no planned reduction in freight rates under consideration at the present time. There are no applications for adjustment pending, and if an application was received, it would have to be negotiated with Ontario Northland connections, the same as outlined in (a) in the reverse direction.

To assist the northern producers of seed, rates have been published from New Liskeard, Ontario, to several stations in eastern Canada. Within the past six months, the Ontario Northland has negotiated reduced rates on hay from several hay producing points on its line to stations in southern and eastern Ontario.

When transportation is a problem, the Ontario Northland has always endeavoured to provide rates that will assist in the movement of commodities from its territory to destinations on its connecting lines.

(c) In the promotion of tourism to northern Ontario, Ontario northland transportation commission has undertaken the following:

Paid advertising and prepared articles for publication in various tourist guide books and other pertinent publications.

Preparation of a number of brochures, pamphlets and posters which are being distributed at border crossing points, sportsmen's shows, the Canadian National Exhibition, chamber of commerce information booths, and so on.

Servicing in detail of some 5,000 inquiries by mail annually.

Operation of boat-line excursions on Lake Nipissing and Lake Temagami at a deficit in order that these may serve as regional tourist attractions.

Liaison with chambers of commerce, regional tourist associations, and agencies of the Ontario and Canadian governments on tourist development projects.

Establishment of package tours retailed through travel agencies and other outlets for holiday trips through the north country by winter or summer.

Operation of a tourist guest lodge at Moosonee; operation of a hunting camp on James Bay.

Operation of special excursion trains returning the same day, between Cochrane and Moosonee. Two were operated in 1964 with marked success. It is planned to operate such an excursion each Sunday from June 27 to September 5 inclusive in 1965. It is planned to establish package tours from Toronto and other points in conjunction with this and the boat cruises.

Liaison with other rail and bus lines to develop individual and group movements of tourists into northern Ontario.

Establishment of a red, white and blue fare plan which incorporates a marked reduction in rail fares for the encouragement of greater passenger travel.

Ice fishing: Opening of boat-line buildings and office for use by the Temagami winter carnival committee in the operation of its fishing derby. Participation by Ontario Northland personnel in the planning and operation of this event.

Establishment of a package plan for skiers from southern Ontario for skiing in the Kirkland Lake area. This particular promotion has begun within the past month and some traffic is starting to move. The commission underwrote travel expenses for a party of eight prominent Ontario skiers on a familiarization tour from Toronto to Kirkland Lake in February. Favourable publicity has resulted from this.

110. Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Inquiry of the Ministry: What was the total cost of the Hagey committee up to and including the publication of its report?

Answer by the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond):

$128,011.95.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education) begs leave to table the first annual report of the province of Ontario council for the arts.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill No. 23, An Act to amend The Loggers' Safety Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 24, An Act respecting the water powers of the Ottawa River.

Bill No. 25, The Training Schools Act, 1965.

Bill No. 27, An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Bill No. 28, An Act to amend The Marriage Act.

Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Ontario Human Rights Code.

Bill No. 35, The Operating Engineers Act, 1965.

Bill No. 41, An Act to provide for the settlement by arbitration of labour disputes in hospitals.

Bill No. 42, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Bill No. 43, An Act to amend The Public Lands Act.

On Bill No. 45, An Act to amend The Expropriation Procedures Act:

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two on this bill, An Act to amend The Expropriation Procedures Act.

In the explanatory notes, it says it is an informal, inexpensive procedure in cases where the owners of lands expropriated, and the expropriating authorities, are unable to agree to the amount of compensation. Mr. Speaker, I might say to the hon. Minister that I think this a step forward, but the hon. Minister does not include The Drainage Act under this amendment.

In southwestern Ontario we have many large drains and many small drains along municipal, township and county roads, and when drains are partitioned to be repaired it has been the policy of many municipalities to have these drains moved over on to adjoining land. The hon. Minister will say the property owner has a right to appeal The Drainage Act at the court of revision. He also has a right to appeal to the referee. After that, Mr. Speaker, he has to enter into litigation against the municipality if he is not satisfied with the compensation, and I must say the onus falls on him.

But in this Act the onus falls on the expropriating authority. I think this would be a great help to those in the rural areas where drains are being moved over on land, and it would be inexpensive. It would be a step forward for The Drainage Act. I wonder if the hon. Minister could inform me why The Drainage Act was not included in this amendment.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I think I can enlarge to some extent upon the explanatory note. The omission of The Drainage Act is provided for in section 1, which provides:

This Act does not apply to the use of or injury to land authorized under The Drainage Act 1962-1963 for the purposes of a drainage works constructed under that Act, nor to any proceedings in connection therewith.

Then in the explanatory note it is stated that:

Procedures for the payment of compensation and appeals, etc., are provided for in The Drainage Act 1962-1963 with respect of lands used for or injured by a drainage works.

Then it indicates that The Drainage Act and proceedings under The Drainage Act are not covered by this Expropriation Procedures Act.

Generally speaking, I think it is fair to say that in drainage matters the land itself is seldom if ever taken. Rights over land, easements as it were, are necessary. That is one consideration.

Then, as the explanatory note points out, there are special procedures set forth in The Drainage Act for compensation for the settlement of matters in dispute, for arbitration, for appeals, and so on. It was thought—and this was very thoroughly considered—it was thought that this Act of expropriation procedures should not interfere with or take over those procedures which I think work quite well and are provided for in the present Drainage Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, we have already opposed Bill No. 45—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, no extensive debate is permitted on third reading.

Mr. Speaker: The members may discuss the bill on third reading.

Mr. Singer: Certainly. If the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests would like the exact reference—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: May I make the point?

I submit, sir, if there is to be any discussion on third reading it must be by way of a motion to defer for six months the third reading and not in general discussion.

Mr. Singer: With the greatest respect to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests I will refer him to the rules of procedure by Lewis. I think he will find all the answers there. If he wants to see the rule I can give it to him.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I consult May as well.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, as the House knows we in this party opposed Bill No. 45 because we did not think it was nearly complete enough. We did not believe it provided the answers required insofar as expropriation is concerned. There was quite a substantial debate at that time, concerning more particularly the sections other than section 1, and I propose, sir, to make a few remarks in connection with section 1, in conjunction with the remarks made by my hon. colleague from Kent East.

As the hon. Attorney General I am sure knows, Mr. Speaker, this section is now included in the expropriation Act by reason of the decision rendered by His Honour Judge Beardall, judge of the county court of the county of Kent in the case of McKenzie v. the corporation of the township of Dover.

Now there was some substantial doubt in the mind of Mr. McKenzie as to exactly what protection he had when a drainage award was made against him insofar as the compensation was concerned. He applied, as was his right, to the judge of the county court to get a ruling on it. There was some substantial doubt as to whether or not The Expropriation Procedures Act did apply. The judge found that in his opinion it did apply, and I am sure that the hon. Attorney General is as familiar as I with the judge's reasons for judgment.

To summarize them very briefly, the judge said that there was a very substantial need for the type of protection that The Expropriation Procedures Act gave to farmers in cases such as the one that came before him. He came to the conclusion as well that the wording of The Expropriation Procedures Act was not as clear as it might be, and so he extended the benefit of whatever doubt there was to Mr. McKenzie. That was the principle.

Insofar as damages were concerned he came to the conclusion that really, Mr. McKenzie had in fact suffered very little damage, so that while agreeing with McKenzie he gave him very little compensation by way of damages.

But the important part of this decision is that the judge stated, and I quite agree with him, that there should be the same remedies available and the same protections available to farmers like McKenzie as there are to the city people who have their property expropriated. Now the government on one hand says that we are going to have a uniform Act insofar as expropriation procedures are concerned, and if we have Hydro come in and take your land, or if we have universities come in or municipalities or highways, there is one set of procedures to be established. But in another very important field that affects farmers, and affects farmers where there are substantial drainage problems such as in the flatlands in western Ontario, if I may call them that, in the Kent area, in the Essex area and other agricultural areas of the province, this question of drainage awards is a very important thing and it seriously affects farmers' rights. It would be my submission that the farmer is entitled to at least as much protection as anyone else who might be affected by expropriation procedure.

I grant you, sir, that the issue is a very complex one, and possibly not too well understood or worried about outside of southwestern Ontario. But as I said, rural drainage is vital in that area. To take advantage of the rich soil that exists there, there has to be proper drainage. Throughout all the area there are large drains running through the farm lands which look, to a stranger, like natural water courses. Over the years there has grown up a body of extremely technical and complex law in relation to drainage.

In handling this matter it is essential that the farmer should be protected and the public interests should be carried out. I am not suggesting that where it is necessary that drainage awards be made that they should not be made, but I think that the farmer should be protected as well as the public interest; and where it is important or necessary that a drainage scheme be carried out that there should be no undue hardship or injustice visited upon the farmer.

Under The Drainage Act the procedure is for an engineer to make a report, as far as it concerns compensation to land owners. This is in section 8, subsection 8, of The Drainage Act. This report is then confirmed by bylaw and provision is made for an appeal by the landowner. However, if he does nothing, the bylaw is confirmed and the municipal authorities can proceed to go on the land and do the work.

In other words, the onus of objecting to compensation and preventing the municipality going on his land falls on the landowner. Very frequently, sir, either it is through ignorance or through fear of the complicated procedure of an appeal, the farmer, while he may be dissatisfied, does nothing or is not aware that he has any remedy. The technical aspects and the expense have given farmers a fear of drainage litigation. There is a feeling that it is pretty hard to buck city hall and they are really stepping into something which is a little beyond them both in means and in ability to understand. So they shied away from fighting these drainage awards.

Under The Expropriation Procedures Act the onus is shifted, and I think it should be shifted. Under The Expropriation Procedures Act, the onus to a large degree falls upon the expropriating authority. If the landowner does not accept the compensation offered, then there must be a court order for possession and there must be proceedings taken to establish the value of the land.

I think that the same protection that is given to all other classes of people who have land expropriated from them should be extended to farmers whose land is taken under The Drainage Act.

Now I know that the hon. Attorney General is going to say that only a right or an easement to have the drainage is—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): He said that.

Mr. Singer: Yes, all right, he said that. But the fact is that once the water starts to flow through that drain it flows through there for an awfully long time; and it is almost impossible, even though the title to the bed of the drain, the same as the title to a river, might remain in private hands, it is almost impossible for that farmer ever to envisage gaining control of that drain again. So, for all practical purposes, the right to use that land over which the drain flows is taken away from him in perpetuity. Very simply then, in trying to be uncomplicated about quite a complicated matter, it would seem to me that the inclusion of section 1 in this Bill No. 45 is going to deny the farmers the right other people have when property which they own is being expropriated.

For those reasons, sir, I think that, in addition to all we have said about the other procedures suggested in the expropriation procedures amendment act in this Bill No. 45, in addition to all those complaints we have, section 1 of the Act makes it twice as bad as the rest did. And I think, sir, that the least the government can do to protect the farmers—and they always express interest in protecting the agricultural community, as they should; the hon. Minister of Agriculture is their staunch defender—I would think that he would be among the leaders in moving that this section 1 be deleted from the Act. It is for those reasons, sir, that I cannot see how we can support this Act on third reading.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, two or three years ago the committee which sat on the consolidation of the various drainage Acts in the province of Ontario gave this matter very thorough consideration at that time. And while I respect the hon. member's feelings concerning the points he has raised here, I think if he understood what really happens out in rural Ontario, where these drains in effect really are, he would recognize there is a very good working relationship on municipal drains between the farmers concerned and the council and the authorities which establish these drains.

I have known of no case, quite frankly, where there has not been an amicable solution reached through—

Mr. Singer: There is the case about which I just told the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, that may be; there may be an isolated case. You can find isolated cases in almost anything. But, generally speaking, this is true.

Mr. Singer: That is not the information we have.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What we have done as a committee, in consolidating these drainage Acts, is to take into account these very things the hon. member has raised here; and actually, in consolidation of the drains, in appeal to the court of revision, from there to the county judge and from there to the drainage referee, there are all kinds of appeal left. I would say that there should be no problem whatever, as far as the farmers concerned, in the matter of municipal drainage laws in this province. I think it has been well taken care of. Although the hon. member has a point, I do not think it is a valid enough point to really have it incorporated in this type of legislation.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would just add this further, and repeat what I said before: When we were considering this Act now before us, The Expropriation Procedures Act, we looked at the drainage situation; and it is to be noted that in The Drainage Act, enacted largely anew in 1962-63, there was a very complete and thorough review of drainage procedures, and there are special procedures there which, I think, have served very effectively and meet the situation quite fully. That Act, as I say, was in 1962-63, and was just a recent review of all the law re drainage and new procedures established.

There is the engineer's report; there is the bylaw; the court of revision; your dealing with the local municipality; there is an appeal to the county court judge; there is a review by a referee. These are special procedures which, in a sense, go beyond The Expropriation Procedures Act, and there is no argument really that that should be incorporated into The Expropriation Procedures Act.

Mr. Spence: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers or the property owners in the past had to be satisfied with the compensation set aside because the court of revision or the referee did not change it; and for the farmer or the property owner to enter into litigation against a municipality there was great fear. They thought they were beaten before they ever started. My point was, if this amendment is for the benefit of land that is expropriated for other public use, that this should be the same for property taken over by drainage.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker: I would like to say one word about this. Actually, the average farmer is scared to death to enter into litigation against a municipality as far as The Drainage Act is concerned. I do not think there should be any exception whatsoever. I think the farmers should be put on an even basis with the other citizens of this province and have the same opportunity as far as this is concerned. I have had dozens of complaints, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture knows it full well, from various farmers in Bruce county and in surrounding counties I might say, too—from people who are dissatisfied with the drainage laws and the drainage compensation they have to pay or receive, whatever the case may be. I would urge the government to look over this situation very seriously before it is passed.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Could I speak again on this thing, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Technically, we are only supposed to carry on a discussion for a very short period as the rule calls for a restricted limit of discussion; but as I have allowed two other members to speak twice, I think perhaps I could allow the Minister of Agriculture a short remark.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in regard to what the hon. member for Bruce has said, I must confess that I do not know of this kind of problem, quite frankly. I am involved, in my own property, in two municipal drains and they were both amicably settled. There was a good relationship between all concerned on the ditches, between the court of revision and the councils involved.

Mr. Whicher: How long ago was that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, a number of years ago, before I got mixed up in this business.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Minister must have been on the right side of politics.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I am afraid I was not, as a matter of fact. But I find that people of all political faiths in the country get along pretty well together.

One can say, as far as this business of drainage is concerned, that farm drainage must go in the direction that the water course lies. This is something that we cannot deny.

The matter of expropriation, of taking a part of the property or putting a line across the property for a public utility or road or something like this, is quite another matter. But when the drainage bylaws are drawn up, where there are a number of signers petitioning for the drain, then it has to go in that particular area. You cannot turn it and go in some other direction; you have to follow the natural water course. There is no argument about this, and in effect the court of revision is made up of the local people involved in the community, so quite frankly I think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —the hon. Attorney General in this Act here, providing for the board of negotiation, is, in effect, giving another name to the court of revision because they perform the same function. Actually, they do in fact. I have seen this happen in the country and, quite frankly, I would be the first one to want to have this principle apply to drainage, if I thought that it was not already taken care of, but I am satisfied that it is.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We are not certain whether this committee of negotiation or board of negotiations is going to be a useful agency or not. I think the evidence is extremely mixed, but if it can be as useful as the hon. Minister of Agriculture has suggested, in the instance of some expropriation procedures in western Ontario, obviously we do not want to stand in the way of its wider application. Therefore we support the bill insofar as it goes and will let experience be our guide.

I repeat what I have said, on at least two occasions at considerable length, how inadequate this bill is in terms of meeting the necessary range of amendments to expropriation procedures. They are not here; we cannot vote on them. We have to vote on what is here, and it is, in effect, buying a bit of a pig in a poke because we will have to wait to see how useful it is.

Mr. Speaker: As many as are in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

As many as are opposed, will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 69, the "nays," 19.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill No. 45, An Act to amend The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 46, An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 47, An Act to provide a provincial flag for Ontario.

Bill No. 48, The Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation Act, 1965.

Bill No. 49, An Act to amend The Medical Act.

Bill No. 50, An Act to amend The Dentistry Act.

Bill No. 51, An Act to amend The Nurses Act.

Bill No. 52, An Act to amend The Psychologists Registration Act.

Bill No. 53, An Act to amend The Local Roads Boards Act, 1964.

Bill No. 54, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Bill No. 56, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Bill No. 57, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Bill No. 58, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Bill No. 59, An Act to amend The Confederation Centennial Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 62, An Act to amend The Drainage Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 63, An Act to amend The Municipal Franchise Extension Act.

Bill No. 64, An Act to amend The Municipal Arbitrations Act.

Bill No. 67, An Act to amend The Department of Municipal Affairs Act.

Bill No. 68, An Act to amend The Local Improvement Act.

Bill No. 69, An Act to amend The Public Utilities Act.

Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Proceedings against the Crown Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 72, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Bill No. 74, An Act to amend The Cancer Act.

Bill No. 75, An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act.

Bill No. 76, An Act to amend The Public Hospitals Act.

Bill No. 77, An Act to amend The Private Hospitals Act.

Bill No. 78, An Act to amend The Community Centres Act.

Bill No. 79, An Act to amend The Municipal Franchises Act.

Bill No. 80, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Bill No. 82, An Act to amend The Junior Farmer Establishment Act.

Bill No. 86, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 91, The Brucellosis Act, 1965.

Bill No. 92, An Act to amend The Live Stock Community Sales Act.

Bill No. 93, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Bill No. Pr25, An Act respecting the county of Peel.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor entered the chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed several bills to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Assistant Clerk of the House: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill No. Pr2, An Act respecting Owen Sound general and marine hospital.

Bill No. Pr3, An Act respecting The Royal Canadian Legion.

Bill No. Pr5, An Act respecting the Community Chest of St. Catharines and District, Inc.

Bill No. Pr6, An Act to incorporate the Ontario speech and hearing association.

Bill No. Pr8, An Act respecting the township of London.

Bill No. Pr9, An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Bill No. Pr10, An Act respecting the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada.

Bill No. Pr11, An Act respecting the Frontenac district high school board.

Bill No. Pr 13, An Act respecting the United Church of Canada.

Bill No. Pr14, An Act respecting the town of Burlington.

Bill No. Pr16, An Act respecting the city of Belleville.

Bill No. Pr17, An Act respecting the city of Cornwall.

Bill No. Pr18, An Act respecting the United Co-operatives of Ontario.

Bill No. Pr19, An Act respecting the city of Toronto.

Bill No. Pr20, An Act respecting the city of London.

Bill No. Pr21, An Act respecting the village of New Hamburg.

Bill No. Pr22, An Act respecting the municipality of Shuniah.

Bill No. Pr24, An Act respecting the town of Gananoque.

Bill No. Pr25, An Act respecting the county of Peel.

Bill No. Pr26, An Act respecting the city of St. Thomas.

Bill No. Pr29, An Act respecting the township of York.

Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting the township of Mosa.

Bill No. Pr31, An Act respecting the city of Oshawa.

Bill No. Pr32, An Act respecting the town of Hawkesbury.

Bill No. Pr33, An Act respecting the township of East York.

Bill No. Pr34, An Act respecting the city of Hamilton.

Bill No. Pr36, An Act respecting the city of Ottawa.

Bill No. Pr37, An Act respecting the Canadian National Exhibition Association.

Bill No. Pr38, An Act to incorporate the East York foundation.

Bill No. Pr39, An Act respecting the township of Scarborough.

Bill No. Pr40, An Act respecting the city of Kitchener.

Bill No. Pr42, An Act respecting the township of North York.

Bill No. Pr43, An Act respecting the city of Chatham.

Bill No. 1, An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

Bill No. 2, An Act to amend The Certification of Titles Act.

Bill No. 3, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Bill No. 4, An Act to amend The Probation Act.

Bill No. 5, An Act to amend The Mortgages Act.

Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Used Car Dealers Act, 1964.

Bill No. 7, An Act to amend The Archaeological and Historic Sites Protection Act.

Bill No. 8, An Act to amend The Highway Improvement Act.

Bill No. 12, An Act to amend The Dead Animal Disposal Act.

Bill No. 13, An Act to amend The Anatomy Act.

Bill No. 14, An Act to amend The Arbitrations Act.

Bill No. 17, An Act to amend The Trench Excavators' Protection Act.

Bill No. 18, An Act to amend The Elevators and Lifts Act.

Bill No. 19, An Act to amend The Construction Safety Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 20, An Act to amend The Dog Tax and Cattle, Sheep and Poultry Protection Act.

Bill No. 21, An Act to amend The Weed Control Act.

Bill No. 23, An Act to amend The Loggers' Safety Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 24, An Act respecting the water powers of the Ottawa River.

Bill No. 25, The Training Schools Act, 1965.

Bill No. 26, An Act to amend The Bees Act.

Bill No. 27, An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Bill No. 28, An Act to amend The Marriage Act.

Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Ontario Human Rights Code, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 31, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Bill No. 35, The Operating Engineers Act, 1965.

Bill No. 36, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Bill No. 37, An Act to amend The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 38, An Act to amend The Boundaries Act.

Bill No. 39, An Act to amend The Sheriffs Act.

Bill No. 40, An Act to amend The County Courts Act.

Bill No. 41, An Act to provide for the settlement by arbitration of labour disputes in hospitals.

Bill No. 42, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Bill No. 43, An Act to amend The Public Lands Act.

Bill No. 45, An Act to amend The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 46, An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 47, An Act to provide a provincial flag for Ontario.

Bill No. 48, The Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation Act, 1965.

Bill No. 49, An Act to amend The Medical Act.

Bill No. 50, An Act to amend The Dentistry Act.

Bill No. 51, An Act to amend The Nurses Act.

Bill No. 52, An Act to amend The Psychologists Registration Act.

Bill No. 53, An Act to amend The Local Roads Boards Act, 1964.

Bill No. 54, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Bill No. 56, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Bill No. 57, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Bill No. 58, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Bill No. 59, An Act to amend The Confederation Centennial Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 62, An Act to amend The Drainage Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 63, An Act to amend The Municipal Franchise Extension Act.

Bill No. 64, An Act to amend The Municipal Arbitrations Act.

Bill No. 67, An Act to amend The Department of Municipal Affairs Act.

Bill No. 68, An Act to amend The Local Improvement Act.

Bill No. 69, An Act to amend The Public Utilities Act.

Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Proceedings Against the Crown Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 72, An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

Bill No. 74, An Act to amend The Cancer Act.

Bill No. 75, An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act.

Bill No. 76, An Act to amend The Public Hospitals Act.

Bill No. 77, An Act to amend The Private Hospitals Act.

Bill No. 78, An Act to amend The Community Centres Act.

Bill No. 79, An Act to amend The Municipal Franchises Act.

Bill No. 80, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Bill No. 82, An Act to amend The Junior Farmer Establishment Act.

Bill No. 86, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 91, The Brucellosis Act, 1965.

Bill No. 92, An Act to amend The Live Stock Community Sales Act.

Bill No. 93, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

To these Acts the Royal Assent was announced by the Clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

Clerk of the House: The sixty-fourth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

(continued)

On vote 605:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, last evening we had been discussing with the hon. Minister (Mr. Simonett), the whole question of water pollution and I, sir, would like to come back to this again.

I appreciated the interest of both the hon. Minister and the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) in connection with the immense problem that we are facing today. There is a scarcity of water to meet the needs of a sophisticated society. Further, it is obvious that as industry develops the effluent of industry has got to go somewhere and the practice is to use water as the means of disposal. I think there is recognition by all of us in this House that we are not alone in this problem. There are over 50 nations in the world that have got together to study it for the next decade.

The thing on which I am not overly sure is that within this Legislature, by the hon. Minister, there is really as deep a concern that he has got to get at the facts in connection with the problem of water pollution in Ontario; and I say this with the deepest respect to him. He is a man of energy and enthusiasm, but I frankly was appalled at his answer to us when the question was raised by another hon. member who suggested that there is more pollution of water taking place each year in Ontario.

I think this might be a fair suggestion, because we know that with the increase of industrial development the possibility is certainly there that there would be more water pollution. But the hon. Minister stood up and he said, "I deny that," or words to that effect; that there is more water pollution. This, Mr. Chairman, for me, was a very heartening thing to feel that the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management was on top of his facts, was keeping exact count of just what the situation was and could say with strong affirmation that there is not more water pollution. But I may say that my confidence ebbed immediately after, when he was asked, "Well how do you know this?" and he said, "Well, I have travelled around and I have seen some streams that are now clear where they were polluted before." With the real responsibility the hon. Minister should have, this, to me, is the most superficial answer one could expect from one in his responsible position, in the way of assuring the people of this province about one of their greatest natural resources.

Then I became more alarmed because, with reference to my own remarks about the meagre research facilities which he has in his water pollution laboratories, he made a remark which I felt was downgrading the need for research. I look at a number of articles which suggest that, in order to be able to tackle the problem systematically, you have got to know what the problem is. One of the things I find about this government is that it is almost always hysterical action that takes place when a problem looms so big and that they suddenly have to move into the picture.

I suspect, sir, that the hon. Minister has an indifference towards research and I may be unfair to him, but the impression I had was that he was saying: "The leader of the Opposition goes on about research a bit too much and, I think, overly much." I suggest to him that, in editorials around this province, they are asking, pleading with this government to finally recognize that this is a problem of a civilized community, and let us start recognizing it in the way 50 nations have. Fifty nations have banded together for the international hydrological decade in order to study the problem. Surely, once again, Ontario could move in the steps of other nations and try to be as advanced as they are. If you do not study the problem, you will not know how to pursue it.

In connection with this, your study is only half an approach, when we think of the immensity of the water resources we have in Ontario, when we think of the fact that, in southern Ontario, there is hardly a river which is not polluted. All of us have gone up to lakes north of here, and everywhere we hear of lakes which are now polluted, and see signs up, saying—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. leader of the Opposition would name some of these rivers and lakes, away from the Great Lakes, in Ontario?

Mr. Thompson: Certainly I will. I have mentioned, for example, Gull River.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Where is it?

Mr. Thompson: Gull River is up near Minden.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: There are many Gull Rivers.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry. I am thinking of the one near Minden, then. It is in what was the riding of Hon. Mr. Frost; and when he had some ladies down here from Lindsay—I happen to have a cottage near Gull River, and at that point I had explained in the House—it is in Hansard, I do not know when—that Gull River was contaminated—Mr. Frost assured them there were sparkling waters in the whole of the north country and it was going to stay that way. But, unfortunately, the medical officer from the area had posted a sign to tell the people that it was contaminated. I hope they are clearing it up.

We read this summer of Elliot Lake. This is another thing which concerns me.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: This was discussed last night.

Mr. Thompson: But the point is we never got answers on it.

My concern is this: We get from you the assurance that the water is no longer radioactively dangerous, and the people can drink it; but we want to know what kind of safeguards and controls have been established, to assure not only the people of Elliot Lake, but of Bancroft and other areas, that this situation will not arise again. I raise that question for the hon. Minister. Let us depart from all the reports you put out about having found out that water is polluted; what have you done about it?

Then, secondly, I read from your annual report that you made 477 inspections of industrial wastage, and from that 311 were unsatisfactory. That is right in your annual report. What are you doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think, if the hon. leader of the Opposition was listening last night, we covered this ground. We covered the ground on everything.

Mr. Thompson: No.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we did.

Mr. Thompson: Research? Industrial waste?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We covered it on research and industrial waste. We covered the Elliot Lake situation; it was covered here yesterday.

Mr. Thompson: Well, it may have been covered to your satisfaction, but it certainly was not to ours or to that of the people of Ontario. I do not think you answered, for example, what kind of safeguards you have created so that the situation in Elliot Lake will not arise again. You did not answer that yesterday; would you be good enough to do that now?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I advised the House yesterday evening that there was a committee studying this matter; and as soon as they come in with recommendations as to what steps this government should take, in order that we might assure you of the safeguards you are looking for, this government no doubt will implement it.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): You assured us last night there were safeguards.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, how do you remedy a situation until you find out what the situation is and what steps you should take? That is what we are working at right now.

Mr. Thompson: You told us last night that it was remedied.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I did not say it was remedied.

Mr. Thompson: You told us that the water was safe to drink.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I was instructed that the water is safe to drink. I am sure I am not a medical man or an engineer.

Mr. Thompson: That is a very responsible statement to make.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, it was made to me by responsible people.

Mr. Thompson: Fine. Then let me go into another area on this. Of 447 inspections you made on industrial wastes, 311 apparently were not satisfactory. What have you done about this?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I covered this ground last night, and I asked the hon. members then if they wanted me to go into detail as to what has happened in each one of the industries in Ontario. I could do that this afternoon, if you would like; or would the hon. leader of the Opposition like a copy of the report I have which sets out in detail what every industry, or what the larger industries, in this province are doing to clean up pollution?

Mr. Thompson: I would like to know if 311 industries, which were declared unsatisfactory, without going into the detail, I do not want—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have a list of these.

Mr. Thompson: They were declared unsatisfactory. What are your next steps after they are declared unsatisfactory? How many have been cleared up now?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: They are continually being followed up.

Mr. Thompson: In what way?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: By people in the Ontario water resources commission working with these industries. And as I said last night, it is our hope and, in fact, it is practically an order, that all these industries be cleaned up in five years. This is the goal we are working towards.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say this, sir: The hon. Minister has announced that 311 are unsatisfactory; that was in his annual report. And he says that he is in constant touch with them. Of that 311, how many are now satisfactory? How many have stopped polluting the water?

While the hon. Minister is getting those facts, I would mention that I was interested to learn that there were 1,400 industries—this was confirmed by the hon. Minister and mentioned by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin—which shows the immensity of our industrial complex across this province.

Then, to show us the forward-looking approach that the hon. Minister is taking, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin stated that one of the industries—the pulp and paper industry—is going to have a five-year programme. If this is the kind of approach being taken, singling out one industry when we have 1,400 and doing it in a five-year programme, I would suggest it would be 7,000 years before we are going to be cleaned up.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I said that we made requirements of this one industrial complex and we are going to make the same type of approach to all of the industries. I might add right now that many of the industries, particularly the smaller ones, are now cleaning up their waste through the municipal systems.

Mr. Thompson: May I suggest, since the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin has answered me, that there seems to be an approach that we are using, and which we may use in the other industries—and, as far as I am concerned, there is a very lackadaisical attitude to this whole immense problem.

The hon. member stated that they were going after the pulp and paper industry—he has had one year. He is getting reports from them, and now he tells us that he may be getting some more from 1,400 other industries.

Mr. Root: Mr. Chairman, I did not use the word “may”; I said we intend to go into the other industries. We have been receiving reports from industries, and the hon. Minister has many examples of what industry has already done. Many of them have spent many millions of dollars.

Mr. Thompson: Let us get right down to concrete facts; when is the hon. member going into other industries, and which other industries is he taking?

Mr. Root: All of them.

Mr. Thompson: Name one of them, as well as the pulp and paper industry.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could name—I am not going to name one. We have that information here but of the 311 reported there are 120 which are supposed to be satisfactory, to date.

Mr. Thompson: What is being done with the others; will they be brought to court?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: As I said before, Mr. Chairman, we are continually working with these industries to help them help themselves clean up pollution, and they are co-operating with us.

Mr. Thompson: Has there been any industry which has not co-operated satisfactorily with the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we had a few; but they have been a very small percentage of the total.

Mr. Thompson: What is being done with these industries which have not co-operated?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have prosecuted one, at this time.

Mr. Thompson: Does the hon. Minister mean to say that, in the whole of this area with respect to water pollution, the history of your approach is that one industry was prosecuted?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: One this year, I am sorry—

Mr. Thompson: One this year!

May I say to the hon. Minister, sir, in this approach—just looking at the Ruhr valley, which I took as an example—that they were able to do something about pollution with 40 per cent of Germany's industrial concentration on this small stream, in comparison with the rivers which we have; and yet they can swim in the Ruhr river.

I would ask the hon. Minister: Is he thinking of an approach towards incentives for those industries which will comply, to encourage them; and a punitive approach to those which, given a fair chance, will not apply procedures against pollution?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that we are not assisting any industry, except through engineering or assistance we can give them through the Ontario water resources commission.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would simply state that it seems to me that the hon. Minister has just inherited this mess—and I will call it a mess.

He started in 1956, and we had the opportunity of leaving a legacy—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We got into operation in 1957.

Mr. Thompson: The commission was started in 1956, and got into the operation in 1957.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, that was the paper work.

Mr. Thompson: I would say to the hon. Minister that we have seen this drift and drift and drift; and I hope that the hon. Minister does give serious recognition to the problem which all of us have.

If there is one thing we should be doing as a government it is protecting the heritage of our water resources; and it can be done, it can be done. But when the hon. Minister had a bacteriologist, according to his annual report, the man then resigned, so the whole study was held up for almost six months until another bacteriologist was obtained.

But, in his report, the hon. Minister says that there should be some kind of a viral study; then the report goes on to say that he does not have a virologist. Similarly, the report says that there are some areas, with respect to industrial research on pollution, in which it is suggested there are no answers.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We heard this last night.

Mr. Thompson: The point is that I want to repeat this because the hon. Minister has not got enough research people working on this. I say this, particularly, because of the off-hand approach by the hon. Minister himself in connection with getting at the facts. He first of all assured us that pollution was on the decrease, and the only facts he had in order to give us that assurance was his own optimism and trips he may have taken around the province; there is nothing from a scientific basis.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I travel around it quite often.

Mr. Thompson: I do not care how many times the hon. Minister travels around it, or how many times I travel around it. What we need are scientific facts on this. We want a much more serious attitude taken by this government department to get the research done, not the assurances of the hon. Minister, no matter how genial or optimistic he might want to be. We want to see this taken on with the same approach used by, for example, Governor Rockefeller, who is spending $1.7 billion in six years to tackle this.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, perhaps Governor Rockefeller needs to spend $1.7 billion to clean up his pollution. I said last night that we, in Ontario, are in good shape in comparison with any adjoining state on the Great Lakes.

I must say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I am a very modest man and I am not running around the country telling how fast we are going to clean this up; but if he will just leave it with me for a couple of years—if I am here, and I am sure there is going to be an election some day, this might be a good issue for us to fight on out there to see just how much we have done on pollution. We would be glad to take on Opposition members on that one.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to say that I do not look on it as an election issue. I look on it as a citizen of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: So do I.

Mr. Thompson: —and with the same concern. My concern—with all respect to the hon. Minister, and I do personally have a great admiration for him—is not with him as Minister of his department. And it is not in facing him as a person travelling around and looking at the sparkling waters. It is with the necessity of having thoroughly equipped and able men to do this job.

The only impression I could get from the hon. Minister's annual report was a feeling, on the part of his department, of: "Give us more men and we will do the job; give us the tools and we will do the job." It is up to the hon. Minister to realize that; and, to get our backing which he has completely, assuming the immensity of the problem, to get on with getting the proper staff together and giving them the opportunity to do the job.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. member that I think, in this department, that we have some good men.

Mr. Thompson: So I believe.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The hon. leader of the Opposition did not say that a minute ago. He was talking as though we had people who were lackadaisical and who did not care whether we ever cleaned up pollution.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of privilege, sir—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is what I took out of it.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of privilege, sir. I want to make it very clear that I have a great respect for the people the hon. Minister has. I have been looking at the work which they are doing; my point is that he has not got enough. When a bacteriologist resigns and a study is held up for six months, I would suggest that the hon. Minister does not place much stress on the study—or there is something wrong with the department.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised that Dr. Christie is a qualified virologist and is presently carrying out a study on sewage treatment processes. I hope that would answer that question for a minute.

If the hon. member ever starts a new department, he should just try to get all the people he wants overnight. As I said before, we have been in it eight years and we have been moving ahead. If you did have all the people you wanted, and you knew all the problems and were ready to go, do not forget that in this country you must get construction people and contractors to do the work. We are using, in construction today, just about 100 per cent of all the people we have working in construction; our tenders are running very high, as you know, so perhaps you could crowd yourself in a corner where it would hurt financially. I think you have to take the thing in easy steps and, as I said before, in five years we will discuss this again and I think you will agree that this has been a good job, well done.

Mr. Thompson: In five years I will be reporting to you about how it is done.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I have been very interested in hearing the hon. Minister's reply and the fact that some time, perhaps in five years, he might have an answer. I do not think he will be there in five years.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I did not say an answer; I said it would be cleaned up.

Mr. Singer: All right; there is a difference. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister has bothered even to read the debates of previous years involving this matter.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, I have.

Mr. Singer: If he has referred to the very interesting series of articles by Mr. Turnbull of the Toronto Globe and Mail on "The Crisis in the Credit"; if he has referred recently to the well researched series of articles in the Toronto Telegram concerning water pollution; if he has referred recently to the series of articles that have appeared in almost every publication in the province of Ontario asking: Why no action to clear up water pollution? If he wants any greater indictment than that all he has to do is to read the bulletins that come out from the water resources commission.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: And I read those, too.

Mr. Singer: Yes, there was a great spate of them. Immediately after the comments about Elliot Lake, suddenly we were deluged with bulletins. The week that the news story broke, six bulletins came out from the water resources commission, saying: "Look what we have done, we have discovered another source of pollution."

One of the biggest things that has not been tackled at all is the ability of municipalities to look after this pollution. There is no point in saying that municipality A or B or C has an inadequate sewage disposal system, or that septic tanks are dumping into the water-courses, unless the government of Ontario is prepared either to order that building begin and continued pollution stop, or to finance means to allow these municipalities to clean up the situation.

I did not bother to bring all these bulletins in and there are dozens of them. They name all of these municipalities that have been investigated here and there and hither and yon, and they say there is increased pollution. Now, there is no point in saying this unless you are going to provide some answer, because the facts of life are that these municipalities just cannot afford to do the work to clean up the situation. You get into this great revolving birdcage where somebody says the municipality has got to have a sewage treatment plant, and goes down to the municipal board and says, "Well, financially you cannot afford it until you get more assessment, and you are not going to get more assessment until you get adequate sewage disposal," and so you go around in the great circle and nobody gets anything done.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there can be any greater indictment of what is going on in Ontario than just to read these bulletins that come out with great regularity from the water resources commission. But it is not just enough to identify where the problems are. What we would have hoped for was a programme to clear it up. The hon. Minister's remarks that we are placing a strain on contractors is one of the most ludicrous excuses I have heard in a long time.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You want to go and find out.

Mr. Singer: If the government can put a strain on contractors to widen Highway 401 or to build schools or to build reform institutions or to build whatever they are building, surely the government can put an equal strain on contractors to do something about building sewage disposal plants and adequately taking care of them. I would think that the hon. Minister, if he has no answers today, at least would say there is a programme underway. But there is no programme underway. He has given us no indication of any programme. They are inspecting. Now, if you are going to clean up pollution, if you are going to dispose of—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It has been underway for eight years.

Mr. Root: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member was not in the House last night when I reported a programme of more than $1 billion worth of work that has been done in the past eight years. Now, if that is not a programme underway I would like to know what is.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this is no point of order at all. I am criticizing the fact that what has been done in the last eight years is not a programme of this government; it is a programme being financed by the municipalities. The municipalities are spending the money. The government of Ontario is not spending the money. As I say, there is no point bringing forth these reports from water resources week after week after week and saying pollution exists because of the faulty disposal system in municipality X. The facts of life are that municipality X just cannot take part in cleaning it up, because it has not the financial resources. The municipalities that the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin is talking about are the ones where the municipal board—not the province—has seen fit to allow the municipality to incur this expenditure.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Is that not a programme?

Mr. Singer: It is not a government-sponsored programme; it is not a government-financed programme. If this government and this hon. Minister were serious about cleaning up pollution we would have heard of a positive programme with government financial participation. Such a programme is not in existence and apparently the government has no intention of bringing it in.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): It is amazing to me, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister thinks that pollution is under control, when a report comes from the Globe and Mail on April 9 regarding a Mr. Ayres who said he will present a scheme to the public works committee of the city of Toronto by which the city would sell tin cans from its Commissioner Street incinerator. The cans, he said, create a disposal problem because they are not destroyed when garbage is burned. The city dumps 20,000 tons of tin cans a year into Lake Ontario off the foot of Leslie Street.

I think this bears out the fact that we doubt whether there can be a plan, when we have this government sanctioning the dumping of 20,000 tons of tin cans and other unburnable refuse into the waters of Lake Ontario. Is the hon. Minister aware of this situation?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we are.

Mr. Sargent: What is the hon. Minister doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised that they are burned-out tin cans and there is no pollution.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, all right now, just listen for a minute, now. There is no pollution hazard.

Mr. Singer: What are we talking about, pollution or what?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised there is no pollution hazard and I think that you, who have lived in Toronto all your life, know that there have been many tin cans dumped out in that area. They have been dumping them there for years. This is nothing new.

Mr. Singer: We want the hon. Minister to do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know, but there is no pollution problem. If anybody wants to get rid of his tin cans I suppose he would have to get rid of them some place, and if there is no pollution and everybody is satisfied, well—

Mr. Thompson: We are not satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know, but you are never satisfied with anything over there.

Mr. Thompson: We would be satisfied if you had a programme.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, through you, if he has approved of this source of disposal?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might answer the hon. member that I have not approved of it, in fact, I knew nothing about it until right now. I do not enter into the day-to-day operations of this department, and I might say that outside of seeing it in the paper I have never had a complaint from anyone about dumping tin cans in the harbour in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Sargent: That just goes to point out, Mr. Chairman, the inefficiency of this department. How could this type of operation go on over the years and the hon. Minister not know a thing about it?

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, last night when we were discussing Elliot Lake and the mention of the hon. Minister's department and The Department of Health, he said there was very fine co-operation between the two departments. I have in front of me an editorial from the Globe and Mail of January 28 which is headed:

AN EXCUSE FOR NOT ACTING

Delegates to a recent meeting of the federated cottagers' association contributed evidence of a number of kinds of water pollution. There was seepage from septic tanks, from industrial plants and from garbage land-fill.

In sharp contrast to all this, there appears to be no seepage of any kind between the Ontario water resources commission and the provincial Department of Health. Each functions in its own watertight compartment. The unfortunate feature of this is that any pollution problem which happens to overlap the two jurisdictions is likely to be ignored by both.

Thus, Mr. W. A. Steggle, supervisor of stream surveys for the commission, conceded that the commission did not have the power to deal with several of the sources of pollution, and on the problem arising from garbage land-fill he commented: "That is the health department's responsibility."

And the editorial finishes:

Ontario's water pollution problems are pressing. Must they await settlement of a demarcation dispute?

The hon. Minister wanted to know where there was water pollution—what lakes are polluted. That editorial prompted Mr. R. W. Catto, of Milford Bay to write a long letter to the Globe and Mail. I think the hon. member for Muskoka has read that editorial and it certainly is indicative that there is a great amount of pollution in that famous recreational centre. I do not need to read the article but certainly—

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Chairman, I think I could agree with Mr. Catto's letter in full except for his remarks about increasing pollution in the Muskoka lakes and that I would disagree with heartily. The Muskoka lakes, as a matter of fact, are in much better shape as regards quality of water than they were ten years ago.

Mr. Troy: Well, I should hope so; you are spending—

Mr. Boyer: What does the hon. member mean, he should hope so? They have always been pretty good.

Mr. Troy: The hon. member said a moment ago that the water is better than it was ten years ago and I said I hope it is better than then. If the hon. member would show the letter to the hon. Minister of the department—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: We have it; we have the editorial.

Mr. Troy: You have it, have you? Well, there are certain sentences such as:

The remedy is beyond the resources of the minor authorities and must necessarily be undertaken by the provincial government, which enjoys these and all the essential prerogatives.

And it goes on and mentions the hon. Minister's department; The Department of Tourism and Information is very much involved, and certainly The Department of Health. And it mentions something about the garbage disposal on the lakes.

Some years ago I referred garbage disposal to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests and pointed out what they do in Lake George. They have barges that are towed around Lake George to pick up the garbage from all the islands and the resorts in that area, and I thought it was a very fine system.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Then what do they do with it?

Mr. Troy: I do not know what they do with it. I did not have a boat to go after the garbage barge to find out where it went. I know they took it somewhere.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, but where?

Mr. Troy: Darned if I know.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: If they dumped it in the lake, it did not help things any.

Mr. Troy: I do not know if they dumped it in the lake; they were picking it up from all the areas and I do not know where they dumped it.

But I would like to ask the hon. Minister: Will there be any danger to the beauties of Lake Temagami because of the development that will be there when the Sherman Mines open up? As you very well know, being the reporting Minister for the Ontario northland, Temagami is important to the tourist industry of this country. Is the hon. Minister sure that there will be no effect from the mines which might destroy either the fish and wildlife of that area, or its attraction as a tourist area?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question but I doubt very much if they will do anything to destroy the beauty of the lake. And I would say this: Some of that money coming in there is going to look very beautiful to a lot of people in that area and I am sure that this company will do nothing to destroy the beauty of the country.

Mr. Troy: Well, I mean the beautiful water, the clean water; and no doubt, too, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs will be watching it because he is quite concerned with the problem of our municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that proposal for complete protection of Lake Temagami has been made now.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, I prepared several questions concerning a dispute between the OWRC and the municipality in which one of the commissioners resides, in my own constituency. It does involve another municipality and I wonder if it is permissible to ask questions on this particular situation?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I think the matter the hon. member refers to is before the courts; under those circumstances I would just as soon not.

Mr. Paterson: Could the hon. Minister tell me if there are any municipalities outside the county of Essex which, for any reason, have defaulted in the payment of principal or interest on any water works, or pipeline, or sewage, or sewage works, carried out and financed through the OWRC?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am advised that the answer is, "No"—outside of the one we discussed.

Mr. Paterson: In area water and sewage installations throughout the province, is it usual to pay grants in lieu of taxes to the municipality in which the treatment plant is located? I am referring specifically in this case to the union system.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Is the hon. member referring to where one municipality might have its system in another municipality?

Mr. Paterson: This is the case in the union system; the main plant is located in one township and it feeds several municipalities, and that township has been requested by the municipal board to charge taxes or a grant in lieu of taxes for school purposes. I wonder if this is the case elsewhere in the province?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that we do not pay grants, but we do pay taxes.

Mr. Paterson: Does the commission endorse surcharges being levied on water users as a method for payment of sewage treatment plants? I believe this was suggested in Goderich, in the press.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we do.

Mr. Paterson: Fine. I wonder if the commission at this point could clarify my thoughts whether in the union system plant, if the capacity there is doubled, the cost per 1,000 gallons of treated water would be lowered substantially? I believe it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 32 cents per 1,000 gallons. Does the commission feel that the cost per 1,000 should be dropped?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I understand that it is not a fair question. Not just off the tops of their heads; they could not give—

Mr. Paterson: I realize there is a report out and I do not wish to jeopardize the negotiation. I might ask a question regarding the office of information. Last week I spoke on this topic and suggested that the department put up exhibits in fairs other than the CNE. I see by the report where they are going into the western fair at London, and the Ottawa fairs. Has the commission considered going into some of the smaller fairs, especially in the Lake Erie area where pollution is so rampant?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I understand that they will be going into some of the smaller fairs. I would think the hon. member would realize it is very difficult to do all the fairs in Ontario because they all occur within a very short space of time.

Mr. Paterson: Is this department sending out folders, say, to our high schools, as part of an educational programme to get the students to know the problems of pollution and help correct them?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, we are not.

Mr. Paterson: Would they consider, before the estimates of next year, entering into some type of folder?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, we will take it under consideration.

Mr. Paterson: I have one or two more questions here. Could the hon. Minister tell me how many boats on the Great Lakes were prosecuted under the regulations covering the discharge of sewage, in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, this matter comes under the federal Department of Transport, boats on the Great Lakes; it is an international waterway.

Mr. Paterson: The department would have some involvement in that, in making recommendations to the federal department, I would trust.

On page 8 of the annual report, the real estate branch indicates that they have had a great deal of trouble in finalizing projects, apparently because of imperfect work by lawyers. Is this because of human failing on the part of the legal profession so involved, or is it because the forms are so complicated? Are there no standard forms sent out by the OWRC?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I doubt if the hon. member would wish me to answer that question.

Mr. Paterson: I believe the hon. Minister has, and I appreciate the problems encountered by both the OWRC and the members of the various localities in which these works are undertaken.

Has the OWRC advised The Department of Lands and Forests concerning their studies on controlling aquatic plants by covering them with sheets of black plastic? I am particularly referring to the serious problem in Rondeau Bay in Kent county.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Paterson: That is fine.

Following up the comments of my hon. leader regarding different manufacturers; I wonder, have orders gone out to all processors of tomato products requiring them to put in sewage disposal facilities within a certain period of time?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that no orders went out to the different canneries, but we are working very closely with them regarding pollution from canneries.

Mr. Paterson: Most of these canning plants then would have been circularized with the findings of your Chatham study to date, would they? So that they could plan for the future in their own premises?

I have one or two more here on vote 605, Mr. Chairman. On page 129 of the report there is a chart concerning irrigation utilizing surface water. I notice the tremendous upsurge back in 1963 and then a fairly marked drop in 1964. I wonder if the hon. Minister could explain just what has occurred that would cause a tremendous upsurge and sudden drop and what the expectations are for 1965 in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether I got the hon. member's question or not. Did I understand that you were wondering why the drop in permits last year?

Mr. Paterson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: It was due to the year. There was a lot of rainfall in western Ontario last year, so therefore the people did not need to get permits for irrigation.

Mr. Paterson: One further question. Professor Langford of the Great Lakes institute, spoke about salt used on the roads in the winter. It is causing quite a lot of concern as a pollutant. I happened to have asked a question of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) in this regard.

I wonder if the OWRC has made a study of this specific problem and if they have studied whether anti-rust additives being added to the salt add to the pollution of our waters?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I understand that we have made some limited studies, but at the present time I do not think they are in a position to say whether there is added pollution through the additives or not.

Mr. Paterson: A final question regarding the comments of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin and Dr. Bent's suggestion that water requirements be projected on a realistic basis, I believe one was up to ten years in the future. I have municipalities in my area that can afford a certain size pipeline, yet I believe the engineers feel that this is not adequate for more than our immediate needs. The municipality in this case is going to finance this themselves, but I believe they feel that they would like to put in a larger line.

I wonder if the OWRC gives guidance on this, whether they will disallow the installation of this particular size pipeline; and if they should happen to order a larger sized line, whether they would help finance the difference in the size?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the OWRC will give advice, but if a municipality, or utility or whatever it is, does not take the advice that we will not finance the difference in the price of the pipe.

Mr. Troy: One last question, Mr. Chairman. Does the OWRC keep records of the water content of the snow and the amount of snowfall in northern Ontario, or is that done through Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I think Hydro and The Department of Lands and Forests.

Vote 605 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could skip the Hydro vote and go to 609 while I have the Ontario water resources people here, just the capital vote?

Vote 609 agreed to.

Vote 607 agreed to.

On vote 608:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, there are a number of questions in connection with Hydro. I take it we are going directly into it without a statement from the hon. member; or are we having it?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could say a few words about the vote that is before the House. This is a new item in the estimates in the amount of $1.8 million for the year, as directed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, to provide for the province's share of the preliminary engineering study costs relating to construction of the 1,080,000-kilowatt nuclear power generating station in Pickering township.

The hon. Minister has already spoken of this matter and I think most members are familiar with this project, in which the Ontario government is participating with the government of Canada and Ontario Hydro, providing as its share of the joint financing programme for the development, a total of $66.5 million. Under this financing agreement, Ontario Hydro will pay $120 million, with the national government contributing the balance of $79.5 million.

The site of the plant, to be known as Pickering generating station, is located in the Fairport area of the township of Pickering, on the shore of Lake Ontario, 20 miles east of Toronto. The first of two 540,000-kilowatt generating units is scheduled for service in 1970.

A development of this magnitude requires extensive planning and preparation. Work this year will be concentrated mainly on designing the complex components and equipment required for such a plant, as well as actual investigation and preparation of the site.

I should emphasize to the House the confidence of the parties to the financing agreement. The Ontario government as well as the government of Canada will realize a return on their investments in this highly important power development. As is well known, the Canadian-type reactor differs from others in the world because it uses natural uranium fuel and heavy water as the moderator and coolant. Since more than 70 per cent of Canada's known uranium reserves are located in this province, the future possibilities for expansion of this industry are most encouraging. I believe that in the next decade or two, we shall see a great resurgence of uranium mining enterprises. This will provide, of course, a strong impetus to Ontario's economic and employment prospects.

It has already been stated many times, but is worth repeating, that Canada's pioneering efforts in developing nuclear power stations have created considerable international interest. Several countries are expressing a desire to buy from Canada the components and raw materials for these types of plants, and there are strong indications that a major export item may be developing.

Although our experience with nuclear-electric stations has been fairly limited, we are fully confident that nuclear power will grow greatly in importance in the years ahead. We are predicting that by 1975 there will be 3.2 million kilowatts of electricity generated by nuclear power stations in Ontario. This transition in the Ontario pattern of power generation illustrates the constantly growing demand for electric power, which, in turn reflects the buoyant state of the provincial economy.

Ontario's total volume of production increased in 1964 over the previous year by an estimated six per cent. It may be said that electrical consumption and demands offer a good yardstick of the economic life of Ontario. Hydro in this province has been growing steadily and efficiently, and solid progress has been recorded on all fronts in the past year.

The peak demand for electricity in 1964 reached 7,210,000 kilowatts, which was an increase of 6.1 per cent over the year before, and this is slightly below the long-term average annual growth of 6.5 per cent. This peak is a remarkable indication, nevertheless, of what is happening, since two factors reduced the final total—an automobile plant strike in the period when the peak demand normally occurs, and an above-average period of warm weather around the same time.

Sir, I may mention to the House that primary energy provided by Ontario Hydro in March just past, totalled 3.82 billion kilowatt hours, and this is an increase of 8.7 per cent over the same month a year ago. For the first three months of 1965 the total is 11.25 billion kilowatt hours, up 7.4 per cent over the same period in 1964. Adjusted for seasonal influences, primary energy demand in March was 3.62 billion kilowatt hours, 1.4 per cent more than the previous month.

The year 1964 has been outstanding in Hydro's history as a year of accelerating expansion. Ontario Hydro authorized more new generating capacity in 1964 than it has ever done in any 12-month period in its entire 58-year history. Generating capacity now under construction, plus that committed for construction in the near future, will add a total of 5.2 million kilowatts to the Hydro system by 1971. This amount of new power is greater than Ontario Hydro's total resources as recently as 1957.

Even so, our estimate of the expansion which must take place in the next decade is amazing. By 1975, it will be necessary to increase Hydro's generating capacity to 16.5 million kilowatts, roughly double the present capacity of the system. These increases in generating capacity are necessary if the commission is to keep pace with the overall provincial growth. In fact, we must keep somewhat ahead of that growth so that we may ensure the people of Ontario that this province will not be hampered by power shortages in any period.

In recent years, Ontario has contributed around 40 per cent of Canada's gross national product. If our share continues even at the 40 per cent figure over the next few years, which we do not doubt will be the fact, then we can expect substantial increases in capital investment, much of it for equipment using electrical energy. At the same time it is confidently predicted that Ontario's population will rise by 14 to 18 per cent by 1971—from the present 6.6 million to 7.5 million or even 7.75 million of population by 1971. It is from such expectations of the continuing growth and development of Ontario that has come the need for greater Hydro generating resources.

For 1965, the commission's capital expansion programme calls for an expenditure of $150 million, and I would like to take a moment or two to outline the specific projects under construction and those which are planned for the near future. First, as to the continuing programme of water-power development: The Harmon and Kipling generating stations on the Mattagami River, north of Kapuskasing, are nearing completion. At Harmon, the turbines are in place and generators are being installed, and at this station both units will begin delivering 129,200 kilowatts this summer. About three miles downstream, concreting operations are underway on the Kipling station, which will produce 125,400 kilowatts next year.

Tied in with the development of power resources in the James Bay watershed is our country's first 500,000-volt-extra-high-voltage transmission line. At present, power is being transmitted to Hanmer in the Sudbury area at 230,000 volts from two other generating stations in the watershed—Otter Rapids and Little Long—and we expect that by November the voltage to Hanmer will be raised to 500,000. By next year the line will extend to Kleinburg, northwest of Toronto, coinciding with completion of the Kipling station, and the entire line will be switched to its full capacity.

Ontario Hydro started the $200 million power development programme in northern Ontario in 1958. The success of this project hinged, for economy's sake, on transmission from the James Bay watershed plants at 500,000 volts, which is more than double Hydro's present maximum transmission voltage.

I should like to mention that Ontario Hydro is studying the feasibility of direct-current high voltage transmission. This system gives promise of being less costly than present methods, enabling greater quantities of electricity to flow over longer distances with minimum power losses.

Hydro's third current hydro-electric project is at Mountain Chute on the Madawaska River near Renfrew, where a two-unit 160,000-kilowatt station will be completed in 1967.

By far the greatest emphasis today is on thermal generation, both coal-fired and nuclear. In this connection, two important announcements were made last year. The first was that a new coal-fired plant, the Lambton generating station, would be built in Moore township near Sarnia, and the second, that a large nuclear power station was to be constructed in Pickering township, Ontario county.

Initially, it was stated that the Lambton station would have two 500,000-kilowatt units. Later in the year, the decision was made to double the size of the Lambton station by two additional units, duplicates of the pair ordered earlier. Preliminary work has already started and contracts totalling $75 million were awarded for the four turbo-generators, boilers and auxiliary equipment.

There are many reasons for increasing the capacity of Lambton at this time. Savings on engineering, construction and purchasing of the major equipment will amount to several million dollars, and since it takes five years or more from the time a decision is made to bring one of these plants into service, it is necessary to plan them well ahead.

The total cost of Lambton is estimated at $220 million, and its four units are scheduled to come into operation, one each year from 1968 to 1971.

Good progress is continuing at the Lakeview generating station, on Toronto's western outskirts. The third 300,000-kilowatt unit was started up last year. The fourth unit will be brought into operation this year, and by 1968, with all eight units in service, the plant will have a total capacity of 2.4 million kilowatts.

In the nuclear-electric field, construction of this country's first full-scale plant, the 200,000-kilowatt Douglas Point station on Lake Huron, will be completed this year.

Mr. Chairman, in view of Ontario Hydro's two-pronged development in the thermal generation field, it should be stressed that both coal-fired and nuclear power stations are vital to the system. Each has a definite and important and interrelated role to play. Nuclear-electric power stations, for economy's sake, must be operated as base-load plants, working at capacity around the clock. By contrast, coal-fired plants are ideally suited to meet peak demands. They may be started up and shut down on relatively short notice, and thus are valuable and essential in our system of electrical generation. Apart from these considerations, coal-fired units have been gaining in efficiency in recent years. We expect that nuclear and coal-fired plants will represent about 60 per cent of our total generating capacity by 1975, compared with 27 per cent today.

There may be a misunderstanding about the location of plants which I would like to try to clarify. Once a plant site is selected, after thorough study by our engineering staffs, and the announcement made, there are those who appear to believe that a new generating station will provide a vast quantity of low-cost electricity for the exclusive use of the municipality or the area immediately adjacent to the plant.

This is, of course, not the case, since generating stations are constructed for the benefit of the entire system. During the construction period, and to some extent after construction has ended, there is bound to be a beneficial economic influence on any local municipality and the surrounding area.

Through a complex network of transmission lines and transformer stations, the energy supplied by the commission is fed into the Hydro grid system and is ultimately delivered to customers through equally complex distribution systems.

Traditionally, most of the power produced by Ontario Hydro has come from hydro-electric plants. Our present planning indicates that further remaining water power sites, which it is economic to develop, will be included in our future construction programme for the next few years, probably at the rate of about one a year. It is estimated that there are only some 1.5 million kilowatts available from such sites.

In 1964, at the Niagara and St. Lawrence generating stations, power production decreased because of low stream flow to the extent of about 4.4 billion kilowatt-hours. To offset the lower output from these hydro-electric plants, an extra 1.8 million tons of coal were consumed in thermal generating stations.

Total coal consumption for the year was held to 3.1 million tons, through purchases of power from neighbouring utility systems with whom we are interconnected. In mentioning our power interconnections, I would refer to the fact that Ontario Hydro and two Michigan utilities, Detroit Edison and Consumers' Power companies, have made application to establish another interconnection in the Sarnia area. If approved by government agencies in Ottawa and Washington, the new international tie-line, the third between Ontario and Michigan, will span the St. Clair River between Detroit Edison's St. Clair power plant and a point about 17 miles south of Sarnia.

Two projects, started in 1964, will help to improve the flow of water available at the Niagara generating stations. Deepening and clearing the Chippawa canal, which flows into the forebay of the Sir Adam Beck plants, is expected to increase the output of both stations by 11 per cent. This work ceased during the winter and will be resumed as weather permits. The second project, in cooperation with the power authority of the state of New York, placing a two-mile ice boom across Lake Erie at its outlet into the Niagara River, was completed late last fall. This boom has proved highly successful in forming and stabilizing an ice sheet on the lake to prevent massive discharges of ice into the river which, in the past, have sharply curtailed power production and damaged shoreline installations. Of course, with the coming of spring this boom has now been removed.

It has been known to a number of people in the province that a comprehensive study on costing by Hydro is underway. This is an examination designed to ensure that the costs of generation, transmission and distribution are allocated equitably to the various classes of service. This study is not yet complete.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, could I ask you a question? When was the last study of this kind done?

Mr. Boyer: When was the last study done?

Mr. Thompson: Have you ever done a study before?

Mr. Boyer: I suppose, throughout the entire 58- or 59-year history of Hydro, this matter has been constantly under study. I cannot think there would be a moment when it was not under study.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, sir; but I am asking: You mentioned before that this was the first complete study under consideration; is that what you are saying?

Mr. Boyer: No, I have not said that at all. Perhaps I might continue and give you a little more information.

In the matter of rates it is interesting to note that, in the face of the numerous influences tending to force costs upward, the cost of electricity in Ontario has remained very steady over the past decade or more. While many municipal commissions adjusted their rates during 1964, the average cost per kilowatt-hour to their residential customers, an estimated 1.13 cents, represents no change from the preceding year. Since 1949, the average cost per kilowatt-hour has increased by little more than one-tenth of a cent, or about ten per cent. This is quite an achievement during a period when the consumer price index has risen by more than 33 per cent. If we refer only to the last ten years, the average cost to the residential customer in 1964 was 1.13 cents per kilowatt-hour, 4.2 per cent less than the 1.18 cents average in 1955.

Mr. Chairman, there may be a limit to Ontario Hydro's ability to hold rates at their present levels or nearly so, with all our costs steadily advancing, but I would like to assure the House that the Ontario Hydro commission will continue to maintain this province's outstanding position with respect to low-cost electricity.

The major explanation for Ontario Hydro's present low rates, among the very lowest in the world, is due to the constant search for new and improved operational techniques which reduce costs and promote efficient electrical service. As an example, advances in technology, communications, transportation, and administrative techniques are making it possible to provide electrical service from a reduced number of Hydro rural offices. Thus the commission has progressively implemented a plan to consolidate a number of its rural service areas. Last year, three rural operating areas were amalgamated, and this is expected to result in savings of up to $250,000 in one year. Over the entire province, this integration plan has enabled Hydro to reduce to a substantial degree its annual operating costs, which is of benefit in maintaining rural rates.

Credit must be given to the municipal electrical utilities for their effective and efficient operational methods. The growing use of electricity by the customers of the 357 municipal Hydro systems is one indication of the effectiveness of their approach. Monthly consumption per residential customer is estimated at 510 kilowatt-hours for 1964, up from 498 in 1963, and, as a further comparison, up from 355 kilowatt-hours in 1953.

At the technical and administrative levels, the utilities have continued a programme of development and improvement which has won the respect of electrical authorities throughout the world. Working as a unit through the office of the association of municipal electrical utilities, often in co-operation with Ontario Hydro, they dealt with such diverse matters as rates, accident prevention, finance, employee relations and load studies.

The statistics indicate the extent of the municipal Hydro operation in Ontario. Serving an estimated 1,544,000 customers by the end of 1964, the municipal systems purchased 65 per cent of the primary energy sold by Ontario Hydro. Their combined power purchases for the year were 24.3 billion kilowatt-hours, which is an increase of 8.7 per cent over 1963. Total assets of the municipal Hydro systems are about $500 million. They also have an equity in the provincial Hydro system totalling around $350 million, which has been paid into Ontario Hydro's sinking fund and applied against the provincial commission's debt.

The effectiveness of Ontario's unique system of electric power distribution was demonstrated in 1964 by the fact that no less than 29 municipally owned systems celebrated 50 years of successful service, and 34 others will attain this mark in 1965.

For Ontario Hydro an important highlight of 1964 was the amicable relations between the commission and its union employees. After five months of bargaining, a two-year contract was reached by the bargaining committees of Ontario Hydro and the Ontario Hydro employees' union. It is worth mentioning that the bargaining agenda covered a total of 199 items, including 187 submitted by the union and 12 by the commission. Considering the involved nature of many of the items, it is a credit to the 8,000-strong union membership and its executive, and to the commission management representatives that mutual agreement was reached so quickly.

I want to refer briefly to load-building. There are several reasons why the Hydro organization, like most North American electrical utilities, is engaged in a concerted drive for a fair and adequate share of the energy market, particularly among residential electrical customers.

Capital investment of the electrical utilities in plant and equipment, in relation to revenue, is higher than most, if not all, other industries. At the same time, the fixed costs of serving residential electrical customers has risen by about 50 per cent in the past 20 years or more.

It is a commonly accepted fact among utilities that the capital outlay to supply minimum electrical service for lighting and television is about the same as the cost of providing power for a home with all the major appliances. In other words, for almost the same capital costs, Hydro can deliver either 250 or 750 kilowatt-hours a month.

In recent years there has been a marked increase in co-operation among all segments of the electrical industry, particularly among the utilities and manufacturers, in developing joint marketing programmes for many types of electrical appliances and equipment. Such programmes have produced interesting and gratifying results.

Ontario's publicly owned Hydro utilities, operating on a non-profit basis, are responsible for supplying power at the lowest possible cost. For greater success, diversity is all-important. Increasing diversification of electrical energy consumption by municipal residential customers has had a marked and beneficial effect on Hydro's rates, because the average use of electric energy by this class of customer has almost tripled in the past 20 years.

Therefore, our advertising and sales programmes are directly aimed at maintaining electrical consumption growth rates at the desired level; this is without doubt the best and surest means of keeping unit costs to a minimum, and at the same time providing a high standard of living for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, I have endeavoured to bring to the attention of hon. members a number of subjects concerning Ontario Hydro. The commitment which is related to the vote now before the House represents the determination of Ontario and of Canada to advance the peaceful uses of atomic energy in our nation and, by the same means, to bring benefits to our people in this province through further assurances of ample supplies of electricity for the needs of Ontario's future.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest, and a degree of wonderment to this enthusiastic exposition of the effectiveness of public ownership in the power field. I sometimes wonder why that enthusiasm cannot creep over into other fields where its application has equal validity.

However, I shall leave that for the moment. I have a series of questions and topics I would like to raise and I would judge, by the look of the clock, that if we are adjourning at six we are not going to complete by six.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): We do not necessarily adjourn at six.

Mr. MacDonald: I was just taking the word of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) that we were adjourning at the regular hour. That was three hours ago, and I thought his word was good for three hours.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: We have 15 minutes and we will get a lot of questions answered.

Mr. MacDonald: Good. My first question, Mr. Chairman, is with regard to the pockets of private power which still exist in the province of Ontario and I think, particularly, of the area of Sault Ste. Marie. This past fall, for example, when the select committee on mining was in that area, there were representations made by spokesmen of the mining industry who were seeking to expand the industry, indicating that the high cost of hydro-electric power was cited as the major problem. The comment came from Graham Duff of Vauze Mines Limited, and it also came from Mr. Dumbrille of Tribag.

Now my question to the spokesman for Hydro in the House is: Has any consideration been given to integrating these few pockets of private power in the province so that you can eliminate what is described—for example, in these news stories—as a margin of at least 12 per cent higher cost for power and therefore an obstacle to the development of the mining industry?

Mr. Boyer: Does the hon. member mean a higher cost charged by Great Lakes Power Company than Hydro rates?

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

Mr. Boyer: I must say that each municipality has the right of forming its own decision as to whether it enters into a contract with Ontario Hydro for the provision of electric energy to that municipality. The people of Sault Ste. Marie are served by the Great Lakes Power Company and we have had no indication in any official way that they are dissatisfied with that or they intend to vote in favour of any different system, Mr. Chairman.

I might say that we are interconnected with the Great Lakes company in serving a certain customer where Great Lakes requires a further supply of electric power. But I think this is a matter that we must leave to local option. There are several other communities around this province where they operate a municipal system or they buy power from a private company and Ontario Hydro, I think, will have to wait until such time as the municipality itself agrees that it would like to enter into a contract with us.

Mr. MacDonald: I suggest to the hon. member that it is not purely a case of the cities. For example the comments of Mr. Dumbrille of Tribag was that he told the select committee that it was unfair to mining companies that they should have to pay additional costs for roads and hydro-electric power when industries located near the towns had the same service at a more favourable cost.

In other words, they were placed in an unfavourable position, comparatively speaking, and therefore their competitive position in the field presumably is that much more difficult, particularly if they are at the development stage.

Let me go on to one or two other related aspects of costs—or did the hon. member have a comment there?

Mr. Boyer: I may have a little later.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member referred to the imports of coal from the United States for the thermal nuclear plant. I wonder if he could give me an explanation for something that has been drawn to my attention and puzzles me.

I understand that on each ton of coal imported from the United States that Hydro have to pay a 50 cent import duty. For each ton of coal that is imported by the steel industry, whether it be Stelco in Hamilton or whether it be Algoma in Sault Ste. Marie, I am informed that they get a rebate—and this intrigues me—of 49.9 cents. So that in effect their payment is one-tenth of one cent. I do not know whether that covers the administrative costs or not.

What is the reason for the fact that a public utility like Hydro, providing power at cost, should have to pay an import duty of this nature, whereas the steel industry gets a rebate of 49.9 cents of the 50 cents?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, I think we share the idea that has been expressed by the hon. member for York South!

Ontario Hydro has, as a matter of fact, been making representations to the government at Ottawa asking that this 50 cents per ton charge be removed.

The coal is used for purposes of power generation. Personally, I cannot see what objection there could be from any part of the country to removing this 50 cents per ton tariff.

I must tell the hon. member that we are fully aware of this and are doing our utmost to have the policy changed at Ottawa in this respect.

Mr. MacDonald: I assure the hon. member that he has the support of, at least, the New Democrats; whether or not the Liberals are with him in this onslaught from the government at Ottawa, I do not know.

May I ask, by way of a general question to the hon. member: He made reference to Hydro's experiments in direct current transmission. I presume that this is this high-powered, long-distance transmission. Can the hon. member give us any indication as to what Hydro's attitude is on the proposition of a national grid that is being discussed more and more?

I raise it, not only because of the proposition of a national grid itself, but because I recall two or three years ago when Robert Macaulay was spokesman on behalf of Hydro he drew attention to the fact that we do not have any link—I do not think we have one as yet—between the northwestern portion of our Hydro system and the south. Presumably this would provide a link there, as well as tying in with the national grid, and be a further advantage.

In brief, do we favour the proposition of a national grid? Are we participating in the promotion of a national grid in the light of the advantages that might flow from it?

Mr. Boyer: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the Ontario Hydro certainly favours this proposition and we are participating through membership by our chief engineer, Mr. Harold Smith, in the federal-provincial working committee on long-distance transmission. This committee has now been functioning for the past three years. There has already been prepared a preliminary study and an interim report.

If I had known that the hon. member wished more information on this I would have been prepared to bring a more complete answer, but I can assure him that while it is true that in northern Ontario there is the area which is not now interconnected between the eastern and western systems, we are in support of the national principle and are doing what we can toward it.

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate the hon. member's reply. I recall a year or so ago some considerable controversy in the House with regard to an overestimate as to the needs in the northwest and the construction of a plant at the Lakehead which was more or less idle, not running to full capacity. It would seem to me that if we had a national grid, or even if we had a tie-in with the southern system, you certainly would not be sitting with idle productive capacity in the north, as was the case at that time.

Indeed, is that plant that was built at the Lakehead two or three years ago in full production or is it still idling along?

Mr. Boyer: No, Mr. Chairman, this plant is not yet in full production. At the time this plant was planned it was felt that it was more economic to construct it there than to interconnect the east and west systems.

However, time passes and conditions change and I am advised that it is now regarded as more economically feasible to interconnect the east and west systems of Ontario Hydro.

Mr. MacDonald: I must say that after the hours of discussion we had a few years ago, this is a fascinating announcement. I would think, at five minutes before six, that we are going to have plenty of opportunity to pursue it at some later time.

Mr. Boyer: We live in a changed and changing world.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not criticizing; as a matter of fact, there is such obvious logic in the proposition of linking our northern and southern properties, quite apart from the broader proposition of a national grid, particularly when we are sitting with a plant up there that is not running at 100 per cent capacity. One does not have to be very bright to realize that this kind of situation requires some rationalization and I welcome the announcement of it. It would seem to me, after the rather controversial discussions we had on the relationship between the northern and the southern systems, in standing committee two or three years ago, that perhaps it would be interesting to have Hydro—in fact, has Hydro been before the standing committee this year?

Mr. Boyer: Yes, they have.

Mr. MacDonald: The day I was not there to explore the ramifications of this; however, I pass on to another issue I want to raise.

I am rather interested by the pleas of a few people, farmers—and this may be something the hon. member is aware of—in the district of north Cochrane, in the township of Brower and Lamarche, who had been seeking hydro power for quite some time. The reason I am intrigued with their plight is that they have been trying for three years to get hydro-electric power. In one instance, this man, whose name happens to be Carl W. Moore, lives about two miles from the line; his neighbours in the opposite direction are 1.75 miles from the line. The policy apparently states that Hydro cannot go more than two-thirds of a mile to service any single farmer.

Now the interesting—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Unless he wants to pay for it.

Mr. MacDonald: Unless he wants to pay for it, right; and the proposition is that, if he wants to, it is going to cost him $14,000—which, on the marginal income of northern farmers, I am sure, is not feasible.

Mr. Boyer: I am glad to say that the figure is $10,000—in the neighbourhood of $10,000.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but in the din I just cannot hear.

Mr. Boyer: I am glad to advise the hon. member that the figure is closer to $10,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I accept the hon. member's revision and my case is well made. The farmer is going to have to pay $10,000 to get the Hydro lines in.

The thing that interests me about this, Mr. Chairman, is that this farmer is on land which was developed in part on public moneys. It is land which is being subsidized in its development. He is living, for example, in an area where, according to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) in June, 1964, the official view was that a farmer's needs are from five to six units for beef farming, and this would require an area of half a mile to three miles long. As each unit is a half-mile square, if you will take time off sometime and calculate this, I think you will find that it is accurate.

In other words, the specifications laid down by The Department of Agriculture for what is required for beef farming are such that it is impossible to get a farm in the outdated limitation of two-thirds of a mile that Hydro is willing to consider in carrying hydro power to farmers. Combined with that the fact that the land itself has been developed and brought into production in part through public money. I am not talking about land that was brought into production a generation or two ago by mistake. It seems to me you have an odd inconsistency and contradiction between the policy of The Department of Agriculture and the policies, I presume, of The Department of Municipal Affairs, for breaking new land, and Hydro policy, because your policy simply will not make it possible for these people to get hydro-electric power. His contention is that Hydro has said it would cost the farmer $14,000 notwithstanding the hon. member's suggestion of $10,000.

An alternative suggestion apparently has been put to these men—that ARDA will visit them this summer and will move them out into some other area. This man is obviously a person of considerable capacities. He has done some calculating and he is quite convinced that it would cost the public purse more through ARDA to pick them up holus-bolus and move them to another area, leaving their farm land, which has been developed in part through public subsidy, to become neglected.

All throughout this you have inconsistencies in public policies, and I want to put the question to the hon. member as to whether or not generally speaking, or at least in circumstances such as this, there would not be some flexibility in his policy which would make it possible for hydro to be taken in to these people. Mr. Moore points out, for example, that situated on his farm is Downard, a station on the ONR line. In other words, he is not away off, completely out of touch with civilization; he is at least close enough to civilization that an ONR station is on his farm. All this leads me to wonder why Hydro cannot introduce a bit of flexibility in its policies, in order to get power to these farmers.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, the name of Carl Moore is well known to most hon. Ministers in the government, and certainly is well known to those in Hydro, not only in the local area and the region, but here at headquarters in Toronto. If there was some means of assisting him this means would have been found long ago. I must say that I think that Mr. Moore is a very fine farmer and has a good farm, but I understand that he was advised when locating there that it would be better for him, more advantageous altogether, if he were closer to the highway. Yet this was the land that he decided to go to and to his disappointment he found out our policies in Ontario require contracts of two-thirds of a mile to a bona fide farm.

The hon. member will remember that in the time he and I have been in this House this policy has been relaxed quite considerably. But I can think of hundreds of cases that I know of myself where people have built their own lines from beyond where Hydro could go. How would we justify building a special line for Mr. Moore when all of these other people have done this at their own expense? If there was any way we could be of assistance to him we would be. I can only hope that there will be more customers along his road and that it will be possible for him to have the benefits of hydro at an early date.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. member who speaks for Hydro should take his cause to the Cabinet and the Cabinet should resolve the inconsistencies in public policy which are enunciated by this government. It is idle for the hon. Minister of Agriculture to get up and to say that a certain area is required for beef farming in the north, when the area required means that the farms are going to be more than two-thirds of a mile apart.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, the government did not say where this man should build his house. He could build his house nearer the services.

Mr. MacDonald: As I understand from Mr. Moore's explanation of the situation to me, he was the recipient of subsidies for the clearing of land. Once again, if you do not want people to clear in a certain area that is going to be too far removed, why are you giving them the subsidy? You were participants in the settling of these farmers at a distance which now you contend is too far from the hydro-electric power.

I come back again to the hon. Minister of Agriculture's contentions. He is with us now and I will quote once again this paragraph for the hon. members who may be interested in following it:

In June, 1964, Mr. Stewart, the Minister of Agriculture, stated that in this area a farmer needs from five to six units to beef farm. This would be an area of one-half mile by three miles long, as each unit is half a mile square.

In other words it is impossible to have adequate—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. member that is the first knowledge I have ever had of having made such a statement as that and I would be interested to know where I made it and under whose authority he is now reading it, because I know nothing about such a statement ever having been made.

Mr. MacDonald: I am reading it in a communication I have had from Carl W. Moore, and I shall find out from Mr. Moore where he got the information, because, as a matter of fact, he came down to visit the hon. Minister and to visit a lot of people down here.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He never came down to visit me in my office at any time. I was at Mr.

Moore's farm, I have talked to him, I have met him and his wife in his own house, and I have met him at a meeting in northern Ontario.

Mr. Moore, to my knowledge, has never been at my office nor has he ever come to see me.

Mr. MacDonald: I may be in error in his coming to visit you. He came down and visited many people in this government. But I think it is time that somebody said to this government that either it reconcile the inconsistencies in its own policy or stop denying citizens the right to power in this province.

You have relaxed policies so that, for example, you took power into cottages in this province, which ten, 15, 20 or 25 years ago you refused. You have relaxed it because the power system in the province of Ontario has been built on the proposition that everybody in the province of Ontario is entitled to get it—and, as a matter of fact, you are providing subsidies to get it to them. I forget the figures now, but we have had recapitulations of the amount of money that has been paid over the years as a subsidy of this government to get power into every home in the province of Ontario.

Here is a group of people who have been settled and whose farming conditions are now disputed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I will get the documentation to it and I would judge from the way Mr. Moore operates that he will be able to provide the documentation for it, too—to show that your refusal to provide power is just inconsistent with your other policies.

I note there are some suggestions to me that they want me to take note of the time. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we are not going to cut off this debate—we can resume it, I hope, after the Easter recess—because I have a few more things to raise and I understand that some members of the Liberal Party have, too.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when we resume there will be certain items on the order paper to deal with and we will then resume the estimates of this department.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister can give us some indication as to the sequence of estimates after Easter.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will let hon. members know what the programme is before we meet. If that is satisfactory, Mr. Speaker, I will let you and the hon. leader of the Opposition know after I have had a look at the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald: I see.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The House stands adjourned until 3 of the clock, Tuesday, April 27.

The House adjourned at 6.10 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, April 27, 1965
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, April 27, 1965

Statement re housing for seasonal workers, Mr. Stewart	2281
Statement re Ontario centre of science and technology, Mr. Auld	2281
Estimates, Department of Energy and Resources Management, Mr. Simonett, concluded	2282
Estimates, Department of Economics and Development, Mr. Randall	2296
Recess, 6 o'clock	2311

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery students from Bruce Street public school, Milton.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I bring to the attention of the House a matter of considerable importance to those hon. members who represent the cash crop areas of the province.

For some time now, farmers in the cash crop areas have been seriously handicapped in their operations by reason of the problems associated with seasonal labour, particularly as far as the adequate provision of housing accommodation is concerned. Following consideration of the problem involved, I wish to inform the House that a decision has been reached to introduce a programme to assist farmers in providing such housing as might be required to accommodate their seasonal help.

To meet the shortage of accommodation it has been decided to make a grant to assist in the cost of construction of new houses, or for the renovation of established housing, on the basis of 50 per cent of the total cost of construction; but, in any case, not to exceed a maximum payment of $150 for each worker to be accommodated. The grant will be shared under the current federal-provincial farm labour agreement on a dollar-per-dollar basis. Plans for the construction or renovation must have the approval of the Ontario Department of Agriculture and be in accordance with the health standards determined by the local officer of health. Grants will only be available to farmers for the accommodation of hired workers and not for members of the farmer's family.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that there is considerable merit in this type of expenditure. I think it is one of the answers to the labour problem that confronts the cash crop areas. It also has the added advantage of giving encouragement to the farmer who in the cash crop area is an important employer of labour.

The plan will be administered by the joint federal-provincial farm labour committee under the chairmanship of R. G. Bennett, assistant Deputy Minister of The Department of Agriculture.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall last August that the decision of the government to establish an Ontario centre of science and technology as the provincial centennial project was announced. A timetable for the completion of the first phase of the project was outlined and it indicated that we planned to have the drawings and specifications for the initial building and related structures completed by May of 1965. I am very pleased to tell the hon. members today that we are on schedule and that we have the detailed drawings and sketches prepared. They will be in committee room No. 1 for hon. members who wish to see them.

As the plans and theme for the centre are now more fully developed, we have established the final cost of the first phases of the project, that is, those phases that will be completed in 1967. The total cost is approximately $14 million, of which the federal government will contribute $2.5 million under the terms of the Dominion-provincial agreement. The provincial share will be spread over the three-year period from 1965 to 1967.

I may say that we anticipate substantial financial participation and other assistance from private industry. Negotiations are now under way with several corporations and I expect we will be able to make announcements on some of these co-operative projects in the near future.

One of the major advantages of this project will be that it will interpret science and technology for all our citizens, and at the same time be extremely useful from an educational point of view for our young people of all school ages.

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to draw to the attention of the Legislature, a matter of some significance to hon. members of the House.

Last week when senior executives of education and delegates, assembled in Toronto for their annual conference, top honours in the elementary section of the Ontario public speaking contest finals went to Mark Downey, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Cosmo Downey of Carp, Ontario.

This young fellow won in his township contest some weeks ago, went on to win the county contest, later won the eastern Ontario contest and, as I mentioned above, has now taken top honours for the province of Ontario. It is of some interest, I think, that the topic chosen was "My Farm Home."

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 24th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT
(continued)

On vote 608:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned for Easter, I was in the midst of dealing with a topic in relation to Hydro. I presume that is where we are picking up.

I was presenting the case of a group of farmers in north Cochrane who had not been able to get hydro for some 20 years. The details are all on the record and I am not going to repeat them, but it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there emerges from this a policy that I want to present to the hon. member who is our spokesman with the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission (Mr. Boyer). We should give some reconsideration to the underlying principle in publicly owned Hydro, namely, our intention to get hydro power to everybody in this province.

I concede to the hon. member that at the moment, these farmers do not fall into the distance requirements that have been laid down by Hydro, but as I indicated when I was commenting on this prior to Easter, they have established their farms there as a result of agricultural policies for which there has been some public subsidization. They are now operating beef farms, which in accordance with the argument of Mr. Moore, whose letter I quoted quite extensively last time, would not conform with the regulations laid down by Hydro and which Mr. Moore contends are part of a policy that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) enunciated at some point. The hon. Minister appeared to deny this. I have not, over Easter, been able to get the documentation, but I shall, and shall present it to him at some time.

In other words, there seems to be some conflict in various government policies and it occurs to me that, surely, either on an individual case or as a general rule, the policy should be open to reinterpretation, so that we can get hydro to these people. I would remind the hon. member that we have changed our policies many times down through the years, in order, for example, to get hydro to cottages throughout many parts of the province. I am convinced that in the earlier stages, these cottages could not have got it, in accordance with the first statement of policy.

I present that to the hon. Minister in the hope that he will regard it with some sympathetic consideration.

While on Hydro, I want to refer once again to Hydro's inspection. This is a matter that was discussed at considerable length a few years ago in the House—the adequacy of that inspection, and whether or not there should be a greater implementation of a policy that would make inspection more automatic, rather than just on referral. I raise it, because it seems to me that a statement by Fire Chief Frank Coakwell as quoted on March 2 of this year in the Toronto Daily Star, points to rather a dangerous situation. If I may just quote briefly from this news story:

The fire chief recommended that Ontario Hydro establish a programme of inspection covering all installations in use 30 years or more. He said defective wiring was the main cause of nine of the 17 major fires involving living quarters last year. Chief Coakwell said that Ontario Hydro cooperated with his department to the extent of accepting and acting upon referrals, but this is not enough, he said. Last year unsafe wiring was noted in 407 premises which were referred to Ontario Hydro for such action as it might deem necessary. During 1964, he said, building department inspectors covered 4,030 dwellings. Of these, 1,158 were found satisfactory but 2,872 did not meet bylaw requirements.

There is the general situation. But the specific proposition he suggests is that all buildings of more than 30 years of age should come under automatic inspection by Hydro.

Related to it is the reverse kind of situation. On April 14, just as we were adjourning for Easter, the Globe and Mail carried a story of Hydro going in and inspecting houses in the St. James Town development area, which are about to be torn down for redevelopment.

At 71 Rose Avenue, Mrs. Walter Blair and Mrs. Eugene McKinley report that an inspection was made last week. Mrs. Blair, a tenant for two years, said it is the first Hydro inspection during her tenancy.

The two families have been given notice to move by today, although no home has been found for them. Hydro has given instructions for certain repairs or changes to be made on the building that is going to be demolished.

I present all of this to the hon. Minister by way of a general request as to what is Hydro's policy, if there have been any changes in it with regard to inspection, and has it given any specific consideration to the proposals of the fire chief that all buildings of more than 30 years of age should be inspected, without exception?

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Chairman, the matter of inspection of electrical installations in buildings is dealt with under The Fire Marshals Act.

Under an arrangement made a number of years ago, there has been consultation between the fire marshal—who was then W. J. Scott, QC, who has died recently—and officials of Ontario Hydro and several other interested departments. A plan was set up whereby the fire authorities in each municipality would be responsible for inspection of premises, and under that Act the inspector, who represents the fire marshal of Ontario, has the power to order an inspection. Consequently when the Ontario Hydro inspector goes to the premises and finds the electrical arrangements are inadequate, he can then order that they be brought up to the proper standard.

There has been a review of this entire matter within the past year and it has been considered that this is a good system but perhaps it could be made a little more effective to change the wording in the order itself, issued by the fire marshal's representative.

As to inspection of all dwellings over 30 years of age, there are, of course, about 800,000 such dwellings in Ontario. In some municipalities every dwelling has been inspected, not only by the fire marshal's representative but by the Hydro inspector—these are smaller places, of course.

It seems to us, sir, that this system is adequate because when a dwelling or other premises is being inspected, from the point of view of fire hazard, there are other conditions which may contribute to the hazards which should be inspected by a person who has been properly trained for this work, and, as a matter of fact, the electrical arrangements will only form a part of that whole consideration.

I would like to thank the hon. member for York South for bringing this matter to our attention and it has been considered during the past year.

In the St. James area, certain inspections have been carried out as a result of the order of the fire authorities of the municipality.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if I may make one comment; I judge from what the hon member has said that the responsibility really rests with the fire chief and his staff for seeking out those areas that need inspection. Presumably, from what the hon. member says, Hydro staff come into the picture purely as mechanics on the job, so to speak.

If this is the case one wonders why the fire chief would, in effect, be passing the responsibility over to Hydro if, in the Act, as the hon. member said, it is really his responsibility.

Other than this proposal for a blanket inspection of everything over 30 years of age, it seems to me that we have a dangerous division of responsibility here. I must confess that up until now, I had assumed it was Hydro's responsibility, but in fact it is not Hydro's responsibility to seek out these areas in the first instance. They, in effect, just do the inspection after they have been told to do it and the people telling them to do it are the fire chiefs and their staffs. Now, whether or not there is an acceptance of this responsibility, as fully as is necessary for the protection of the community, I am not in a position to say, but I think it is rather a dangerous area in which to leave a division of responsibility unclarified so that we have rather disastrous consequences flowing from it.

One final point that I would like to raise with the hon. member with regard to Hydro is that during the course of the past year, I raised with him the case of a former employee of Hydro. This man had been offered an opportunity to take another job some distance north after he felt that he had been assured of employment in one of the plants out on the lakeshore. He refused, as a result of which he had been forced to leave Hydro. I am not going to argue the case of his departure—the hon. member is aware, I think, to whom I am referring—because, for better or for worse, this has been decided. There has been an appeal board and he has left the employ of Hydro and I do not think that he has any intention of coming back, nor has Hydro any intention of rehiring him, so that is a closed issue. But there is one aspect of this which disturbs me. I am persuaded, having studied the documents in relationship to this case, that part of the deterioration in relationship between this man and Hydro and some of his superiors, was because, as a security officer, he insisted on doing his job in what some people regarded as too rigorous a fashion during a temporary assignment in the Abitibi Canyon area back in 1963—if I recall the date correctly.

In the course of a statement which he prepared and submitted to the personnel officer of Hydro before the committee of inquiry was established, he made these observations, and I want to quote one or two paragraphs and then ask the hon. member whether or not the accusations included in this were investigated or whether they were just sort of slurred over and forgotten about. I am quoting from this statement which was submitted to H. A. Jackson, construction manager of the Lakeview plant, following an interview with H. A. D. Scott:

Mr. Scott then asked me to summarize events leading to my request for the inquiry. As I did so, I brought his attention to what Mr. A. A. Pepper, security officer from North Bay, had told me when he visited me in Abitibi in June, 1963, in connection with the John J. Lavigne case.

Mr. Pepper said: "Dave, I wouldn't touch this case if I were you. I have only a few years to go and it is better for me to look after the little matters than to lose my job. John got into trouble with the post office here; he reported the safe broken into then the postal inspectors came up. He then confessed to me that he had done it himself and tried to make it look like an outside job by leaving a money order alongside the safe."

Mr. Pepper then said Lavigne was moved from the commission post office in the colony, to take charge of the colony store. The auditing department was called in when the colony residents complained about high prices. Mr. Pepper said Lavigne then admitted that he had been charging one price to the colony employees and one price on his records, and pocketing the proceeds.

Now, if I just give a word of background here. There is rather an out-of-the-ordinary situation with regard to the post office in this instance. I have learned from inquiries elsewhere that the post office was first established back in 1930 and there were such a succession of postmasters, all of whom were employees of Ontario Hydro, that a few years ago Ontario Hydro had in effect been designated as postmaster and one of the employees of Ontario Hydro acts as postmaster when he is in effect assigned this job.

But here you have what appears to be a flat assertion that in this instance there was a simulated robbery, and in quotes on the part of this ex-security officer who has a very creditable record as a security officer in many provinces in this country, the assertions are that he had left money orders outside to give the appearance that the safe had been broken into when in fact he had been engaged in some activity that could not stand the light of day. What does the Hydro do? They move him out as postmaster and put him in charge of the store.

Mr. Boyer: Is that at Fraserdale?

Mr. MacDonald: Right, at Fraserdale. They moved him out as postmaster and put him in charge of the store. And in this statement of the ex-security officer, you have the suggestion that the colony residents complained about high prices. Mr. Pepper said Lavigne, the man involved, admitted that he had been charging one price to the colony employees and one price on the records, and pocketing the proceeds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, this man got into difficulty, I am convinced after reading the record rather carefully, in part because of his determination that this situation was going to be cleaned up. He ran into difficulties with senior people and it was not cleaned up. At least he asserts that not only was it not cleaned up, but the man involved was then put in charge of the stores.

What is the hon. member's comment on what actually did take place?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, I have read a great deal of so-called evidence in this matter. I have not any of the documents here, but I am glad that the hon. member prefaced something that he just said by the words, "he asserts"; because all of these matters that were raised by Mr. David Johnson were gone into fully. He appeared before a committee of inquiry at his own request. The committee was made up of senior personnel located here in Toronto and they went into the entire matter very thoroughly and referred some of these things which he had spoken of to other departments of Hydro.

I have not the information here at hand to read anything to the House concerning this particular matter, but I think that Mr. Johnson's service, if it could be criticized, might be criticized on the strength that he was perhaps extremely zealous. I am not saying that he was dishonest or that other people were trying to hide things from him or cover up anything at all, nor do I accept the statement of Mr. Johnson as to one of the senior men at Fraserdale, that he was near the point of retirement.

Aside from this matter, which I can assure you has been investigated, I am not able at the moment to relate to the House the results of the investigation. I think the hon. member for York South would agree that every effort was made to retain the services of this man in the security guard. He did not wish to leave Lakeview when there was a surplus of staff and it was necessary to move a number of those who had less seniority to other locations. He was offered a very good post at Mountain Chute, which is near Renfrew. But he was unwilling to leave Metro Toronto and therefore he was given, I think, considerable notice so that he could state his willingness to go.

He had already signed a statement saying that he was willing to abide by the findings of the committee of inquiry and to accept alternative employment, but he did not accept alternative employment; and as he did not live up to the commitment that he had given, there was really nothing that we could do for him. He had service of some years with the security guard of Ontario Hydro, but because of his unwillingness to move elsewhere in the province, which, of course, is a condition of anyone's employment, it was therefore on his motion, really, that his employment with Hydro was terminated.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I have to come back to this. The hon. member has rather skillfully, or unwittingly, not dealt with the point that I am really raising. I said as far as the dismissal or the departure from the employment of Hydro of David Johnson is concerned I am not arguing the case. For better or for worse, he is gone. He does not want to come back, Hydro does not want him back. I am not interested in that.

What I am interested in is the hon. member's statement that if the man was open to some criticism it was because he was over-zealous as a security officer.

Now here is a man who has been a security officer—and I will not take the time of the House to give documentation—with the RCMP, with responsible bodies in British Columbia, in Ontario, and I believe in other parts of the country. He has a very creditable, honourable record as a security officer.

What I would like to ask the hon. member is: Where do you draw the line in so-called over-zealous effort on the part of a security officer? If material of Hydro is disappearing—gasoline, equipment—is the officer being over-zealous when he insists that they find out who took it; and that it be returned?

Mr. Boyer: No, not at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this is part of the problem; this is what he did.

Mr. Boyer: But what evidence is there now? The hon. member is not presenting evidence.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not going to get into all of the detail in presenting the evidence. It would take a solid hour. I am just raising with the hon. member the proposition of he himself suggesting that it was over-zealousness. For example, let me deal with one specific that I put to the hon. Minister (Mr. Simonett).

Mr. Boyer: I point out to the hon. member that he is quoting this man's statement.

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

Mr. Boyer: And he has nothing else before him.

Mr. MacDonald: All right!

He quotes directly from Mr. Pepper, who is your security officer from the north, with reference to Lavigne in the post office episode—a simulated robbery for purposes of covering up the tracks in terms of his own activity—in which Pepper states: "He then confessed"—he being Lavigne—"that he had done the job himself and had tried to make it look like an outside job by leaving a money order alongside the safe."

Now is this right or wrong?

Mr. Boyer: And what resulted from that? A court action?

Mr. MacDonald: What resulted from it? He was transferred from being postmaster to being head of the store and when head of the store, and I quote once again from the document which is in your files:

The auditing department was called in when the colony residents complained about high prices. Mr. Pepper said Lavigne then admitted that he had been charging one price to the colony employees and one price on his records and pocketing the proceeds.

Now it is all very well for the hon. member to get up and to complain about overzealous security officers, but what I am asking the hon. member is: Is it a case that the security officer was annoyed—

Mr. Boyer: Really; that is not very fair!

Mr. MacDonald:—that Lavigne confessed to being involved in the simulated robbery, that he was then switched to the head of the stores, that in the store he became guilty of charging more and pocketing the difference?

Now did this take place? Because if this is the kind of thing that takes place, I do not think that the hon. member, as one of the top people in Hydro, is serving the public interest by slurring over this kind of thing.

Mr. Boyer: Well, now, I am really not slurring over anything of the sort, nor slurring over anything; but at the moment I have not the information here to explain this matter to the House. I will certainly take an early opportunity to look into the whole thing.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I heard a speech that the hon. member who is the vice chairman of Hydro made in Niagara Falls last night. I only heard a part of it on the radio in Toronto—

Mr. Boyer: The speech was made in Toronto.

Mr. Bukator: Oh it was in Toronto he made the speech. I heard it on the radio in Toronto. I happened to be here while he was making it.

Mr. Boyer: I could give the hon. member a copy of it.

Mr. Bukator: I should like very much to have a copy of that speech.

Regardless, the essence of the speech was that grants in lieu of taxes are paid by power-houses, or to cities, and in the instance of Niagara Falls they are paying the equivalent of any other taxpayer by way of grants in lieu of taxes. This is what I heard on the radio this morning. I am wondering if that comment is exactly how the hon. member put it, or is it what reporters thought he said.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, it had been my expectation to go to Niagara Falls today to speak at the noon luncheon of the Niagara Falls Rotary Club. I had been invited about six weeks ago to go to Niagara Falls and to speak on Hydro's relationship with that beautiful city. Owing to the business that is before the House, although it is only an hour-and-a-half drive these days to Niagara Falls, I was not able to go and Mr. Strike, the chairman of Ontario Hydro, went to Niagara today and spoke, I would suppose by this time, to the Rotarians there.

I have a copy of the remarks that I intended to make, I cannot just immediately locate what the hon. member has mentioned, but it might be well to say something about this matter and about grants in lieu of taxes in general, although I did touch on this in the estimates last year, and certainly the hon. member for Niagara Falls has frequently raised this matter in this House.

In the year 1964, Hydro paid in excess of $5 million to Ontario municipalities in the form of grants in lieu of taxes. In addition, more than $6 million was paid to the government in water taxes for the use of water passing through hydro-electric stations.

Hydro's tax responsibility differs from that of an individual or a private corporation in several ways. Land holdings and buildings are assessed by The Department of Municipal Affairs and this is an arrangement which assures the municipalities of uniform treatment. Moreover, The Power Commission Act provides the municipalities with the right of appeal against evaluation through the Ontario municipal board. Grants for lands owned by Hydro are equivalent to full municipal taxes. In addition, Hydro pays a business tax on all land and buildings equal to 60 per cent of the real property tax.

Under The Assessment Act, a private corporation engaged in developing and distributing electricity, pays a business tax of 60 per cent on generating stations only, but for the balance of its holdings the rate is 25 per cent, which is less than half of that paid by Hydro.

Grants for installations directly involved in the production and distribution of electricity are established by a special formula, which recognizes that it would be unfair for one municipality to benefit unduly at the expense of power consumers in other parts of the province because it has such installations within its boundaries. The founding principle of Hydro was that the power resources of this province should be developed to benefit everyone, not just those who happen to be placed in a fortunate position by geography.

Therefore, grants in lieu of taxes are paid on the basis of meeting in a fair manner Hydro's responsibilities to the communities in which it owns property, no more and no less. The system of grants in lieu of taxes is under regular review and adjustments have been made from time to time in accordance with changing conditions.

Divisions during the last 12 years, for example, have almost doubled Hydro's contributions to municipal treasuries. In 1952 The Power Commission Act was amended to include payment on buildings used for executive and administrative purposes. In 1958 the business tax paid on these buildings, and all land, was raised from 25 per cent to 60 per cent of the regional property tax. In the following year, provision was made for the payment of a grant in lieu of taxes on power installations. The basis of assessment for generating and transformer station buildings is at the rate of $2 for each square foot of inside ground floor area to which the equalization factor used in the current year by The Department of Municipal Affairs is applied.

In summary, Hydro pays the equivalent of full taxes or better on all property, except generating and transformer stations.

With these general principles in mind, I would like to refer to the specific case of the city of Niagara Falls, because it is the site of Hydro's largest hydro-electric power installation. In 1964, Niagara Falls received from Ontario Hydro, a grant in lieu of taxes of $461,000. Including estimated payments for 1965, Hydro during the last 20 years, has paid more than $5 million in grants to the city of Niagara Falls, including the annex area which was formerly Stamford township.

In spite of this, some city officials feel that the community's economic well-being is in jeopardy, and that the local taxpayer is carrying an unfair burden, all because of Ontario Hydro. To correct this situation, they have said that Hydro should pay full taxes on its power-producing facilities. This would be a wonderful thing for the city of Niagara Falls, but I submit that it would be less welcome by power consumers in other parts of the province who would have to supply the money.

Let us not forget that Hydro's only source of revenue is its customers. As a public utility it makes no profit and the money to pay full taxes on power installations would come from the pockets of the more than two million customers served by Ontario Hydro and the municipal utilities.

In supporting the argument that Hydro should pay full taxes, an editorial in the Niagara Falls Review suggested that Hydro should be to Niagara Falls what General Motors is to Oshawa. I quote from that editorial:

Hydro was conceived and created as a supplier of electricity at cost and not as a source of revenue to municipal governments.

Moreover, the comparison with a labour-intensive industry employing upwards of 17,000 people is misleading. Hydro's Sir Adam Beck plant, with an estimated assessed value almost $10 million higher than that of GM's Oshawa complex, employs only 197 workers.

Hydro has an unusually small labour force in terms of capital investment. A massive power installation costing many millions can be operated 24 hours a day by a staff of a few hundred.

Since the purpose of taxes, Mr. Chairman, is the provision of services needed by the people, such as education, police protection, and so forth, a huge hydro power development costing many millions of dollars creates a very small tax need.

On a per-employee basis, Hydro is more than paying its way. Here is a specific example: Three of the largest industries in Niagara Falls collectively employ a total of 1,138 people who, with their families, require expensive municipal services — roads, water, sewers, schools, and so forth. Last year these three companies paid the city in taxes, the equivalent of $561.28 per employee; Hydro's grant, in lieu of taxes, represented $1,317 for each employee. Another interesting point of comparison is Hydro's payment of taxes on a per-capita basis. Last year, the grant in lieu of taxes paid by Hydro to the city of Niagara Falls was equal to $8.55 for each person in that city's population of about 54,000. Among the 20 largest municipalities in Ontario, the closest to Niagara Falls on a per-capita basis is Etobicoke, where Hydro's grant worked out to about $3.89 a person last year.

I submit that these facts suggest Niagara

Falls receives a fair payment from Ontario Hydro in relation to the demands made upon it for municipal services.

Perhaps the best measure of whether Niagara Falls is carrying an unfair burden can be found in a look at that community's present state of economic health. The special research and surveys branch of The Department of Economics and Development has done a number of studies on the Niagara Falls district. These studies, I suggest, show that the city of Niagara Falls has a favourable debenture debt. The per-capita debt is lower than the provincial average and the trend is actually decreasing—the opposite of the general trend in the province, which is up.

A rising commercial building rate reflects the healthy state of the tourist industry. In addition, the studies that I mentioned show 19 new manufacturing operations were started in the city in the last 15 years and are still in operation today. Existing companies, including some of the 17 largest companies in the city, have continued to expand facilities and production in recent years, indicating a continued satisfaction with the area and optimism for the future.

Recent employment trends in the Niagara area are similar to the provincial average. Industrial service land values are comparable or lower than in similar centres in the region. Finally, industrial rates for electricity in Niagara Falls are lower than in Welland or St. Catharines. In fact, the power rate for industry at Niagara Falls is lower than in the city of Toronto.

If Niagara Falls, according to statements which have been made quite frequently, is suffering from economic ills, I would think this hardly indicates that is the case. I am not suggesting that Niagara Falls is without problems or that its elected representatives do not face large and varied difficulties—which are common to other communities in Ontario in an era of rapid urban growth—but I think that no one should lose sight of what Hydro contributes to Niagara Falls and the surrounding area, in addition to the payment of grants in lieu of taxes.

I mentioned at the beginning of what I have just been saying, the matter of water rentals, through which Hydro pays for the water used to generate electricity as it passes through hydro-electric stations. Since the end of World War II, Hydro has paid more than $12 million directly to the Niagara parks commission in the form of water rentals. This large sum has been used in the development of a parks system which has few rivals anywhere in the world. In a statement earlier this year, the general manager of the parks commission, Mr. Max Gray, noted that roughly half of the park commission's income comes from water rentals paid by Ontario Hydro. This park system, which was built and maintained at no cost to Niagara Falls taxpayers, has played an important part in the growth of the local tourist industry to its present place of prime importance.

Any evaluation of Hydro's contribution to the economic growth and prosperity should give full recognition to what the creation of this beautiful park system has meant to Niagara Falls and district. Until only recently, the scenic attractions of the Ontario side of the river contrasted vividly with the situation in Niagara Falls, New York, with the result that the bulk of the tourist business flows into the Canadian community. Only with the development of the United States share of the Niagara River's power potential by a public authority, did the creation of a park system, and other amenities to attract visitors, receive serious attention in New York state. The expansion of tourist facilities in the city, of course, has a direct bearing on the tax assessment and revenue.

Another important contribution by Hydro is assistance in providing local services. Critics in Niagara Falls have complained that the Hydro power canal divides the community. But municipal sewage is disposed of in the canal. It acts as a major storm sewer for some areas and it is also a source of water supply for local industries. These are only a few examples of services worth hundreds of thousands of dollars which have been provided by Hydro over the years at no cost to Niagara Falls.

During the last 15 years, Hydro's payroll in the area has seldom been less than $5 million a year, and in several years has reached between $10 and $15 million, totalling $125 million in this period. In the last two decades, Hydro has purchased nearly $250 million worth of goods and services in the Niagara region. Hydro installations themselves are important tourist attractions. Regular tours are conducted through the Queenston plant seven days a week, the year around, and approximately 500,000 people visit Hydro's floral clock each year. No other community receives the same benefits from Hydro in the development of local commerce.

Over the years, Hydro has undertaken extensive remedial work at the Canadian Falls and channel improvements upstream. This work has preserved and enhanced the scenic spectacle of the Falls—which attracts hundreds of thousands of visitors each year—by reducing the effects of erosion and spreading an unbroken curtain of water along the length of the crest. In total, this work has involved an expenditure of more than $20 million by Ontario Hydro and United States authorities.

The argument might be made that these improvements were to the advantage of the power utilities. That is true, but it should also be noted that the Niagara Treaty between Canada and the United States, signed in 1950, specified for the first time in the history of the river that the preservation of the Falls takes precedence over the needs of the utilities on both sides of the Niagara River. The treaty set a statutory minimum on the amount of water passing over the Falls, and the remainder, which varies with the season, is available to the utilities for the production of electricity.

Mr. Chairman, I could list many other advantages, ranging from the illumination of the Canadian Falls, free of charge, to the transfer of miles of well-constructed roads to the municipality at little or no cost.

A criticism that has also been heard frequently, suggests that Hydro's ownership of land in Niagara Falls is of such major proportions that property development of the municipality is hampered, and despite this, Hydro does not pay appropriate taxes. The facts are that Hydro owns some 13 per cent of the land within Niagara Falls but much of it is of low value and is located in outlying areas. As I have explained, Hydro pays more than full real estate taxes on this property, even though few services are required in the way of fire and police protection, garbage disposal, road cleaning, and so forth. True, full taxes are not paid on power systems facilities themselves—the generating and transformer stations. However, they occupy a relatively small usable land area, and a special formula of $2 per square foot of ground floor area, by which payments are made for these installations, more than offsets the cost of any municipal services they may require. The largest power stations at Niagara, the two Sir Adam Beck plants, are built into the side of the Niagara Gorge, land of no use for any other purpose.

If the demands of Niagara Falls' spokesmen for full taxation on power installations were met, the other municipalities of Ontario would rightfully ask for equal treatment. They also might be justified in asking for a share of the tourist revenue gained by Niagara Falls, as the result of public expenditure on that city's parks system.

If Hydro were taxed as a private organization, what would be the result? For communities such as Niagara Falls it would provide a staggering new source of tax revenue, but where would the money come from? Hydro is a non-profit organization which supplies power at cost, and every dollar of expenditure must be recovered in electric rates. Electricity bills would therefore go up all over the province. Industry, as a heavy user of electric power, would bear much of the new tax load with all that this implies for its competitive welfare at home and abroad.

I hardly need to remind hon. members that other provinces are aggressively promoting the location of new industry through various preferences and other blandishments. We in Ontario must take care not to push any industry now operating here, into the arms of these ardent suitors.

However, some taxpayers would end up paying both higher municipal taxes and higher electricity bills. If Hydro pays full taxation, the special business tax payment, in fairness, should be lowered from 60 to 25 per cent, which is normal. In a city such as North Bay, for example, where Hydro's major property holding is a regional office building, this change would mean a tax loss of $4,400 to that community.

I have taken some time to express these thoughts but I would like to conclude by putting this in a broader perspective and reminding you, Mr. Chairman, of the hope with which this Legislature almost 60 years ago passed an Act creating Ontario Hydro. It was that the power resources of this province be developed for the benefit of all people of Ontario at the lowest possible cost. This Hydro has done in association with municipal utility systems. Power rates in Ontario today are recognized as being among the lowest in the world.

The availability of natural quantities of cheap electric power has contributed in no small measure to Ontario's pre-eminent place in the national economy, possessing almost one-third of the country's total population and producing one-half of all manufactured goods and offering its citizens one of the highest standards of living in the world. If the goals which led to the creation of Hydro in Ontario are still valid, and I believe that they are, then the principle under which grants in lieu of taxes are paid is right. The benefits of this province's power resources should be enjoyed equally by all and certainly no community should be financially burdened by the existence of Hydro installations. But, by the same measure, no community should gain at the expense of the rest of the citizens of this province.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, if I did not know where the hon. member came from, I would say he was a member from Niagara Falls representing them exceptionally well. I am going to get his writer, whoever he is, to write my speech next year and this alone on that very subject would re-elect me.

However, there is another side to the story and I feel that I should tell it to you. I have been listening with interest and the hon. member has headed off in many directions, he has taken into consideration that the parks commission get water rentals. He has not told this House that because of the large amount paid to the parks commission for water rentals, some three or four years ago the Hydro, or the government, or someone, decided to take a part of that money back into the province, because that is where it belongs. I think the figure was $625,000 of the water rental money that ordinarily went to the parks commission was reverted back to the parks integration board.

Now the hon. member at this point can correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. Boyer: I understand that the amount that I mentioned is paid directly to the parks commission.

Mr. Bukator: Yes. Well, I was making reference to the fact that when Sir Adam Beck No. 1 was there alone, they were getting water rentals at the rate of $1.25 per horsepower generated. Then when they added Sir Adam Beck No. 2 they found that there was an exceptionally large amount of money going to the parks commissions and there was some agreement made. And justly so. Part of this money should come back and go into the parks integration board to develop other parks and I think this is good, I agree with it.

Since that time I think the money goes directly to the consolidated revenue fund. I do not know where to find that figure, where it is transferred somewhere—Hydro to the parks integration board, to the consolidated revenue fund—but I am quite sure the figures are there somewhere. However, we agree on the figure. As I say, justly so.

However, the hon. member touched on that beautiful parks system and I will touch on that when the right estimates come up, because I do believe that while the hon. member paints a rosy picture and talks of the beautiful parks—and I agree that they are—there is an injustice there also. However, I will touch on that at another time.

Getting back to Hydro and their assessment. The hon. member has made the statement that they paid full taxes—the equivalent of full taxes—on certain areas such as on the land but not on the buildings, and he mentioned the fact that $461,000 was paid to them last year and that has been correct. However, I would like to draw to your attention the assessor's opinion on what has taken place in Niagara Falls since they have taken in that large section of Stamford township, or all of Stamford township. The assessor, Ben R. Prior, wrote this account:

The figures are arrived at in an analysis of the assessment report submitted to the city council Monday by the assessment commissioner, Ben R. Prior. The report places the total taxable assessment of the city of Niagara Falls at $115,153,700. In addition, exempt from taxation is another $76,377,019 in Crown corporation, government and public institution holdings. Exempt from city taxes is a total of $77 million—

I will give it in round figures:

—$77 million and Ontario Hydro provides the largest segment. Ontario Hydro has an assessment in that city of $54 million.

To be exact, $54,516,999.

Hydro does, however, pay grants in lieu of taxes—and get this:

—on an additional $4,037,940 in local holdings.

Now then, you have an assessment, a total assessment in the city of Niagara Falls of Hydro holdings, of $54 million and you pay grants in lieu of taxes on $4 million. If it were the same as the Canadian Niagara, that pays exactly as any other taxpayer according to the provincial manual or according to their assessment, Hydro will be paying taxes on $54 million instead—and you are paying on $4 million, rather than on $54 million, according to the assessor. And I would think he would know his business.

Mr. Boyer: Well, would the hon. member like me to speak to that?

Mr. Bukator: Yes, we might as well clear it up now.

Mr. Boyer: We are not able to reconcile this figure of $54 million with anything that we have. We have made some inquiries of The Department of Municipal Affairs and we have been told that the department is not aware as to the number and type of structures which are valued by the city at $54,516,999. Nor do they know the basis the city assessor used to develop such valuation.

Our thought is that there are many structures which are exempted normally from municipal taxation—subterranean structures such as the tunnels—and yet the assessor has taken these and made up a figure.

Mr. Bukator: I doubt whether he touched the tunnels, he may have.

Mr. Boyer: Yes, but we cannot really reconcile this figure and I do not know whether we should pursue this and get some different figure.

Mr. Bukator: What I am trying to say to this House—and I hope it gets to the ears of the right people—is that the assessor uses a certain method to assess everyone in that city, and it is my understanding—and I think justly so—that they are using the same method to assess Hydro property that they would to assess anybody else's property. I do not think they are using a different yardstick and by the same token they are using the same method for the Canadian Niagara powerhouse that has about 111 acres. They are paying equal to what you are paying, if not more, while you people have holdings there of some—and correct me again if I am wrong—some 3,500 acres of land in the city of Niagara Falls.

Now you were talking about this canal that was cut through many years ago. It is quite a profitable thing to the city because they can use that for drainage. I might say to you that the water that is used for drainage also develops power, I imagine. I do not think the powerhouses segregate what comes in the drainage from the city, so it assists you also if you are going to use that by way of an argument. But I would say that this particular canal is an eyesore to the city, and you have had a brief pertaining to that also.

I am not going to argue that you should cover up the canal at this particular time. The point I am trying to make with you is that there is $54 million that you should be paying taxes on and you are paying them only on $4 million, no matter how you calculate it.

Now, to pursue that a bit further, you said that the city of Niagara Falls is essentially well-off financially and that they are not suffering any aches and pains. Now, I do not think that is any credit to you people because you are not carrying your just portion of that particular burden. We have tourists coming to see the great Niagara that we have there and you say that you have improved the crest of the falls; you have spread a little water over a whole lot more than they had previously, but I will tell you the turbulent waters that we had above that falls many years ago, and that the people were amazed at, are not there any more.

Come in before 8 o'clock in the morning and you can see the rocks high and dry, you can see many areas on which the gulls land. I do not think it is the same falls that I knew as a boy, simply because you people have diverted the water not only through your tunnels but the Robert Moses plant on the American side, and not only through those two tunnels but recently you have diverted 6,800 cubic feet per second to the new job that you are doing in the old canal.

Now, I say that the source of revenue to the province—the source of revenue to the Hydro—call it what you will, although you say that it is not a profit-making organization, I say to you that it is one of the largest profit-making organizations in the province of Ontario simply because you have added to your capital investment. We can argue from now to Doomsday, but you cannot run an operation like that without making dollars. You have made them, and you have added to it, and this is good for the province, but I say to you that a small portion on the bill of each one of those 2 million consumers would give to us our just dues also.

I say to you, Mr. Vice-Chairman of Hydro, that you have members in this House who have a similar condition and if we have a large portion paid to us, many of your members are suffering. I would like to know what the Port Credit plant and the Toronto plant and many of the other plants are paying in the way of grants in lieu of taxes by way of comparison.

I say that they are being taken. I say it is about time you paid taxes, the same exactly as the Royal York hotel is paying as of only a year ago. I say to you that you should pay your just dues to these municipalities. I argued with the former Minister of Energy and at least he could see this one point. He said full taxes we will not pay; but Mr. Macaulay did say this: Let us take a look, maybe we will help you with a portion for school purposes. This we are happy to hear, he conceded one point to us.

I say to you, Mr. Vice-Chairman of Hydro, that your picture was a rosy one; but as I see it, if you are paying grants in lieu of taxes to cover just $4 million of the assessment which is $54 million, you are coming nowhere near the mark at all.

If the district of Niagara Falls is enjoying this great prosperity of which you speak, more power to them. They set an example for the rest of the province. I say that they have treated the customers—or at least the tourists that come to our city—they have treated them well and they come back. If we have tourist establishments there, is that any credit to Hydro or is it any credit to the hon. Minister himself? I say it is a credit to the city council and enterprising business men who have taken advantage of a good thing.

They have added beautiful structures. Many of the government bodies have come there on conventions, and I invite them back again, but I want to make this point very forcibly to you; that in three or four areas you are not treating them right and this is what I am trying to get across to you. I say you are paying grants in lieu of taxes on $4 million instead of $54 million—and I do not say you should pay the whole “boodle”, no, I would concede a point to you there—but you should take another look at these figures after you have surveyed the whole province of Ontario, because there are many municipalities which are not getting what is coming to them tax-wise, or in grants in lieu of taxes, call it what you like.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, the municipal Hydro employees pension fund has caused some concern in my community. Is it undergoing some revision at the present moment, is that the reason for the concern?

Mr. Boyer: Yes, the plan is undergoing some revision at the present time, but I am not able to give any complete story of this revision at the moment.

Mr. Newman: Will it be an upward revision as far as pensions are concerned?

Mr. Boyer: Oh, no, it is to bring the plan into conformity with other plans.

Mr. Newman: Well, if there is a combined surplus of, I think it is, $15.5 million that has been accumulated and a further surplus of $633,000, surely this surplus has been accumulated by the employees who are in there now and should be distributed as benefits to those who are going to retire in the immediate future.

Mr. Boyer: There is no need for anybody to worry about that.

Mr. Newman: If this will be taken care of, then all is well.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member, what is the capital cost of the multi-unit nuclear project at Pickering?

Mr. Boyer: $266 million.

Mr. Sargent: What is the federal share?

Mr. Boyer: I gave these figures last week—not last week, but when we were last considering these matters—the national government is contributing $79.5 million.

Mr. Sargent: Well, Mr. Chairman, the point is that this is another case of a commission not responsible to the people of Ontario with its hand in the public till with no control. Now, we know that nuclear power is no cheaper than coal; we do know that we have as yet no experience at Douglas Point. What is the justification for Hydro to squander $200 million of the taxpayers' money pioneering, they call it, for the world, pioneering a project unlike anything else in the world, when they had to raise the gasoline tax of the ordinary fellow to balance the Budget—they also had to raise the hospital tax.

The point I am asking, Mr. Chairman, where do you get off at asking the ordinary man to pay increased gasoline tax, to pay increased hospital tax, and you come under this vote and ask us to give you $1,800,000 for a project in the future, when you have a project now in construction on which you have no experience? What right have you, a board not responsible to the people of Ontario, to spend this kind of money?

Some may say, what right have you to question Hydro? Why not? What right has this commission to commit the people of Ontario for another X million dollars when the debenture debt is now $2 billion and all we get from the hon. Minister here is one line on page F6 of our budget, no breakdown of how this money is spent?

This body is not responsible to the people. On page F6 there is an item here of $824,000 rural bonus. That is in the public accounts, moneys already spent. I do not see it in the estimates under 608. Where is that money?

Mr. Boyer: It is under a statutory item at the top of the same page

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): $1,056,000.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, many people of Ontario and hon. members of this House will recall that back in the conversion from 25 to 60 cycle power, Hydro had the audacity to charge the people who were on 60 cycle power for the conversion in southern Ontario. It cost the people in my area $1 million to pay your conversion.

In summary I would like to suggest to you that here is another case where a commission not responsible to the people of Ontario is spending money without control and it is time that they should be stopped.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say that this was not a commission decision. This was a decision made through negotiations with the commission, the federal government and the provincial government, and to me and to this government, and I think to most of the people of Ontario, it was a good decision. True, we have not got all the experience that we would like to have on nuclear energy plants, but with the information we have, we have faith enough in the experience we have already had and in the future—

Mr. Sargent: Two million dollars?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, it is just a mere trickle, if this plant proves out, as to that for which this plant will produce power. Now, if we have not faith enough in the future of Ontario—we have uranium mines today that we are very anxious to get in production again and anything that we know or can find out from the scientists will be useful—this is a source of energy to be used in the future. I think we would be severely criticized, both the federal and provincial governments, if we did not spend some money to develop it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask the vice-chairman of Hydro, what is the end result of all of the fly ash from the coal-burning process in the manufacture of electric power?

Mr. Boyer: Fly ash is used as fill on different land. At the moment we are using several properties in the Metro Toronto area and I presume the same is true at Windsor. We are filling old gravel pits and ravines and so on, under contract to trucking firms which should look after this matter and convey the fly ash from the plants to places where it can be proved of benefit in filling land.

Mr. Newman: Does Hydro do any experimenting with other uses for fly ash, or has Hydro even asked the Ontario research council to conduct experiments for other uses?

Mr. Boyer: Yes, I must say that our own forces have been considering this matter from every angle and obtaining all the information that could be obtained from other utilities which have the same matter to take care of. One of the interesting uses for fly ash is that it can be integrated into concrete and can be put to good use in the construction industry.

Mr. Newman: May I suggest to the hon. Minister then that he send delegates or groups of Hydro personnel to visit the Waylite Corporation in Detroit, which actually uses fly ash for the manufacture of concrete blocks and other building materials. This process has been in operation for several years. Surely if it will work across the border with our friends to the south of us, it should be able to work well here. They get $1 a ton for it, so that it is a big operation as far as our U.S. friends are concerned.

Mr. Boyer: I thank the hon. member for mentioning this matter, but I think we are right up with him and this matter has the attention—

Mr. Newman: You cannot be up to it, because the Americans are using it. You are just thinking of it as yet.

May I ask the vice-chairman if Hydro conducts any experiments with the electric light bulbs, so that when the average consumer purchases an electric light bulb, he can at least get some type of life out of the bulb, rather than have the bulb burn out within 15 or 20 hours of operation? Certain companies in Ontario manufacture bulbs that are guaranteed for five years.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You can already get them, if you want to pay the price.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, I am not just sure where our responsibilities are in this. This is a matter for industry, which produces electric light bulbs, and I would think that the industry is constantly endeavouring to improve its product. I have not experienced in my own home or business, the troubles that the hon. member is mentioning, but if Hydro can assist in the matter, I am sure we will.

Mr. Newman: May I ask the vice-chairman if he plans on erecting some type of plaque in the city of Windsor in recognition of the first electric streetcar in North America?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member and I have carried on a conversation across the House going back over a year, I think, on this matter and I wish the news that I have to give him were more favourable. I would certainly like to see a plaque erected in Windsor for the purpose he mentioned, but after the hon. member brought this forward, we did cause some research to be made. We took this matter up with The Department of Tourism and Information and we also followed this up with the provincial archives.

This has to do, of course, with the historical significance of the first electrically operated streetcar in Windsor and the year was 1886. I would like to agree with him that this was the first electrically operated street railway, but I have to say that there was an electrically operated street railway run by the Toronto Electric Light Company commencing in 1883. This is reported to have been the first full-scale electrically operated railway of commercial significance. It travelled on approximately one mile of track in the exhibition grounds, from Strachan Avenue to Machinery Hall.

I am sorry that the information did not meet with our hopes, but I would think that the Essex historical society perhaps could mark some suitable site in the city of Windsor as the place from which this early street railway ran.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I will accept the remarks of the vice-chairman. My information was that the first electric streetcar in North America left on its initial journey from the corner of Ouellette Avenue and Riverside Drive on June 3, 1886, and if the hon. gentleman says there was one in Toronto in 1883, we accept that.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister whether the budget of Hydro has come before this House?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, it has not.

Mr. Sargent: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, I might say that the Hydro commission went before a government committee on commissions, where any questions could be asked regarding the Budget. That was some time ago and I think every hon. member had notice of that meeting.

Mr. Sargent: How much was the advertising budget last year?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, this question was asked last year and I feel I have to give the same answer, or very nearly, that I gave last year—that we are not anxious to reveal to our competitors the extent of our advertising programme. If the hon. member cares to tell us how much the gas industry is spending on advertising, perhaps we can accommodate him.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this is a ridiculous statement to make. This is a publicly owned power corporation—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): You do not want to wreck it, do you?

Mr. Sargent:—and we have a right to know how much money is being spent in every department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Even if it affects the operation of Hydro?

Mr. Sargent: The fact is that we are repeatedly getting four-colour brochures by Hydro, at how much money? I do not think any corporation in America can afford the presentations that we are doing for Hydro. In Hydro '64, this beautiful document, there is not one item, no place in this book, where I can find the cost of the Pickering project. Everything is mentioned in millions of kilowatts. This is strictly for mechanical people, but this is a publicly owned corporation.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it might help the hon. member if I assured him that Ontario Hydro's expenses in connection with advertising are well within the average amount which is spent in the electrical utility industry on this continent.

Mr. Sargent: In the $200 million projected cost for the Pickering project, what is the amortization programme planned, and what are the interest rates?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Thirty years, with interest rate at whatever the going interest rate is at the time when the money is borrowed.

Mr. Sargent: What is the interest rate now?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: 5.35 per cent.

Mr. Sargent: Since 1951, in municipal and government financing on this type of project, the interest rates have increased from two-point-something, to five-point-something now. In this field a professor of economics in the University of Michigan states that:

The lower the interest rates used in the calculation of these big projects, the better. The same goes for any public works project.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: That is an intelligent statement coming from these fellows, but I will illustrate this:

The long-term interest rates
Determine any project's fate:
At two per cent, the case is clear,
At three some sneaking doubts appear,
At four it draws its final breath,
While five per cent is certain death.

And here we have—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member believe that five per cent interest money is certain death to any industry?

Mr. Sargent: He would know what he is talking about; he is a top—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Does the hon. member believe that?

Mr. Sargent: He knows more than the hon. Minister does about it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Does the hon. member believe it?

Mr. Sargent: I certainly do.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I do not; five per cent—I would like to get all I can take at five per cent—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, it all boils down to the fact that here we have another commission not responsible to the people of Ontario, through two Ministers who try to answer the questions. Then they are asked a very important question, possibly involving $1 million—we do not know how much it is—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Could be $50 million—

Mr. Sargent: The hon. Minister is the last of the big spenders, I know that, but the people of Ontario have trouble paying their taxes, so I suggest that it is time that when I ask a question, as the representative of my people, to find out how much money is being spent on advertising, I have a right to know, and so do they.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a brief question with the hon. member on the Hydro commission. I thought that the hon. Minister was going to tell the hon. member how much was being spent on advertising.

The people of Saltfleet township have been disturbed for some time about the hydro rates—maybe not just the rates, but the fact that the rates are higher than they are in the city of Hamilton. About five or six weeks ago a meeting was called by a group of the citizens in a particular area—the Leckie Park area in Saltfleet township—and I understand that in attendance were officials from Hydro and councillors from the township council.

Apparently they had been paying their hydro bills on a three-month basis and then the bills were reduced to a two-month basis and there was very little if any change in the amount of the payments. Whether it was coincidental that an increase in rates went into effect at the time they changed from a three-month basis payment to a two-month basis payment, I do not know, but the outcome of the meeting, as I understand, was that the citizens were told by the officials that to have a reduction in their rates the township should take over the distribution of the hydro.

My question is, is this a fact, that if the townships take over the distribution of the hydro themselves this will reduce the rate for the consumer in that particular township, and what is the reason for this?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Chairman, I might refer to the township of Nepean on the outskirts of Ottawa, where the residents had similar thoughts to those of the good people of Saltfleet. The result of this was, after two or three years of consideration, that the township of Nepean has taken over the local distribution system—it purchased it from Ontario Hydro—and has established there a local municipal utility. It came into operation this year.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. W. E. Johnston) was down at the official opening of the offices of the township of Nepean's local commission. This is the principle on which Nepean has operated: It has taken over the distribution system; it buys power from Ontario Hydro at wholesale rates; because it is a concentrated area, it is able, with the high density of homes and businesses and industry, to provide power at a lower rate than Ontario Hydro is able to do through its regular retail rates.

There are, of course, differences in the retail rates as between the actual rural countryside and suburban areas, because there is a lower rate for suburban communities, such as in the township of Saltfleet. But what was told to the people of Saltfleet is quite correct and it may be that they will be considering something on the same lines as many other communities of a similar nature.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand. What is the reason that the township could distribute the hydro at a cheaper rate than Ontario Hydro was doing before the township took over? Would the township not have to set up its public utilities office and would it not have to have employees and commissioners? My question is why can it distribute hydro cheaper, if it takes it over, than the Hydro itself can distribute it?

Mr. Boyer: It is true that the township might not be able to, but I feel sure that it can. It is on the uniform rural rate which is, of course, higher than the rate in the organized municipality in the township's own local system which buys power wholesale from Hydro. I hope that I have made that clear to the hon. member.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, no. My question is not answered yet. The township may not be able to distribute hydro cheaper if it took it over, but in some cases it can. I understand that Saltfleet township has been told that if it took it over, it might get hydro at a cheaper rate. My question is how can a township buy from Ontario Hydro and redistribute the power and reduce the rates? Is Hydro now charging too much?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Chairman, if I might just add a few words to what the vice-chairman said. When you get into a populated area and you are selling many kilowatts for a mile of line—many more than you do in a rural area—you can readily see how you would buy power cheaper, and this is where the difference is. When you go into the rural areas, you have to build many miles of line for a small amount of power that is being sold. In addition, there is the upkeep on this line. Therefore there are two different rates.

Then you get into the city where kilowatt hours are bought at a certain price and the city has its own distribution lines and its own collection. Of course, it sells quantities in a block, I suppose, much more than would be sold in a township when you get to a rural area, and therefore you can see why there is a difference in price.

Mr. Gisborn: Then I understand that the hon. Minister is saying that the rural distribution rate is set, and that a high-density area would be subsidizing a low-density area because there is a provincial rural rate. If townships take it over themselves and are able to distribute it at a cheaper rate, how does Hydro make up the money that they lose? Somebody must be losing on income. Are distribution costs then cut down?

Mr. Boyer: I agree that that is a matter of some concern to us when we lose annexed areas from the rural system. It has caused us concern because we are trying to maintain the rural rates and we have lost a great many customers through annexation to cities. I also would not put that on the same basis as that the hon. member has mentioned.

Vote 608 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Chairman, in preparing my estimates and my estimates speech this year, I obviously did not have an opportunity of knowing what was in Mr. Gordon's mind last evening, although nothing in yesterday's Budget speech should make necessary a change in what I am going to say today. In passing, I should like to make one or two brief comments on the Budget.

First, I was pleased to see Mr. Gordon emphasize the Canada economic council targets, which I will outline in much greater detail today. The Ontario government believes that the 1970 targets of the Canada economic council will have a much better chance of being met if governmental and private organizations across Canada make these targets their own and work toward their fulfilment. Even though Mr. Gordon called his Budget "a growth budget" its net effect will not be expansionary next year. Although we welcome the tax cuts, they will be more than offset by the Canada pension plan contributions next year—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Just lower income groups.

Hon. Mr. Randall:—which are the equivalent of a $400-million increase in taxes. Let me quote from the Ontario government's submission to the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Canada pension plan, which was released on January 21, 1965, and I quote:

Ontario is concerned about some of the immediate economic effects of the proposed methods of financing. For example, the substantial contributions contemplated for 1966 with no offsetting pension payments will tend to act as a brake on economic growth. Any possible tax cut in the federal Budget would have to exceed the amount of contributions to exert a stimulating effect on the economy. The net result is some loss in the flexibility of fiscal policy.

I do recognize that the tax cut will have a stimulating effect during the final six months of this year, which will help to prevent any slow-down in economic activity.

We also welcome the continuation, until the end of 1966, of the accelerated rate of capital cost allowances on new manufacturing machinery and equipment. Of more importance to Ontario is the announcement that legislation will be introduced to provide a cash grant, or a credit against tax liabilities, of 25 per cent of capital expenditures for scientific research and development.

Ontario industries should also benefit from the fact that this new legislation will be administered by The Department of Industry rather than The Department of National Revenue. I have made representation to The Department of Industry to have expenditures on land included in the definition of capital cost and I hope we will hear from Mr. Drury on this before too long.

In this way we hope to have an added incentive for industry to establish research facilities in the Sheridan Park research community.

I should also like to withhold comment at this time on the proposed Canada development corporation. The corporation could provide a useful addition to investment outlets for Canadian capital, and I think most of us recognize that. I hope, though, that it is not going to be used as the means of assisting uneconomic enterprises purely because they are Canadian owned.

Mr. Bryden: You know something about that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We shall be commenting further on the corporation after we have had a chance to observe its actual operation; and I will have an answer for the hon. member for Woodbine before too long.

An hon. member: The voice of experience!

Hon. Mr. Randall: In my estimates speech I forecast an increase in the gross provincial product of about six or four per cent in constant dollars. Mr. Gordon predicted a slightly higher rate of seven and five per cent for Canada. While I hope that Mr. Gordon's predictions will be realized, we have based our own predictions on a realistic interpretation of all the indications of current and prospective economy activity at our disposal. The stimulating effect of the tax cut in the last six months of this year might be sufficient to raise the overall level of the economic activity in 1965. In any case, we do not expect Ontario's rate of increase this year to be less than that of Canada as a whole.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to dwell too long on past history because almost four months have gone by since the end of the year and anything I would say about last year has already been in the newspapers. Most people have read it, so I will devote most of my comments to the present, and I hope to the future.

In my estimates speech this year, I should like to refer to a speech by the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts) in Montreal in January, 1962. At that time he cited the importance of maintaining high levels of employment and economic growth, and said that we could not be satisfied with a growth rate of less than five or six per cent per year in real terms.

In January, 1965, the economic council of Canada published its first annual review. Highlights of that review were economic targets for 1970 which included an average annual growth rate from the base of 1963 to 1970 of 5.5 per cent per year—7.5 per cent in current dollars—a three per cent unemployment rate and an average of 217,000 new jobs a year. The Ontario government fully supports the objectives set out by the economic council of Canada. Over the next five years, the Ontario government's economic programme will be devoted to the achievement of these goals as they apply to Ontario. And perhaps I could outline Ontario's economic goals during this period:

1. An average of at least 75,000 new jobs a year.
2. An unemployment rate of no more than two per cent by 1970.
3. An average productivity increase of 2.5 per cent per year.
4. A sharp increase in exports of manufactured goods.
5. An overall annual growth rate in gross provincial product of at least 5.5 per cent in constant dollars.

The Canadian economy grew faster than these target rates in 1964 and Ontario did even better. To give you a few examples, I would like to cite the following:

1. The dollar value of production in Canada last year increased by 8.9 per cent.

In Ontario it increased by more than nine per cent.

2. Manufacturing shipments from Ontario factories increased by 8.4 per cent last year. The increase in the rest of Canada was 7.1 per cent.

3. The unemployment rate in Ontario in 1964 was 3.3 per cent. In the other nine provinces the average rate was 5.5 per cent.

4. Housing contracts in Ontario in 1964 increased by 31.5 per cent. In the rest of Canada they increased by 15.2 per cent.

5. Employment in Ontario in 1964 rose by 89,000 as compared to the target rate for the years 1963 to 1970 of 75,000 a year.

And last but by no means least:

6. Exports of fully manufactured goods in 1964 increased by 42 per cent compared to the target increase of 10 per cent a year.

Before going on to the prospects for 1965, I should like to discuss for a moment one of the most heartening characteristics of economic activity in 1964. The high rate of economic growth last year was not concentrated in a few metropolitan centres but was spread across the whole province. This is an excellent illustration of the point made by the economic council of Canada that rapid overall economic growth is one of the best ways of stimulating economic activity in areas that have been lagging.

For instance, let us look at employment. In February of this year, only two of the 35 national employment service labour market areas in Ontario had substantial labour surpluses. This is the lowest number for this period since 1953. In January only one area was in this category. Seven areas reported a balance of labour demand and supply in both months—the highest number since 1953.

The winter employment picture this year illustrates not only the widespread nature of economic growth in recent months but also a substantial change in the degree of seasonal unemployment. The winter housing bonus, the winter works programme, improved construction techniques and better industrial scheduling are making great progress in alleviating one of Canada's most persistent problems, that of winter unemployment.

The balanced distribution of economic growth in 1964 can be illustrated in other ways. For example, in 1964 Ontario Hydro figures indicated that 16 out of 17 reporting centres showed an increase in consumption of hydro-electric power by industrial users. The increase in Toronto was close to the provincial average, while centres such as Brantford, Galt, Kingston, Niagara Falls and Windsor showed even higher increases.

Turning to 1965, we expect that the economy will grow by about six per cent, or four per cent in real terms. This is approximately the average annual growth rate of the post-war period.

Here are some of the reasons for our evaluation of the prospects in 1965. The major forces behind the rapid expansion in 1964 were capital investment and exports. All indications point to a repeat of the sharp increase in investment of 1964. Within the past few months plans have been announced for the construction of new manufacturing plants and expansions of existing plants in all regions of the province at a rate not experienced since 1955-1957. Housing starts will again be high and the construction industry generally is preparing for a record year.

The other dynamic force in 1964 is exports. These will not rise as fast in 1965, we do not believe. Some of the factors which led to the dramatic 19.1 per cent rise in 1964 are not present this year. Last year's special customers for wheat and flour are not likely to place orders of similar size this year because their own supplies are more abundant. This could reduce farm incomes in western Canada and slow down the sale of Ontario manufactured products to the prairie provinces.

Although prospects in the United States indicate another year of substantial economic growth, the outlook for the United Kingdom and most of the European countries is not as encouraging. These countries are facing labour shortages and rapidly increasing costs and their growth rates are declining. While this means that demand for Canadian goods in Europe may slacken, our exports of manufactured goods could become more competitive because our unit costs of output have not been rising as quickly, so there are some compensating factors there.

On the whole, the Ontario economy is currently in a sound condition. Costs per unit of output have been held in reasonable check and profits have been sustained at good levels. Inventories have been maintained at an appropriate relationship to sales and the high capital expenditures have not been excessive in terms of productive requirements.

The economy may grow somewhat slower than the target rate in 1965. But taking the two years of 1964 and 1965 together, it appears that the economy, at the end of this year, will be very close to the trend line required to reach the 1970 targets. To reach the targets, the average rate of growth for the rest of the decade will have to be 5.5 per cent in real terms.

This will be a difficult task but there are a number of underlying factors which will help to make the target attainable.

First, the post-war baby boom is beginning to stimulate the rate of family formation in Canada. At the present time there are about 533,000 young people in the 15-19 age group in Ontario. By 1970 there will be about 660,000. This will increase the demand for educational facilities. There will be an even sharper increase in the numbers in the 20-24 age group, from 413,000 to 580,000. This age group is a key factor in the domestic market for consumer durables, all household goods, clothing, children's wear and housing.

Second, this increase in potential demand will coincide with record levels of replacement demand for consumer durables and for older housing.

Third, the Canadian economy has already entered a period of record levels of replacement demand for plant, machinery and equipment. Rapid replacement of aging machinery and equipment will be essential for improvement of Canada's competitive position.

Fourth, we can be reasonably confident that the United States government will continue its expansionary monetary and fiscal policy. It is just into office a few short months and we hope that this will continue. This cannot fail to exert a major impact on the rate of economic growth in North America.

Fifth, the review of the economic council of Canada has sparked a new awareness in this country of the potential growth of the economy over the remainder of this decade.

These factors do not guarantee an uninterrupted economic expansion. They do indicate, however, that determined efforts and appropriate policies by both private and public agencies will find support from the favourable underlying forces I have just mentioned.

The economic council of Canada published no separate targets for individual provinces or regions nor did it separate out Canadian targets for such broad groups as manufacturing. We have attempted in my department not only to set targets for Ontario but also to provide a greater breakdown of the Canadian targets.

These targets for Ontario are spelled out in a set of statistical tables which I will make available to hon. members of the House. You will have them very shortly on your desks. They show the employment increases in the various sectors of the Ontario economy which will be necessary if the province is to meet the 1970 targets.

They show what the employment and output structure of the Ontario economy could potentially be in 1970 and they compare the actual growth rate in Ontario between 1956 and 1963 with the required growth rates for the period 1963 to 1970. An additional table shows a breakdown of potential output in Canada in each of the manufacturing groups in 1970. This table pinpoints the areas of manufacturing where the most rapid growth will have to take place if the targets are to be reached. It points out that the key industrial groups—transportation equipment, which includes the automotive industry, electrical apparatus and iron and steel products, which includes machinery—are the very industries which are now most heavily concentrated in the province of Ontario.

The economic council of Canada set as one of its objectives balanced growth in all the major economic regions of Canada and improvement in the economic position of the lagging regions. We in Ontario do not believe that this implies a deterioration in Ontario's relative position in Canada. So long as development takes place on a rational economic basis, people in all parts of the country will benefit. Ontario stands to benefit from the achievement of the council's goals through the rapid expansion in secondary manufacturing, particularly for export markets. To take only one example, the recent automotive industry agreement with the United States opens an enormous potential for growth in Ontario output and employment in this industry in the next five years.

There is currently much speculation on the advantages and disadvantages this new approach to tariff elimination or reduction will have on the future of many Canadian companies associated with automobile producers. I firmly believe the immediate problems facing some manufacturers and their employees, and those problems anticipated in the future as a result of the agreement, can be solved. I should not like to see its ultimate success impeded by controversy which has recently arisen over short-term transformation problems. This is particularly important while the U.S. Congress is still discussing legislation to fulfill its part of the agreement.

To assist in easing some of the problems, we have extended the services of our department and that of this government, without reservation, to the federal authorities, the automobile manufacturers and the car parts industry. Not only does Ontario have a great deal to gain with 90 per cent of the industry located in this province, but the success of this agreement could pave the way for greater Canadian access into the huge U.S. market, so close to our manufacturing and raw material sources. It could very well lead to more Canadian investment in the U.S., which now approximates $4 billion.

The present Kennedy round of tariff negotiations could bring about radical changes in Canada's participation in world markets, if these negotiations are successful. We should be ever conscious, however, of the foreign trading blocs now formed, which leave this country, at least for the present, in much the same trading strait-jacket as the United States, but with only 19 million people as our domestic base, compared to their 190 million.

I hope, therefore, that industry, labour and governments at all levels will recognize the fact that the world, and Canada in particular, is at the crossroads in domestic and international trade. We must, as a nation, accept our responsibility to bargain left, right and centre for a more flexible tariff policy, that will help all nations to trade on a more equitable basis. The constant crisis brought about by trade and balance of payments problems now being experienced by even the most affluent nations, should indicate quite clearly, that stopgap legislation does much to hamper and impede international trade. As trade becomes freer, there will be less necessity for restrictive legislation and more need for aggressive selling efforts. If we make the most of international trade negotiations, we are much more likely to reach our 1970 goals.

May we look ahead at some of the changes that will take place in the structure of the Ontario economy in reaching our 1970 targets:

1. Population will increase to 7,600,000 and employment to almost 3,000,000.

2. Since a larger proportion of Ontario's labour force will remain in activities less affected by seasonal unemployment than in other parts of Canada, we expect Ontario's unemployment rate to be two per cent of the labour force in 1970. Canada's target unemployment rate is three per cent of the labour force.

3. Total employment in 1970 will have to be 634,000 higher than it was in 1961. This means that 70,000 additional jobs will have to be created on an average each year between 1961 and 1970. For the period from 1964 to 1970, this means an average of 75,000 new jobs each year must be found in the province of Ontario.

4. The service sector—transportation, trade, finance, public administration, community and other services—will provide by far the largest absolute number of new jobs in the period up to 1970—an average of 60,000 jobs a year of the 75,000 we have been talking about. The service sector as a whole will continue to increase in relative importance in the economy in terms of both employment and value of production.

5. Employment will decline in the natural resource industries of agriculture, forestry and mining. In this sector of the economy we expect that employment will drop from 230,000 in 1961 to 190,000 in 1970. This is a natural and understanding development. A century ago it was almost inconceivable that society could function without 50 or 60 per cent of the labour force in agriculture, but by 1970 our agricultural requirements will be met by less than five per cent of the work force.

6. A rapid improvement in productivity is also taking place in manufacturing. In 1951 manufacturing absorbed 34 per cent of Ontario's total employment. By 1961 this proportion had been reduced to 29 per cent. Even though we expect a sharp increase in manufacturing output, employment in manufacturing in 1970 will be only 26 per cent of the Ontario labour force. In spite of this relative decline in manufacturing output, manufacturing employment in Ontario has to grow between 1961 and 1970 by an average of 15,000 jobs per year, which is more than four times the average annual increase between 1951 and 1961.

7. Within manufacturing, between now and 1970 the output of durable manufactured goods will grow by 50 per cent and will provide the main stimulus to economic growth. An increase in output of this magnitude will be achieved only if productivity is improved dramatically, the competitive position of our industries is enhanced, and exports of manufactured goods are sharply expanded.

This brings us to the policy implications of these targets:

1. Manufacturing: The Department of Economics and Development must continue to assist business in penetrating foreign markets, in promoting technological innovation, product and marketing research and development, and in improving managerial techniques and performance.

2. Labour Force: (a) The actual and potential labour force must be provided with adequate opportunities for obtaining the education and skills required for effective participation in the modern economy; (b) The actual and potential labour force must be provided with sufficient health services to reduce absenteeism and promote efficient work on the job; (c) There is a close correlation between the conditions in which people are raised, live and work and their capacity to achieve adequate education, skills and health. This implies an economic necessity to reduce poverty and promote urban redevelopment. This is a complicated matter, and one should look twice at simple solutions.

3. Capital Formation: Business must be encouraged to develop and adopt the most advanced technological innovations. If the economic climate is conducive to market growth and the quality and mobility of labour are suitable, management will provide the capital necessary to expand output.

4. Mobility of Capital: The government must avoid constructing uneconomic inducements or barriers that restrain capital from moving out of less competitive into more competitive activities. Capital should not be encouraged to stay in uneconomic production, whether in agriculture, manufacturing or any other activity.

5. Mobility of Labour: Industry should be encouraged to economize on the use of labour, by utilizing the latest technology and management techniques and by achieving an efficient scale of production. This will make labour available to industries requiring more labour. The most obvious industries that can economize on labour requirements are agriculture, forestry, mining and material processing. The operation of the labour market must be improved so that labour is aware of the availability of better jobs and is assisted in moving to such better opportunities.

6. New Competitive Opportunities: Research activities must be accelerated to develop new competitive opportunities in all areas of the economy.

7. Economic Infrastructure: Governments, their agencies and private utilities must provide adequate, high quality, and well-located transportation, communication, energy, sewage and other facilities to enable the private economy to improve its competitiveness.

These are seven basic requirements. The Ontario government helps to provide them in a variety of ways, many of which directly involve my own department and its associated agencies.

The managerial advice and financial assistance offered by the Ontario development agency is one means of increasing manufacturing productivity, particularly in smaller firms. At a time when technological innovation is vital to improvement of productivity, the support we are giving to industrial research through the Ontario research foundation and the Sheridan Park corporation is of prime importance.

Our export promotion programme not only increases total production but helps to achieve greater economies through longer production runs. Management's efficiency is increased through the knowledge gained in export activity, as selling in foreign markets demands that management be more alert because the cushion of tariff protection is not available.

The economic council of Canada says:

It is essential that manufacturing exports continue to rise at a very rapid rate . . . this requires a commercial policy directed at securing a substantial improvement in access to foreign markets, coupled with a vigorous programme of export promotion.

Later in my remarks I will outline some of the Ontario government's specific activities in the area of export promotion.

Ever since taking office I have been exhorting Ontario manufacturers to export now, so they will be prepared for a possible future reduction in present tariff protection. I have written privately to the federal Minister of Trade and Commerce and spoken publicly about Ontario's support for freer trade. This has been Ontario's position throughout the current discussions on Canadian commercial policy. In my correspondence with the federal government I have repeatedly stressed the importance of the approach now suggested by the economic council of Canada.

The council states, and I quote:

We need a special programme of adjustment assistance to facilitate adaptation among workers and firms to the more competitive conditions arising from future reductions in Canadian trade barriers. The purpose of this programme should be to cushion the impact of such reductions and to promote the necessary adjustments to more competitive production, including new lines of productive activity.

I do not want to leave the impression that direct assistance to manufacturing alone is the most important means of reaching our economic objectives. Only one out of five of the new jobs in the Ontario economy from 1961 to 1970 will be in manufacturing. Four out of five new jobs will be found in transportation, storage, communications, construction, wholesale and retail trade, finance, insurance, real estate, education, health, recreation, and business and personal services. These are the main sectors in which men and women will find jobs in the years ahead.

May I stress a point so often overlooked: Jobs to absorb those no longer required in agriculture and manufacturing must be found in the service industries and construction. Many of the job opportunities in these areas will only be generated through increased manufacturing activity, since people will be needed to supply related services.

This points out the tremendous importance of education, which is the chief means by which society adapts to changing times. It has to assist in the transition, by preparing the labour force for the new occupations that will be required in the future. Improvements in manufacturing productivity will continue to eliminate manual work from many jobs, so that those who have been performing this work must be trained for other tasks. The growing sophistication of jobs in manufacturing requires a continuous effort to upgrade skills among manufacturing employees. It is a challenge Ontario has accepted.

The economic council of Canada stressed the vital role of labour market policy in attempting to achieve the targets set for 1970. This is an area which was stressed in my estimates speech last year in commenting on labour mobility.

Our policy is to assess our labour requirements, train and retrain skilled labour to the fullest extent of expanded facilities—with increasing emphasis on “on-the-job instruction”—and where necessary, meet specific skill gaps through immigration.

In this way, we are attempting to prevent shortages of skilled workers from creating bottlenecks and impeding us from reaching our production goals. Full statements on this subject were given to the House recently by the hon. Prime Minister when he discussed automation and technological change and by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) when he presented his estimates.

The search for skilled and professional workers goes on constantly. The Ontario labour market is currently inadequate to meet the demands of our industry. In 1964 Ontario's manufacturing output and exports did not reach their full potential because of a shortage of skilled labour in certain industries.

A survey by the department last year showed that at least 30,000 skilled workers were urgently needed in this province at that time. Last year 160 companies and institutions in Ontario requested assistance in obtaining skilled workers, and 96 of these firms authorized the immigration branch to advertise their requirements. Nearly 40 companies sent representatives to the United Kingdom to interview and select personnel obtained by the branch.

In preceding years Ontario's immigration branch has confined its efforts solely to the United Kingdom, but the department has now arranged with the federal authorities for recruitment in Scandinavia, Holland and Germany. On January 11, 1965, the immigration branch opened an office in Glasgow, which Scottish authorities welcomed with considerable enthusiasm.

A first quarter report from this office states that 123 skilled and professional immigrants were referred to Ontario employers and 62 of these were offered positions. These were heads of families and the number does not include wives and children, nor does it include those who are proceeding without jobs guaranteed in advance. Since the office opened, 995 people have been interviewed, 585 personal inquiries by letter have been received and 1,027 letters of information have been sent out of this office.

This office's efforts to attract skilled workers to help fill Ontario's needs, along with the programme through Ontario House and other provincial and federal offices abroad, are assisting materially in filling this skill gap.

It will be clear to everyone that many factors involved in reaching our targets are beyond the control of the provincial government. In particular, much will depend upon the policies followed by the federal government.

The most costly activities of the Ontario government are those of improving the quality of the potential and actual labour force, improving the efficiency of urban areas and providing the adequate high-quality infrastructure essential to economic growth.

These are all long-run growing commitments, and furthermore they are responsibilities that must be confronted every year. They cannot be subject to fluctuations in response to changes in the rate of economic activity.

These commitments sharply differentiate provincial from federal responsibilities and programmes. On the one hand, we have the provinces faced with long-term growth commitments; and on the other hand, we have the federal government with access to the growth sources of revenue and the tools for short-run monetary and fiscal management.

The flexibility of the provinces in short-run policy is severely limited by the nature of their responsibilities. The integration of short-run fiscal policy with the federal government is therefore a difficult task. The obviously rational solution is to ensure that the provinces have financial resources suitable for their long-run growth commitments. The federal government must retain the responsibility for the alleviation of short-run economic fluctuations through the policies over which it has exclusive jurisdiction. These are monetary, federal debt management, exchange rate and foreign exchange reserve policies, which must be supplemented by appropriate adjustments in federal fiscal policies.

In managing these policies the federal government must take into consideration the policies of the provinces. Normally, the federal government brings down its budget after the bulk of the provincial budgetary plans have been made known. The federal government is therefore in a position to weigh these plans in conjunction with its assessment of the prospects for the private economy and the estimates of municipal financial policies and then to chart an appropriate course for its short-run policies.

Ontario's ability to meet the goals I have outlined is dependent on a number of factors beyond our control. These include:

1. The quality of federal government monetary, fiscal, and exchange rate policies.
2. The achievement of productivity gains which are not wiped out by price increases.
3. Favourable conditions in international trade and capital markets.

Given these conditions, we are confident that Ontario can meet its targets.

I would like for a moment to speak on the office of the chief economist. The newly created office, under The Department of Economics and Development, represents a substantial change in both the scope and organization of the department. The principal responsibility for advising the government on its general economic policy and objectives is assigned to him, and he acts as senior economic adviser to the government. Administratively, the office of the chief economist has drawn together the economic research branches, the statistics branch, and the regional development division. We are planning an extensive reorganization to take account of new requirements for economic research within the department as well as the increasing sophistication of economic analysis and the greater complexity of economic policy.

The reorganization under the chief economist reflects the requirements for economic research appropriate to modern governments, as well as three additional areas assigned to that office: co-ordination of matters pertaining to federal-provincial affairs; co-ordination of the economic research of our various provincial agencies, and co-ordination of research and co-operation with federal agencies.

The office of the chief economist will include six units:

1. Economics branch—This branch will continue to provide the core of general economic advice, both on domestic and international matters. It is concerned with the economy as a whole and with the analysis of trends, patterns, developments and forecasts of future economic events. Such research provides the basis of advice to the government on the implications of economic events and trends for government policy.

2. Economic surveys and resource studies branch—This branch will continue to carry out and distribute feasibility studies on an area and industry basis, specializing in problems of transportation and the resource industries. A large part of its work is concerned with the preparation of surveys which are of great assistance in providing support for regional development. It is also the core of research studies requested by other departments and agencies, and will devote greater effort to the co-ordination of such research with these departments.

3. Financial research branch—This branch undertakes studies relating to the financial position of the government and carries out special projects of a financial nature for various government departments, agencies and committees. It will also undertake financial analysis as a guide to the future patterns of economic growth in Ontario and will provide support to the studies being carried out in the important field of federal-provincial economic and financial affairs.

4. Regional development—The government is cognizant of the need for a stronger regional development programme. This is why we convened the international conference on that theme last February, and why the Ontario economic council has devoted much of its work to regional problems since its inception. As all of you who were present at the conference appreciate, a philosophy of regional development can be approached from many angles. Our staff is now in the process of evaluating the papers and discussions from the conference in an effort to make the best use of this expert advice for the province of Ontario.

The Ontario government does not intend to embark on a massive decentralization programme in the next 100 days. Our growth targets demand that our primary concern must be rapid increase in the productivity and competitiveness of industry. Our regional development programme must not open us to the charge of misallocating our human, material and financial resources, and creating inefficiency that will decrease, rather than increase, the productivity of the economy.

There are areas of slow growth in Ontario. Our department has been helping to define them, and throughout last year has been distributing information showing the differences in growth and income levels among the counties and districts of Ontario. But do not let such figures mislead you. Compared with most jurisdictions, including the other provinces of Canada, Ontario's economy is well balanced. When reviewing the economic situation, I pointed out that the current expansion is being shared by all regions of the province. The main reason for this is the diversity of Ontario's economy, with each area concentrating on those activities which can be most effectively carried on within its borders.

Last year the expansion of mining and pulp and paper stimulated prosperity in northern Ontario. The rapid growth of secondary manufacturing was distributed across all industrial groups, and thus it was shared by all regions in southern Ontario. Windsor and Brantford, which had experienced serious unemployment problems during the 1950s, benefited from the tax incentives under the designated area programme, and economic activity in both centres increased much more rapidly than in the province as a whole. Windsor's revival was sparked by the success of the Chrysler Corporation and automobile parts firms, and Brantford's by the increased demand for agricultural implements. Fortunately, construction activity was spread across the entire province. The continued growth of government services in the Ottawa area has been a counter-balancing factor in eastern Ontario to some economic sectors which have not been growing as rapidly.

Naturally, there is a disparity between incomes in urban and agricultural areas in Ontario. Expressed in dollar terms, this disparity appears much more serious than it actually is. These calculations too often ignore non-cash income, such as family use of its own agricultural produce, and differences in living costs, primarily in housing. In 1961 the average per-capita disposable income in the richest counties of Ontario—Halton and Peel—was about twice as high as in the two or three agricultural counties with the lowest incomes in the province. In Quebec, on the other hand, the disparity is more than four times between the Montreal area and the poorest county. In that year there were only seven counties or census districts in the other nine provinces with a per-capita disposable personal income higher than the Ontario average. Four of these districts were in British Columbia, one in Alberta, one in Manitoba, and one in Quebec.

These comments in no way suggest that we in this province can afford to be complacent about low incomes and slow growth areas. They do, however, suggest that by recognizing the problem exists we can take remedial action and direct our efforts to helping those areas to a greater share of provincial prosperity.

Therefore, establishing a regional development plan tuned to economic reality will be an important part of this department's programme in 1965-66. We propose to organize a regional development branch under the office of the chief economist. It will incorporate the present regional development division to continue the promotion and co-ordination services now in effect with the various regional development associations. Such a programme will require further co-ordination within the government, on an interdepartmental basis, as well as effective co-operation at the levels of local and regional government. It is essential that the various regional services of the provincial government work toward common goals in close co-operation with each other, and a prime requirement of this new branch will be to gather together these services in a single focus.

We recognize that much of the value of any department's regional services is diminished if they do not complement other regional activities of the government. Therefore, the regional development branch will provide an overall approach to regional development in this province and suggest the best methods of co-ordinating the regional activities of all the government agencies and departments now involved. The recommendations of the branch will form the basis for discussions by an interdepartmental high-level advisory group on regional development. This group will be in a position to advise departments on the location of public services and facilities, such as educational, health and welfare institutions, transportation and energy facilities—requirements which both arise from and support regional development.

In regional development planning, we do not intend to dictate or impose any hard-and-fast plans on the various areas of the province. I firmly agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), when he said in the Legislature a few weeks ago, that proper regional development has to take place with active participation at the grass roots level. This is as it should be, if any plan is to be acceptable to those who are to benefit from it. We were complimented and encouraged by the speakers from other countries at the regional development conference, who were tremendously impressed by the participation and enthusiasm of so many representatives of local governments, local planning boards and regional development associations who attended.

Perhaps you may not realize the scope of coverage that the regional development associations encompass. Some 350 municipalities comprising 2,500,000 people, or approximately 60 per cent of the population of Ontario—exclusive of the metropolitan economic region—are now represented by nine regional development associations. Preliminary meetings to present the regional development programme to potential members of the central Ontario regional development association—metropolitan economic region—have been held in several municipalities in the counties of Ontario, York, Halton and Peel. The presentation of the programme to date has been favourably received, and further meetings are scheduled for 1965.

We intend to make the maximum possible use of the dedication of such people from local areas. It is up to us to assist them to know the potential of their areas, the best methods of local and regional organization, and to ensure that public services and facilities are adequate to form the base for balanced economic growth. In the coming year the department will support a greatly increased amount of research on the economic characteristics and potential of the different regions of Ontario. This research will be carried out for the government and the regional development associations, both within the public service and universities. The development of new universities across the province is a most timely event for the support of such research at the local level.

5. Statistics branch—The statistics branch, which was established in 1964, will be expanded and equipped with modern techniques of statistical analysis. At present the preliminary work of compiling and analyzing a large amount of administrative statistics from a variety of departments and agencies is under way. The Department of Economics and Development administers The Ontario Statistics Act and the data collected under the Act will be co-ordinated with information from the Dominion bureau of statistics and will make possible a much more informed attack on provincial and regional economic problems.

6. Federal-provincial affairs—As I have mentioned, the office of the chief economist will co-ordinate economic research within the provincial government departments as a basis of economic policy advice. This is essential for the added reason that the government of this province must be in a position to co-operate effectively with the federal government. Such co-operation involves preparation of studies for federal-provincial conferences and consultations and arrangements for the co-ordination of federal-provincial programmes and policy. It is essential that one centre in the provincial government be equipped to take the overall view of these problems, and this will be one of the principal tasks of the office of the chief economist.

Accordingly, it is proposed that a new unit be established as the centre for the complicated economic research on relations between the provincial and federal governments and other provinces, in order to provide, in effect, a secretariat for federal-provincial co-ordination of programmes and to prepare background material for federal-provincial affairs and conferences. In particular, it will co-ordinate the research studies and materials that the chief economist will require to support the two central committees of which he acts as chairman: the Ontario advisory committee on Confederation and the inter-departmental committee on fiscal relations and tax structure, which is charged with the responsibility of preparing work for the federal-provincial tax structure committee.

Federal-provincial fiscal and economic studies are the obvious starting point for a considered examination of the province's long-term growth potential. Therefore, they must be closely related to the economic research in the department and other agencies, on the province's economic problems and potential. The chief economist will be convening a committee of heads of research units in each of the departments where such research is undertaken, with the focus on economic growth. Central to this question is the study of the province's total manpower requirements. The Ontario economic council will be directing attention to the problems of automation and labour retraining in the light of technological change, and this forms a part of the broader issue of economic growth in the province. The direction and co-ordination of research in that matter will come within the broader sweep of research on manpower and economic growth.

The provincial perspective must be aligned with the federal perspective for policies concerned with economic growth: manpower, labour mobility, technological change, regional development and general welfare, as well as supporting research requirements. In order to assure that this will happen, the office of the chief economist will work in co-operation with his counterpart in the economic council of Canada and other federal agencies. The research studies of the economic council of Canada, for example, provide valuable background which can be applied to the provincial scene and care must be taken to co-ordinate these research efforts.

As work on these projects is furthered, the lines of reorganization in the department will become clear. What is certain, however, is the requirement for more professional staff of a highly specialized nature to supervise these research studies. The success of these ventures, upon which the economic life of this province largely relies, will depend in turn upon attracting and retraining skilled and highly qualified economists.

For this reason, the chief economist will place strong emphasis on the establishment of close liaison with the universities of the province as a source of research assistance, as well as for future staff—such as the attraction of economic research in a provincial government at a time when the economics of Confederation is under reconstruction and when so many new dimensions are being added to provincial life. We feel confident that the office of the chief economist will become the fertile field necessary to attract the best professional talent the country can provide.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak for a few minutes on the Ontario economic council. The sponsorship of economic research is also one of the major activities of the Ontario economic council. This work, which is concentrated on the effects of technological change, is being co-ordinated with similar research to that being carried on by the economic council of Canada, counterpart organizations in other provinces, and federal and provincial government departments. The council will, of course, work very closely with the chief economist.

In the areas of technological change, three reports have been completed:

(1) "A survey of changing employment patterns at the Lakehead cities of Port Arthur and Fort William," sponsored by the Ontario economic council and undertaken by a research team from the University of Western Ontario.

(2) "A survey of labour market conditions, Windsor, Ontario, 1964," sponsored by the economic council of Canada and undertaken by a research team from the University of Windsor.

(3) "Automation and worker displacement—the impact of change within a company," undertaken by the joint Nova Scotia labour-management study committee and endorsed by the Nova Scotia voluntary planning board.

The Lakehead and Windsor reports, which have already been published and made available to the Legislature, are now being evaluated.

In co-operation with the productivity branch of the economic council of Canada, the Ontario economic council sponsored a series of two-week pilot courses in basic work study in communities more remote from the major metropolitan centres, where foreman training facilities are less readily available. Following evaluation of the results of these initial courses, a recommendation has gone forward that these courses be continued and expanded through The Department of Education.

In the coming fiscal year, the council will intensify its work in the area of technological displacement, retraining of workers, unemployment cycles and specific skill shortages. It will continue its association with other economic councils and will co-operate with Ontario government departments through a continuing interdepartmental committee of senior civil servants.

In recognition of the increasingly close interrelationship between Ontario's economic growth and the ability of industry in this province to compete internationally, the Ontario economic council, in co-operation with the economic council of Canada and the Ryerson polytechnical institute, will sponsor in May of this year a public conference on productivity through advancing technology. Particular emphasis will be placed on the implications of such technology in the expansion of small and medium-sized secondary industries. In addition, the council will be sponsoring special research studies on the manpower impact of improved productivity in agriculture and the forest-based industries.

To explore means of meeting critical skill shortages and more effectively integrating future labour requirements with available manpower, the economic council has sponsored a series of meetings of federal and provincial authorities on the roles of immigration, education, and labour training policies and practices. The first report of this committee was approved by the council in February. During the coming year, further research will be undertaken on the various means of meeting skilled labour requirements.

Another area of concentration of the council has been regional development—particularly in northern Ontario. In addition to its study of employment conditions at the Lakehead and the manpower implications of technological change in the forest-based industries, the council endorsed the Cochrane economic survey of the northeastern Ontario development association as a pilot study which could be extended to other districts in northern Ontario. Subsequently, the council commissioned a similar survey of the Timiskaming district, which is now nearing completion.

The Ontario research foundation and other agencies have completed 15 feasibility studies on potential industries in northern Ontario, which are now being studied by municipal and regional groups throughout the north. The hon. members may be interested to know that Professor Krueger's paper presented at the regional development conference was the result of research commissioned by the economic council.

Among its other activities, the council has sponsored a study of government purchasing practices in Ontario; has helped manufacturers obtain a greater share of the market for souvenirs distributed through the Niagara and St. Lawrence parks commissions; has, in association with the economic council of Canada, undertaken the publication of an annual index of research being carried out by governments, public agencies, universities and other like bodies.

The close liaison with business, government and labour by the Ontario economic council has proven most productive and the many services the council can render to the government of this province will continue to make a very great contribution to the future welfare of Ontario.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss the Ontario development agency. One of the major tools of The Department of Economics and Development is the Ontario development agency. Our experience since the agency's inception has reinforced the views of many experts, that the basic productivity problem of small industry is primarily managerial, and not financial. The economic council of Canada has started, and we are in agreement, that a shortage of managerial skills may be one of Canada's most serious problems in the near future. This is the area where the agency has been able to make its most valuable contribution.

At the recent international conference on regional development the difficulties of the non-metropolitan areas in obtaining normal financing were stressed by delegates from different parts of Ontario. The ODA has helped alleviate this situation by its active assistance to those parts of the province which have not participated in our industrial growth to the same extent as other areas.

During the 1964-65 period, nine guarantees were recommended by the agency's financial advisory committee, raising the total number of guarantees to 43 by the end of 1964. These 43 guarantees, which total $4.7 million, were made to 40 companies. Twenty-four of these companies are operating successfully. Only seven have failed, and one of these is in the course of reconstruction. Three guarantees are awaiting further action by the applicants. Six guarantees have not been acted upon because of breach of contract.

The total of 43 guarantees are maintaining employment for 1,700 persons and, as well, are in the process of creating 1,400 additional jobs, for a total of 3,100 direct employment opportunities. ODA is also generating, or in the process of creating, through these guarantees, additional annual exports valued at $14.1 million and of replacing annual imports of $5.2 million.

Enough time has now elapsed to evaluate the performance of the successful companies which are in receipt of guarantees. Many of these companies have far exceeded our initial expectations, particularly in view of the fact that for various reasons they were unable to obtain funds from the normal lending institutions. A number of them have been so pleased, not only with the financial assistance received from the agency, but also with the continuing management and other advisory services provided, that they have authorized the agency to make public the details of their operations. I am, therefore, pleased to tell the House of three success stories of companies in receipt of guaranteed loans.

The first is the company Tweed Veneers Limited located in the small town of Tweed in eastern Ontario. The owner of this company had a successful background in the veneer business and wished to start a new plant in Tweed to produce maple veneers. There were ample supplies of maple in the Tweed area which were not being utilized. His experience had also indicated that there was a ready market in the United States.

The owner attempted to obtain funds from the conventional lending institutions and was turned down. He then approached the Ontario development agency and was recommended for a guaranteed loan. The company commenced operations in the early part of 1964 and quickly moved into a profit position. Within a few months its performance was such that it was able to obtain a normal line of credit from one of the conventional lending institutions. It has ended its first year of operations with a substantial profit.

The company is employing 40 people in its plant. Not only is maple wood being purchased from local farmers, but about 50 of these farmers are employed during the season in cutting and hauling logs. Virtually all of the production of the plant is exported to the United States. In fact, the plant is booked to capacity with orders for 1965.

It is most doubtful that this success story would have happened without the aid of the agency.

The second company is Leigh Instruments Limited, located in Carleton Place near Ottawa. This company, which was established in 1961 by a group of highly qualified electronic and design engineers, acquired the rights from the national research council to a unique automatic beacon for guiding rescuers to downed aircraft. Contained in the beacon is a record of instrument readings and other information of the preceding half-hour's flight. All RCAF planes are to be equipped with this device in the future and interest is also being shown by Great Britain and other NATO countries. I might add that substantial orders for this new electronic device have just been received from the United States Air Force.

Following the formation of the company, it received financial support from the federal government to perfect the device. By the summer of 1963 the company was ready to start commercial production. It unsuccessfully sought financing from the conventional lending institutions which were unwilling to provide working capital until the firm had demonstrated a record of achievement in the commercial field. At this point, the company was considering either selling out to American interests or moving to the United States.

Had this happened, sir, Ontario would have lost not only an industry but also a team of exceptionally well qualified scientists and engineers. In July, 1963, the financial advisory committee of ODA recommended a guarantee to the company.

Since that time the firm has moved into a profit position. Its sales now approach $1 million annually, of which a substantial proportion is in exports of a Canadian-designed invention. Employment at the plant, which totalled 35 at the time of the guarantee, has been increased to 85 early this year.

The hon. members should also note that as a result of the establishment of Leigh Instruments in Carleton Place, three small industries, including another electronics company, have also established in that general area and this is attested to by the industrial commissioner for Carleton Place.

It is likely that the provincial guarantee made to this company will be completely discharged within the very near future.

The third company is Thompson-Heyland Lumber Limited in Burks Falls. They operate a sawmill and a plant for processing wood for the furniture trade. They were anxious to enter the export market, particularly the United States. Unfortunately, the company lacked sufficient working capital to finance these exports. It unsuccessfully sought funds from the conventional lending institutions and in 1964 applied for and was granted a guaranteed loan by the Ontario development agency.

Since receiving the guarantee, the company has increased its work force from 60 to 80. Additional exports to the United States last year amounted to $125,000. In 1965 the company anticipates that a further 20 persons will be added to its payroll and its exports to the United States will be doubled to a total of $250,000.

The company, which is now in a profit position, will have created 40 jobs in two years as a direct result of the provincial guarantee, and about $375,000 in additional exports to the United States will have been achieved.

Other successful companies are operating in widely scattered locations across the province—in Sapawé, Markham, Brampton, Huntsville, Breslau, Thessalon, Orangeville, Neustadt, Windsor and Woodstock, as well as in Metropolitan Toronto. The agency has, therefore, made a contribution to the decentralization of industry within the province, which it is hoped can be accelerated in the future.

Hon. members might be interested to learn that almost half of the guarantees provided by the agency have been to companies engaged in the production of new products, new techniques, or new ideas, and repayments of the outstanding loans have been highly satisfactory.

During the last year the agency expanded its programme to advisory services to small business in the province. Teams of consultants visited both northwestern and northeastern Ontario to provide on-the-spot advisory and consultative services to small businesses in these areas. More than 50 companies and individuals discussed their business problems with agency consultants.

Special advisory and consultative sessions were also held for tourist operators in Smiths Falls and Peterborough. These special services were well received and will be repeated in 1965. The agency is preparing special accounting and other material for use by small tourist operators.

To date, more than 3,000 companies and individuals have received advisory, technical and consultative services through the Ontario development agency. As a result of the assistance provided, many of these companies are now operating more successfully and efficiently and, therefore, adding to Ontario's economic and employment potential. In a number of cases the managerial advice received from the agency has made the difference between companies going out of business and operating successfully.

More than 170 inventors have had their projects reviewed by the agency. More than half of these new ideas were referred to the Ontario research foundation for scientific evaluation at no cost to the applicant. Of course, not all of the inventions have proved to be feasible, but about 40 have been assisted to bring their products from the prototype stage on to the market.

The agency also assists companies to obtain financing from the conventional lending institutions, without government financial participation. Since the agency's inception, 18 companies have been assisted to obtain a total of $3.8 million in additional financing, which they were unable to get on their own. Another 60 companies have been able to obtain a total of $4 million in additional financing from the conventional lending institutions because of advisory services they received from the agency.

The hon. members will also be interested to learn that those companies in receipt of guarantees obtained additional funds in the amount of $3.7 million from the conventional lending institutions as a direct result of being backed by the province.

Since the Ontario development agency began operations, small businesses in Ontario have been enabled to raise a minimum of $16.2 million in additional financing to further their operations. A total of 5 900 direct job opportunities have either been maintained, or are in the course of creation, as a result of the work of the agency. Canada's annual balance of trade is also being improved by $19.3 million, through $14.1 million of additional exports and the replacement of $5.2 million of imports.

The losses on guaranteed loans amounted to $197,000 in the last fiscal year. In a guaranteed loan programme which confines its financial assistance to companies in high risk categories, it is difficult to avoid losses, but it should be recognized that the cost of this programme, judged by reasonable standards, has been relatively small in relation to what has been gained. There are now 24 companies operating successfully in the province which would not have been able to add to our economic potential and provide employment if guarantees had not been made available through the agency. This investment in small business created 24 successful plants and 3,100 direct job opportunities.

On assuming responsibility for the agency, I recognized the need to strengthen the staff work in view of the risks the agency was called upon to assume, and this was done immediately. Of the guarantees given since that time, only one small loan of $5,000 has had to be paid out by the agency.

When the guaranteed loan programme was initiated in 1963, the government realized that it was entering into a new field of endeavour—a field both rewarding and fraught with many problems and difficulties. For this reason, the programme was limited to essentials, so that the government could obtain practical experience of the real needs of small business in Ontario.

We have been carefully studying the ways and means by which the programme of the Ontario development agency may be expanded and sharpened into a more comprehensive tool for regional development. We are also anxious to reap the benefits from the recent international conference on regional development and economic change, at which experts from many parts of the world examined the problems of economic and regional development.

The reduction in the number of loan guarantees approved in 1964 reflects, of course, not only the increase in our management advisory services but also the buoyant state of the Ontario economy. It may be, however, that when our assessment of the situation is complete, a change in the emphasis of the agency's work is desirable. If so, we shall make whatever changes are necessary in the terms of reference of the agency in order to meet the need and to accomplish our objectives.

Mr. Chairman, I think I can finish by 6 o'clock on this next item, Sheridan Park, and then I will postpone until after dinner.

I stated earlier that the encouragement of industrial research was an essential element of any programme to improve manufacturing productivity. I should like now to discuss my department's assistance to industrial research through the Sheridan Park research community.

As hon. members know, the idea for the research community was sparked by the fact that the Ontario research foundation had outgrown its facilities in the city. In its 35 years of operation, the foundation has gained an international reputation for high-quality industrial research, and as a result, the demands on it from industry necessitated the decision to relocate. The concept of a research community received a decidedly favourable reaction from industry and readily obtained the support of the Ontario government.

The research community is the first such project designed for, and devoted exclusively to, industrial research and development, and there are already plans under way by other provinces to develop similar communities in other parts of Canada. All the services at Sheridan Park—its supply of water, electricity, natural gas and waste disposal facilities—are designed specifically to serve research.

Sheridan Park covers 340 acres, and is situated, with a frontage of about one mile, along the Queen Elizabeth Highway, 17 miles west of Toronto. At present there are ten property owners, with 239 acres of land either purchased or committed for purchase.

The British American Research and Development Co. Ltd. has three major experimental and pilot research buildings which have been in occupancy since last mid-summer. Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. of Canada Ltd. is occupying its first building. Currently, the Dunlop Research Centre is being erected and will be opened in September of this year. The Warner Lambert Research Institute of Canada Ltd. is already under construction and is expected to be occupied the latter part of this year. Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and International Nickel Company of Canada Ltd. have also commenced work. Both Abitibi Power and Paper Co. Ltd. and the Ontario research foundation will start construction in June.

These structures represent considerably more than the mere purchase of land. They represent large investments and continuing operating budgets. For instance, new structures underway or committed at the beginning of 1965 amounted to between $17 million and $19 million excluding the price of lands and services. The British American Research and Development Co. Ltd. and the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. of Canada Ltd., together with the initial investment in plant and equipment, water reservoir, underground services and all, represent a current investment of $8 million. These figures show that Sheridan Park will have a current value this year of about $26 million.

Sheridan Park will be unique in that it will have as its nucleus the Ontario research foundation which will be ready to move its 100-acre site on or about September 1966. The foundation will provide experienced scientists, information services, modern equipment and an excellent technical library. It is hoped that some time in the future Sheridan Park will include an international conference centre, a large computation and data complex, a geological museum and a helicopter landing site.

The Sheridan Park Corporation was established last year by this Legislature to ensure that the land in the research community was reserved exclusively for research operations and to prevent land speculation. It can be seen from my account of developments to date, that this corporation has been successful in finding new members for the community.

I am not able, at this time, to tell the hon. members how many firms will locate at Sheridan Park. This operation reminds me very much of going fishing—you know there are plenty of fish in the lake, and you know that several are nibbling and some are even biting, but until they are landed in the boat they cannot be counted. However, judging from our experience to date, it would appear that the remaining portion of Sheridan Park lands, held by the Sheridan Park Corporation, will be sold within the next few years.

We expect that by 1970 the present area of the community will be built up. Last summer when the appointment of the members of the Sheridan Park Corporation was announced, I said that we expected the research community would represent an investment of more than $100 million. It will provide employment for more than 6,000, including 2,400 university graduates and post-graduates, an equivalent number of graduates from such institutes as Ryerson polytechnical institute, and an administrative and clerical staff of about 1,200. The annual payroll will be upwards of $42 million.

Sheridan Park can, and I am sure will, make a great contribution to the economic development of Ontario. The services of the Ontario research foundation can bring the benefits of the current technological revolution to Ontario firms of all sizes. We hope that the research atmosphere of the community will encourage many other firms to develop research facilities of their own. Above all, Sheridan Park can help to conserve our greatest natural resource—gifted young men and women who will stay in Canada, because Sheridan Park and related centres will provide for them both a challenge and a creative opportunity.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ADDENDUM

The vote on the motion for third reading of Bill No. 45, An Act to amend The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963, recorded during the sitting of Wednesday, April 14, 1965 (Hansard page 2257), was as follows:

The motion was carried on the following division:

YEAS	NAYS	YEAS
Allan	Braithwaite	Knox
Auld	Bukator	Lawrence
Bales	Gaunt	(Russell)
Boyer	Gibson	Letherby
Brunelle	Gordon	Lewis
Bryden	Newman	(Humber)
Butler	Nixon	MacDonald
Carruthers	Oliver	Morningstar
Carton	Paterson	McKeough
Cass	Racine	McNeil
Cecile	Sargent	Peck
Connell	Singer	Pittock
Cowling	Spence	Price
Davis	Taylor	Pritchard
Davison	Thompson	Randall
Demers	Trotter	Reilly
Downer	Troy	Renwick
Dunlop	Whicher	Reuter
Dymond	Worton—19	Robarts
Edwards		Roberts
Evans		Rollins
Freeman		Root
Gisborn		Rowe
Gomme		Rowntree
Grossman		Sandercock
Guindon		Simonett
Hamilton		Spooner
Haskett		Stewart
Henderson		Villeneuve
Hodgson		Walker
(Scarborough East)		Wardrobe
Hodgson		Wells
(Victoria)		White
Johnston		Whitney
(Parry Sound)		Wishart
Johnston		Yakabuski
(Carleton)		Yaremko—69
Kerr

No. 78

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, April 27, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, April 27, 1965

Estimates, Department of Economics and Development, Mr. Randall, continued	2315
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2337

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

(continued)

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak now on the trade and industry branch. I was afraid for a moment that there were not going to be enough hon. members in the House to hear the rest of the speech and thought perhaps I could get the six votes put through in a hurry and we could all go and listen to the hockey game.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Randall: The operational core of The Department of Economics and Development is its trade and industry branch. Supported in its industrial development activities by the research and special facilities of our other divisions, this department's industrial development work has been made doubly important by the targets which we have set for 1970.

There are two measures that are essential if we in Ontario are to provide job opportunities in the future. One is by retraining men and women, whose jobs become redundant due perhaps to automation or other unforeseeable circumstances, to enable them to fit into other occupations. In this area, The Departments of Education and Labour are now deeply involved. The other is by selling the production of our factories, forests, mines and farms, either at home or abroad. The constant movement of goods and services is the best insurance we have for maintaining economic growth and assuring full employment.

In this respect, the province of Ontario has led the way in Canada in creating and meeting consumer demands. We have been practising this marketing philosophy, spearheaded by The Department of Economics and Development, since September, 1964. Since that time we have organized and sent to foreign markets a total of 38 sales missions. From the sales figures compiled for the department by those participating in the missions, all have been successful. We know that many Ontario companies have increased their earnings and given employment to a very large number of people.

It is interesting to note the stress placed on the value of exporting in the first review of the economic council of Canada. This feeling is growing among Canadian businessmen and was expressed very clearly by the Hon. Mitchell Sharp when he spoke recently in Toronto, and I quote:

In the years that lie immediately ahead, there is going to be a big bulge in the Canadian labour force. To absorb these young people, Canada must industrialize. There is no alternative. I am convinced that to industrialize successfully, we must become exporters of manufactured goods.

May I say we heartily endorse these comments, and the province of Ontario has led the way in Canada, in building manufacturing through exports. We have, since our industrial development emphasis was changed from domestic to international markets in September, 1962, practised this philosophy continuously.

During the last year, we sent out 16 sales missions and chalked up several firsts in our most successful year to date. Our enterprising salesmen visited new markets—in Central and South America, Nigeria and Ghana, and Japan—with more than 150 companies involved. We polled these firms and were advised that total sales of Ontario-made products as a result of these selling trips amounted to some $30 million. The 38 sales missions to date have accounted for $81 million worth of secondary manufactured goods, and this does not take into account the repeat business secured, which we are not able to record.

We have taken Ontario businessmen, who had never planned on selling in foreign markets, and converted them into "instant" international salesmen. Almost overnight, through this programme of planned export selling, we have created more than 350 international salesmen. By surveying the market first and setting up contacts beforehand, selling time is utilized to the best advantage, as a good salesman has no time to waste when so much time is utilized in coming and going. Experienced trade and industry leaders accompany each of our missions. Appointments and contacts are arranged with the people who are most likely to buy, so that each member is guided to potential buyers without delay. This is generally the shortest route to a sale. Through this planned and experienced approach, mission members become familiar with new markets and return time and time again on their own for repeat business. In this way the seed was planted—if they could succeed in one market, they could duplicate their success in others. This, therefore, is the story of Ontario's international salesmen and one which we hope to expand very materially.

We have more than 13,000 manufacturers in Ontario, of which almost 11,000 employ less than 50 people. Most of these have never exported. May I suggest, if only 10 per cent—or 1,100—of these employers can be encouraged to export their products, the growth possibilities for them and the jobs they would create, would be enormous.

Increased business created through export sales has been one of the supporting factors contributing to plant expansions in the province.

A total of 523 manufacturing companies expanded facilities in Ontario during 1964. These expansions involved more than 17,000 new employees, more than 11,000,000 square feet of new manufacturing capacity, and more than $237 million in capital expenditure on new buildings, property and machinery.

Most of our sales missions are directed to the United States and European markets where growing purchasing power has created new demands for consumer goods. But we have not stopped here. We have gone into other markets on an exploratory basis, to determine what the short-run and long-term prospects are for the sale of Canadian products. Sometimes these distant and still unexploited markets have not yet reached the stage where they can absorb our goods in any worthwhile quantity. We feel, however, that they could employ our skills and techniques on a consulting basis and, through this approach, purchase entire manufacturing processes and plants in the very near future.

Last December I led one of our sales missions to Nigeria and Ghana. These and other African countries represent almost limitless markets for our products in the years ahead, provided we are prepared to demonstrate the availability and quality of Canadian goods at competitive prices. For instance, a Toronto company selling water sealants obtained a $36,000 order in these countries, where two of Africa's largest hydro-electric power projects are being built—the Niger Dam in Nigeria and the Volta Dam in Ghana.

This was a most important sales mission. We explored a completely new market area, which, I would say, is representative of the African continent, comprising 35 countries, all striving to become self-sufficient. This is one of the fastest-developing areas of the world, with great need for the products we in Canada have to sell.

We also sent a sales mission to Japan last year. Our party was composed of leading authorities in the nuclear technology field. Our mission was to acquaint Japanese government and utilities officials with CANDU, the Canadian nuclear concept as developed and now in use in this province.

We in Ontario, along with Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., will have invested almost $400 million in our nuclear generating plants by 1970. This was one of our greatest selling points when we were discussing our nuclear concept in Japan. Our own investment indicated complete confidence in the superiority of our CANDU concept, and this had much to do with the great interest shown by the Japanese. I am confident that when Japan is ready to provide its future power needs through nuclear energy, Canada's nuclear system and products will be given careful consideration.

In 1965-66 we anticipate sending a minimum of 18 Ontario sales missions abroad. These are planned for the United States, Europe, Central and South America, and new markets such as New Zealand and Australia, Turkey, Egypt and other Middle East countries.

We have proposed to the federal government a co-operative plan that would enable Canada to send abroad a minimum of 100 salesmen a month, or 1,200 each year. These men would represent all provinces and would use the world-wide, federally established trade offices to sell the commodities of their respective provinces. I believe this would revolutionize Canada's participation in foreign markets and spread the opportunities for industrial and economic expansion across our nation. But more important than this, it would create more internationally trained salesmen as we have done in Ontario. With the changing emphasis on world trade, with the unbridled competition we can anticipate from other highly industrialized nations,

Canada has no alternative but to accept this challenge.

I believe it should be noted that the companies represented on our sales missions are located in every economic region of the province. We choose our people carefully because we know some people are better at opening trade doors than others. Although the hon. members opposite may not agree, there are many occasions when a Minister of the Crown is an effective instrument for opening doors to greater trade opportunities.

It has often been said that a prophet is without honour in his own country. This is also apropos for a politician in North America. It has been my experience, however, that this does not hold true in most areas of the world. Our sales missions have only a certain amount of time in each market area, and contacts must be made quickly. A Minister of the Crown can be invaluable in introducing his business colleagues to key people. Not only does his presence add prestige to the purpose of the mission, it ensures interest and attention at the highest level.

These sales missions are what we call our "outgoing" programme; we also have an "incoming" programme. Our "incoming" programme consists of bringing in buyers from other countries to look at our fine-quality manufactured goods. Last year we brought in hardware buyers from France, furniture buyers from the United States, and fur garment buyers from the United Kingdom. The fur garment buyers alone purchased nearly $500,000 worth of Ontario fur garments, and these have since been promoted and sold in prestige stores throughout the United Kingdom.

In 1965 we will bring in at least 90 buyers for a first-hand look at our fashion industry, our housing, our heating equipment, our excellent food products.

This year the department will participate in at least eight international fairs. I know of no better way to place Canadian goods before the buying public than to exhibit in fairs—stack our products up against those of other nations, and let people see the difference.

In the last three months my department has sponsored Ontario businessmen at a toy fair and a warm-air heating show in the United Kingdom, and a sporting goods show in Philadelphia. The success that our manufacturers have had as a result of these three shows has encouraged us to continue this worthwhile sales promotion programme.

Later this year we plan to participate in a hardware and household goods show and a general trade fair in Germany; a general trade fair in Italy; a toy fair in the United Kingdom and at least one exhibition in the United States. In most of these fairs we will have a wide range of Canadian products on display in a special Ontario section. In other shows we will have an information booth where foreign businessmen and investors can obtain information about Ontario, the "Province of Opportunity."

In relation to our sales mission programme and our participation in international fairs, I would like to stress the importance of co-operation with the federal government. One of the cornerstones of our marketing policy is federal-provincial co-operation. Every sales mission we send out is planned in conjunction with the Canadian trade offices abroad. We do not duplicate the federal effort; we supplement it. Any government, whether federal or provincial, can do only so much because of budget limitation, and I can assure the hon. members that the federal authorities welcome our efforts to sell more Canadian products.

I cannot commend highly enough the dedicated and hard-working federal trade commissioners who are serving Canada around the world. We are fortunate in being able to work with them and they, in turn, are delighted to see Canadians in their far-flung posts making calls and getting orders.

Tied in with these various trade promotion activities this year will be an international advertising programme. This will be concentrated primarily in the United States where even in some border areas, people know very little about the products and manufacturing capacities of Canadian industry.

To project our promotion and sales efforts to greater advantage, the department completed two major studies in the United States last year to discover the extent of U.S. knowledge about Canada and the provinces and the products we produce. These studies were carried out by the Institute for Analytical Research and by International Surveys Ltd. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, not all U.S. citizens see Canada as an industrial power when, in fact, we are one of the leading industrial nations of the world. Our surveys reveal that Canada is not visualized as a prime exporter of manufactured goods, and there is a strong belief in the United States that there are not too many products which are truly and distinctively Canadian. It is significant, however, to find that given equal opportunity and comparative prices, U.S. shoppers would prefer to buy more goods from Canada than from many other exporting countries. To capitalize on this strong expression of fraternal feeling and reservoir of goodwill which exists in the United States for Canada, we must design our advertising campaign accordingly.

The "image" we hope to achieve in the United States already exists to a high degree in the United Kingdom. For example: Central heating. Our heating equipment manufacturers had to conduct an extensive educational programme in the United Kingdom before central heating was accepted. Even now, though Canada currently supplies 50 per cent of all gas- and oil-fired central heating in Britain, the battle to sell heating devices to British homes is only just beginning. Part of this acceptance of central heating in the United Kingdom is the result of the work carried out at Ontario House in London. The success that Canadian manufacturers have had in selling there since import restrictions were lifted in that country in 1959 has much to do with the adverse trade balance the United Kingdom has with Canada at the present time.

Now, reconstructed and enlarged, and reopened last June by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), Ontario House has truly become the province's "showcase" in the United Kingdom. Here, Ontario products are continuously displayed, Ontario businessmen are put in contact with U.K. buyers, Ontario tourists are helped, and immigrants to Ontario are given counsel. The province's other offices—in Milan, Dusseldorf, New York and Chicago—perform the same variety of duties.

My department will continue the programme to export our technical and engineering capabilities. As the hon. members know, one year ago we launched a drive to assist small engineering firms in Ontario to secure foreign contracts. At present, preliminary engineering surveys are currently underway in Nicaragua, Guatemala, Paraguay, Nigeria, Ghana and Iraq, which perhaps would not have been possible if we had not established our plan for selling Canadian engineering services abroad. This could be termed the export of know-how.

There will be no letup in our department's efforts to attract new investment to our province—through branch plants, licensing agreements and joint ventures. The year 1964 was another successful year in this regard.

Although there were ten fewer branch plants obtained in 1964 than in 1963, the end results were considerably better in land purchases and capital investment. The 173 branch plants in 1963 resulted in 3,873 jobs, 755 acres of land purchased, $8.5 million in buildings, and some $23 million in machinery and equipment. In 1964, 163 branch plants were established in Ontario, giving industrial employment to some 5,000 people. These companies purchased 1,129 acres of land, and invested $22.5 million in buildings and $56 million in machinery and equipment.

Last year a new programme was introduced whereby a foreign manufacturer was invited to join in equity participation with an Ontario firm. This resulted in 12 new joint ventures last year and we anticipate this programme can be expanded in the coming year.

In addition, 104 manufacturing arrangements were completed to produce products not sold or formerly imported into Ontario, and as previously mentioned, 523 companies expanded their plants and facilities throughout the province. Details of these arrangements are contained in the Ontario Industrial Review, which was put on your desks at dinner time.

One of our most successful programmes in the search for new investment is the business opportunity missions to the United States. These are teams of trade and industry experts, which go to the major U.S. cities to hold confidential interviews with possible investors. The department conducted seven of these missions in 1964-65 and this year our teams will visit such cities as Detroit, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Rochester.

Our programme to assist the corporations already operating in Ontario will be expanded from seven to nine industrial and export clinics in 1965-66. Nurturing the businesses we already have is just as important as our efforts to attract new ones and perhaps would be less costly. The seven clinics held last year were attended by more than 1,500 people, representing business, labour, education and government. They stimulated the interest and activity of many to expand their product lines and export plans.

The department will continue to reward initiative by presenting "A for Achievement" awards to Ontario companies showing outstanding accomplishment in exporting, import replacement, development of new products and introduction of new or improved production techniques and processes. These flags of recognition are flying over factories in many areas of the province, and several more will be awarded shortly.

The department will consider holding an import replacement show of international scope. The recent automotive agreement between Canada and the United States requiring more Canadian content will mean that automobile companies will have a strong incentive to find new sources of efficient parts production in Canada.

In the new year, the department will organize further "Shop Canadian" campaigns. Nine of these special retail promotions were held across Ontario last year, creating a new awareness of the fine quality of Canadian manufactured goods. The department will also participate in local fairs and exhibitions during the 1965-66 year to encourage the Ontario consumer to shop Canadian when the price and quality are competitive with imports, and to advise local businessmen of the many services available through the department.

A major part of the province's "Shop Canadian" programme is played by the women's advisory committee of the department. This group, representing women from across the province, held nine special conferences last year. Nearly 5,000 women, representing about 700 women's organizations, attended.

Speakers at these special forums and symposiums represented the consumer, the government, the financial community, manufacturers and various authorities on retailing, design and fashion. Time and time again, women approached the advisory committee following these meetings to say no one had ever told them before that they were important to the economy of the country through their everyday purchasing habits.

We will be holding eight of these one-day consumer forums in Toronto, Sault Ste. Marie, Windsor, Cornwall, Guelph, Belleville, Kingston and Hamilton this year. They will precede the department's "Shop Canadian" retail promotions by a day or two in order to set the mood among the local consumers.

The women's advisory committee has directed much of its efforts to the clothing industry of Ontario. This is one of the industries which has experienced difficulties during the last few years. It is also an industry that could create a great many new jobs for men and women.

We are helping the garment industry by taking its representatives on sales missions abroad and placing them in contact with sales agents and retail outlets in other countries. The women's advisory committee has had a role in this promotion by holding fashion shows of all-Canadian garments throughout the province. We are assisting the industry in its endeavours to make Ontario the garment and fashion centre of Canada, and I might add, with some success.

In recognition of this work, our women's advisory committee was presented recently with the highest award attainable in Canada in the fields of garment manufacturing, distribution and retailing. This was the president's Judy Award which has been presented only twice before and is donated by the fashion industry. The citation reads: "For activities in the promotion of interest and support, through the Ontario trade crusade, on the part of the consumer for Canadian fashions at home and abroad."

One of the most imaginative programmes now underway by the women's advisory committee is a fashion design award competition for Ontario designers. This competition is being held to encourage established Ontario manufacturers to design, and produce, distinctive Canadian ladies' and children's apparel, which we sincerely believe will help stimulate domestic and export sales.

Manufacturers of textiles are also involved since rules for the designers stipulate that Canadian manufactured materials must be used in the manufacture of clothing submitted for the competition. Categories include all fields of women's and children's clothing.

In order to maintain an all-Canadian theme for the competition, each creation designed must be inspired by one of a series of Canadian paintings made available for the promotion by the Toronto Art Gallery. Colours, line or form of these paintings may all contribute to the final design.

Highlight of the competition will be a showing of the finest creations entered in each category and the presentation of Eedee awards to winning manufacturers and designers in Toronto on May 20. The Eedee award is a three dimensional statuette. Other similar awards usually have short titles, such as Judy, Emmy, Oscar and so on. We have named ours Eedee because ED stands for economics and development or excellence of design. Eedee is also a woman's name and since the competition concerns women's apparel the name is particularly fitting.

To tie in with the fashion design competition, and in line with our incoming buyer programme, we are inviting foreign buyers, representing major retail outlets in some of the world's largest cities. These buyers represent a potential billion dollar market. They will come from Austria, Belgium, Eire, England, Scotland, Wales, France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Denmark, Switzerland, Spain, Lebanon and the United States. After the showing of new designs, the buyers will spend three days meeting with 60 or more Ontario garment manufacturers and looking at their selections. These companies will take sample rooms in the hotel to display their summer and fall fashions of all wearing apparel.

The women's advisory committee has done an excellent job. From discussions with retailers in communities across the province, we know consumers have begun to shop with greater care and are repeatedly asking for Canadian-made products. A greater awareness on the part of women as to the importance of their day-to-day purchasing power in the creation of more jobs has awakened manufacturers, and retailers to the fact that they must cater more to the desires and needs of the consumer. If they do, it is already obvious, our manufacturers can successfully meet import competition.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I will touch for a few minutes on the world's fair to be held in Montreal.

The hon. members are aware that my department has the special assignment of planning and creating the Ontario pavilion at the 1967 world's fair. This is a tremendous undertaking. Not only must we do credit to the people of Ontario, but we must also portray the true life story of our province, for visitors from near and far.

We have been asked: What will the world's fair mean to Ontario? For one thing, I believe it will mean increased business for our manufacturing and tourist industries. By the very nature of the material and goods to be used throughout the fair, we estimate about 25 per cent will be supplied by Ontario industry. This is only a guesstimate, but I do not think we will be far off the mark.

We see our pavilion at Montreal as a unique opportunity to spotlight Ontario as the province of opportunity and to explain our social and business environment to our sister provinces and visitors from other lands.

At no other time in our history has there been such a need for Canadians to know each other better. Our pavilion will tell the exciting story of Ontario—its cultural, educational, agricultural and industrial life—past, present and future. I am sure the hon. members are now familiar with the plans since our preview for Expo '67. I need not describe in detail the Ontario pavilion, except to say that we are on schedule. We were the first to release details and model designs, which have been widely publicized, and this has helped to stimulate greater interest in Expo '67, for which the Expo officials are most appreciative.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to finalize, I should like to speak on the Ontario housing corporation. This is an area for which I have a very special interest and concern. I refer to the Ontario housing corporation, and more particularly to the rental housing programme for modest income families and senior citizens.

During the past year, housing has taken great strides toward attaining full stature. Although it is just one of the many social service programmes undertaken by this government, it is looked upon as a programme of major significance and dimensions.

Ontario housing corporation, created by the Legislature last year, provides a means whereby the Ontario housing programme can be operated along lines closely allied to private enterprise. What is perhaps more important, it has provided a means whereby both government and private enterprise can work together toward a common goal.

It has been no secret in the past that private enterprise resented governmental intrusion in the rental housing field. Perhaps our most gratifying experience to date, therefore, has been the wholehearted support which we have received from the merchant builders and the real estate brokers. A great deal of our preparatory work in evolving proposal documents and other procedures has been established in close collaboration with the builders and real estate broker organizations. This has done much to assure a clear understanding on their part of how they can work with the Ontario housing corporation to expedite the housing programme.

Ontario housing corporation reports to me, and through me, to the Legislature. That is about the extent of its similarity to a department of government. In its day-to-day operations, in its procedures and policies, it enjoys the freedom of a private business organization similar to that of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at Ottawa.

As the Minister responsible for stimulating trade and industry in this province, it is essential that I spend as much time as possible working throughout the province and leading as many trade missions as time will permit to achieve our objectives of full employment and economic expansion. In order that my absences would not affect the operations of Ontario housing corporation, and to expedite the housing programme the corporation was established under the supervision of a very capable chairman and board of directors.

I have every confidence in the perception and dedication to public service that imbues the chairman and members of the board. They are a highly qualified group, with each member having a particular skill to contribute and each, I might add, selected on his or her merits alone without regard to political beliefs. The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) suggested in this House a few weeks ago that we should avail ourselves of the services offered by dedicated citizens who want to make a worthwhile contribution to the province's welfare. This is what has been achieved in housing matters.

Having created the Ontario housing corporation and selected highly qualified people to guide its affairs, it would be utterly illogical not to grant the director, chairman and members of the board, full freedom to do the job for which it was created. The problem of adequate housing is not a short-term project but one we in this province will be faced with for many years to come. As our society becomes more affluent, as it most certainly will, the gap between those who can afford adequate housing, and those who cannot, will widen. Therefore, I felt the need to establish an entity to carry out the province's responsibilities for its citizens and do the job regardless of who is the Minister or what government is in office. This was the prime reason for its creation.

The Ontario Housing Corporation Act was passed and the proclamation of the Act took place on August 11, 1964. You may recall that we pre-empted the federal government in passing our legislation; therefore, we had to wait for them to bring in changes to The National Housing Act before Ontario housing corporation could get into action. In point of fact, the changes to The National Housing Act received Royal assent on June 18, 1964. Since that time, the housing branch and the Metropolitan Toronto housing authority have been merged to form the nucleus of staff required by Ontario housing corporation. A complete staff reorganization has taken place to enable the corporation to assume its new responsibilities, and the corporation has merged into one main office. It has also made tremendous inroads into the procedural red tape which bogged down earlier programmes, and has made a decisive start on its prime task of producing housing across this province. It has also assumed other responsibilities in the housing field which I will refer to later.

The extent to which the corporation has succeeded in slashing intergovernmental procedures can be briefly summarized as follows:

In the past, both capital and operating costs were shared by the three levels of government involved—75 per cent federal, 17.5 per cent provincial and 7.5 per cent municipal. Because of this sharing of costs, all three levels of government had a finger in the development of each project. Now, Ontario housing corporation borrows 90 per cent of the capital costs from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the government of Ontario puts up the remaining 10 per cent. There is no municipal share of capital costs whatsoever, and Ontario housing corporation assumes full responsibility for providing the necessary housing, on request from the municipality needing it. If there is an operating loss after the houses are completed and occupied, the municipal share is 7.5 per cent. On this basis, closer attention to all cost factors can be given, and this will assist in reducing liabilities to the minimum in the interests of all three levels of government.

The important role which the municipality has to play is that of leadership. Municipal councils can spearhead the drive for better housing conditions and the removal of sub-standard dwellings. If it is apparent to any council that a need for housing exists, the council can enlist the help and assistance of Ontario housing corporation by a simple request. The corporation will then determine the number of houses required, and if the municipality is willing, develop them by the quickest possible means. Depending upon conditions in the municipality concerned, this may be by any one of the following methods:

Direct construction—where we design the units and call tenders; builder proposals—where the builders submit proposals and build units of their own design; purchase of newly completed housing; purchase and repair or conversion of older dwellings.

In its dealings with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Ontario housing corporation is treated in much the same way as any other borrower. CMHC naturally expects a good standard of design and construction, and responsible management of the completed units—but that is all. In the past, much has been said and published about the multiplicity of approvals required and desks to cross before a project could come into being. I believe the term, "54 desks to cross" was that most commonly used. If that number of approvals was correct, then we have reduced these to infinitesimal proportions. For example, in direct construction projects, the approvals which Ontario housing corporation must obtain from CMHC have been reduced to three, as follows:

1. When the need for a project has been determined by Ontario housing corporation, CMHC is advised of the number of units required and the approximate cost. CMHC is asked at that time to give an undertaking that it considers the proposed development justified, is prepared to provide the necessary financing, and to share in any operating losses on the basis which I previously outlined.

2. When preliminary designs have been completed, they are submitted to CMHC for approval. If they meet National Housing Act standards and the estimated cost is realistic, CMHC then gives a definite commitment that it will finance the project.

3. When final designs are completed and tenders are about to be called, a formal application is made to CMHC for a 90 per cent loan and participation in operating losses. The mortgage is adjusted, when the project is completed, to take care of any minor changes in cost which may have arisen during the construction period. Where the builder proposal technique is used, these procedures are equally simple, and an even greater saving of time can be effected because the preliminary design process has been carried out by the builder before making the proposal. I might add that provided a builder's designs comply with National Housing Act standards, it is possible for Ontario housing corporation to award a contract within 60 days of receiving the builder's submission.

A further example of the excellent co-operation Ontario housing corporation has received from CMHC is the procedures which have been evolved for purchasing existing single properties. First, Ontario housing corporation submits an estimate to CMHC of the number of dwellings it hopes to purchase and an indication of what each dwelling will cost. These figures are then used as the basis for a federal order-in-council, authorizing CMHC to make loans to Ontario Housing Corporation on a certain number of properties in a given municipality. Then, as individual properties are offered, a joint CMHC-OHC team consisting of an inspector and an appraiser, inspects the property. If the property is structurally sound, and the asking price is within the appraised value, the local manager of CMHC has authority to make a loan commitment to Ontario housing corporation immediately. Using this technique, Ontario housing corporation can offer to purchase a house within two to three days of receiving the listing from the real estate broker.

I cannot speak too highly of the co-operation which has been extended both by the hon. Mr. Nicholson, the federal Minister responsible for housing, and also by CMHC itself. Everything possible has been done to remove potential roadblocks and to set up their own operating procedures and staff structure to deal with the vastly increased influx of proposals resulting from the new legislation and the formation of Ontario housing corporation. I very much doubt whether the federal government had anticipated any province taking immediate advantage of their new legislation, and for that reason, CMHC has had to evolve its new operating procedures, while at the same time processing proposals submitted to it by Ontario housing corporation. Perhaps this has been of some value because it has enabled both organizations to dovetail and simplify their procedures to the greatest possible extent. We have been fortunate also in that CMHC has lent to Ontario housing corporation a number of senior staff during the reorganization period.

Another essential task has been that of making Ontario municipalities aware of the assistance available to them through Ontario housing corporation. Equally important, the purpose of our housing programme has had to be placed in its true perspective. The job of Ontario housing corporation is to provide adequate housing accommodation for families and senior citizens at rentals which they can afford and in a quantity sufficient to meet the needs of this province. Perhaps I might pause here to define what we term inadequate accommodation to be.

It may be physically inadequate because the roof leaks, or it is lacking essential sanitary facilities. It may be spatially inadequate because there are too few bedrooms to accommodate the number of children in the family. It may be inadequate from a location standpoint in that it is too far distant from sources of employment and amenities. Lastly, it may be inadequate from a financial standpoint in that the rent is simply beyond the tenant family's ability to pay without the other necessities of life being jeopardized.

These are the factors which municipalities must take into account, when they are considering whether there is a need for "Ontario housing" in their community.

To further municipal understanding of our aims and objectives, Ontario housing corporation has provided every organized community in Ontario with full details of the assistance available under the new legislation. In addition, we have sponsored symposiums in Toronto and Sault Ste. Marie, in conjunction with the federal government and my colleague, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner). The purpose of these conferences, to which every municipality in the province was invited to send its senior elected and appointed representatives, was to explain the new housing and urban renewal legislation and to answer questions which might be giving concern to municipalities. Panel discussions and question periods gave every municipal representative the opportunity to become fully informed of the assistance, financial and otherwise, available in this field. The two conferences were very well attended. I was very pleased to see a number of the hon. members of this Legislature at the one held here in Toronto. Judging from the question periods and formal discussions, a great deal of interest in urban renewal and Ontario housing has been stimulated as a result.

Despite its organizational and educational activities, Ontario housing corporation has not neglected its prime purpose of developing houses. I am satisfied that the progress made to date justifies our decision to create Ontario housing corporation. I cannot produce dramatic statistics of houses completed and occupied across Ontario, when the corporation has only been in existence for a matter of eight months. But there is no necessity for me to apologize for the results that have been achieved. You must judge for yourself whether or not these figures represent progress in housing matters in Ontario.

Since the fall of last year when the corporation opened its doors for business, a total of 31 municipalities has requested surveys to determine the need for rental housing. Requests for specific projects have been received from 26 municipalities for a total of 5,748 family units and 500 senior citizen units. Tenders have already been called for 1,951 units.

Now let me give you a few specific examples of requests received since the corporation came into being.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): How about building, not just requests?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The city of Hamilton requested 100 senior citizen units on September 15, 1964 and a further 100 units on February 26, 1965. A contract for the construction of the first 40 units was awarded on February 24, 1965. The remaining units will be developed on a site overlooking Hamilton harbour and tenders for the construction of these will be called during May of this year.

The city of Hamilton also requested 200 units of family housing on September 15, 1964. Ontario housing corporation advertised for builder proposals and a commitment for the first 46 units was made on March 24, 1965. Unfortunately, the response was limited due to a shortage of land and the corporation is now in the process of making federal-provincial owned land available so that proposals may again be called for the balance of the units.

The municipality of Metropolitan Toronto on February 10, 1965, requested the corporation to undertake a three-year programme of 4,500 family units. On February 27, the corporation advertised for a minimum of 1,250 units, either existing or to be constructed this year. The closing date for existing units was March 18, 1965, and over 1,500 units were offered. These are now being appraised and it is expected that at least 1,000 units will meet OHC requirements. Purchase of acceptable units will be carried out during May 1965. The closing date for units to be constructed by builders on their own land was April 8, 1965. The response, again, was extremely good and plans and specifications are now being checked to ensure conformity with National Housing Act standards.

Many of the units will be completed and occupied this year. During this month, proposals will be invited from builders for the development of approximately 250 units on land owned by CMHC and OHC at Stableford Farm, Scarborough. At Metro's request, only 25 per cent of the units scattered throughout the project will be purchased by Ontario housing corporation for Ontario housing purposes. The remainder will be sold or rented by the builder so as to achieve a fully integrated development.

Mr. Singer: That has only taken nine years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In Alexandra Park, approximately 500 units will be developed on land to be cleared by the city of Toronto. The city's timetable to purchase and demolish the existing buildings will provide a two-acre site for new construction by September of this year. Ontario housing corporation will call tenders in July so that construction can commence as soon as the cleared land is available. It will then maintain a continuous construction programme as cleared land becomes available until the project is complete.

Other projects in Metro on which construction will commence this year are the 237 unit O'Connor Drive development and 309 units in Thistletown.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): This has been announced a few times before.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Both of these developments were initiated under the earlier federal-provincial arrangements that have now been taken over by the Ontario housing corporation.

The city of Windsor requested a total of 170 units on November 13, 1964. Design of the first 80 units is virtually completed and tenders will be called in June of this year.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): For how many?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The remaining 90 units which are to be located on scattered sites throughout the city will go to tender during July 1965.

Mr. Singer: That is if you do not run out of land.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will find it, we will find it!

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Oh, quiet, the man is reading off his statement.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): We do not need you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: These are just a few illustrations indicating how we have overcome much of the difficulties of the former housing programme. Now, instead of measuring the period from municipal request to commencement of construction in years, we are able to measure it in months. The new programme offers a variety of techniques which can be utilized to meet the circumstances obtaining in a particular municipality. For example, the builder proposal technique is not always successful, as we learned in the city of Hamilton and in the small communities of Listowel and Riverside. In Hamilton we did receive some response, but in the other two communities there was no response from the local merchant builders to our advertisement. This means Ontario housing corporation will now have to design units for these communities and go to tender on a direct construction basis. In point of fact, design is already underway.

During the debate on the hon. Provincial Treasurer's (Mr. Allan's) Budget speech, mention was made of the amount set aside for housing requirements in the coming year, namely, $9,750,000. I hasten to assure those who feel this is insufficient that it represents only 10 per cent of the moneys available for housing purposes.

If this provincial amount is spent, it will call for a total expenditure of over $90 million —the $81 million being borrowed from the federal government through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. So you see we have ample funds.

Perhaps a unique plan in housing is taking place in Brunetville on the periphery of Kapuskasing. This unorganized settlement of about 200 homes grew over the years until it became a major problem for the town of Kapuskasing. There were no roads, no sewers and no schools. Even septic tanks were a rarity and more frequently open ditches served as sewers. About a year ago, as a result of discussions between the town of Kapuskasing and The Department of Municipal Affairs, the area was annexed to Kapuskasing. At the same time arrangements were made whereby the government of Ontario would assist Kapuskasing in cleaning up the area and bringing it up to the town's standards. This involved placing the land on a plan of subdivision, providing adequate municipal services, including a source of water supply and sewage treatment facilities, clearing the area of the unbelievable quantity of refuse which had accumulated, and making it financially possible for the residents to improve their homes.

Ontario housing corporation came into the picture as a partner in the improvement programme, with the town and The Department of Municipal Affairs, to provide the means of financial assistance on a longer term than would be possible under the federal home improvement plan.

By arrangement with the banks and other lending institutions, the corporation has undertaken to guarantee loans, or alternatively to make direct loans, to enable the residents to meet their share of the costs of the municipal services which are now being provided and to carry out essential improvements to their homes. Where a home has to be moved to conform with the new street pattern, this will be done at no cost to the owner of the house. Where a house is totally unsuited for rehabilitation and the occupant cannot afford the cost of another home, arrangements will be made by Ontario housing corporation in conjunction with the town to provide rental accommodation on a geared-to-income basis, the same as our standard housing programme. This will apply also to residents who cannot afford the cost of improving their homes.

As I mentioned a moment ago, nearly 200 dwellings are involved in this improvement of an entire community. Upon completion of the scheme, Brunetville should be transformed into a well planned, pleasant community, forming an integral part of the town of Kapuskasing, instead of the blighted, unorganized community, which only a short while ago was a problem and a liability to the town.

May I now shed some light on the many conflicting reports as to the role played by Ontario housing corporation in respect to urban renewal programmes.

A. When a municipality has decided that an area such as Blake street or Alexandra Park should be the subject of an urban renewal scheme, the proposal is first dealt with by the municipality, The Department of Municipal Affairs, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

B. When the urban renewal area has been designated; when the renewal plan for the area has been approved and demolition of existing houses or establishments begins, Ontario housing corporation has two jobs to do: (i) Assist the municipality by providing temporary housing required by those families who are displaced; (ii) Commence building new homes and rehabilitating existing dwellings in accordance with the urban renewal plan.

If those who are continually suggesting there is a conflict of interest between Ontario housing corporation and other interested bodies would direct constructive criticism toward the real problems, I am confident we could eliminate a great deal of time-wasting, which has held up programmes in the past, and devote all our efforts to expediting our responsibility to get houses built.

The Ontario housing corporation will dedicate itself to providing, rehabilitating and building housing, on receipt of formal requests from municipal councils, immediately it can have the ground to build on. We must recognize that the cost of land, where it is purchased and cleared in urban renewal areas, can be as high as $300,000 per acre. A private developer, undertaking a project on land at this cost, must build housing of a high density or for high income families in order to make it economically worthwhile. The only way in which housing can be developed for low income families in these areas is as part of an urban renewal programme where the federal, provincial and municipal governments "write down" the land to a figure which is economically feasible.

I have endeavoured to give you a concise yet complete report on Ontario housing corporation during its first few months of operation. The corporation's board of directors has already set a three-year target which, when accomplished, will more than equal the total number of units developed in Canada to date. The corporation has already demonstrated the speed with which it can undertake developments. I am confident it will continue to do so, and in this it will have my full and complete support.

Mr. Chairman, while this report has been of some length, covering the many diversified activities of The Department of Economics and Development, it does emphasize the department's role in the affairs of the province and the part it must play in conforming and co-ordinating with other departments of the provincial government and the federal authorities. I look forward to discussing any matters the hon. members may wish to pursue in greater detail.

On vote 401:

Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, I would first like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Economics and Development on his most complete and detailed report concerning the affairs of his department. It was typical of the hon. Minister's energy and enthusiasm that all aspects of his department's activities have been covered so thoroughly. However, it is that very thoroughness, that very concern for detail as evidenced by his report, which gives rise to the question as to whether the hon. Minister really sees the overall picture and is really concentrating on the more important objectives of economics and development in this province. Sometimes a close and meticulous attention to detail blinds a person to the broader picture.

I should like tonight to discuss that broader picture as we see it from this side. The main function of The Department of Economics and Development should be to plan and programme the development of the resources of this province and to utilize to the maximum the energies and abilities of the people of Ontario in a steady, orderly manner, so as to achieve the highest standard of living. Such prosperity should accrue not just to a few of our people but to all those living within our borders—and partly as a result of our efforts, to all those living in Canada.

It seems to me that there are five areas of responsibility that should be at the top of the hon. Minister's permanent agenda for action and that all other efforts put forth by the department should only be supplemental to these main objectives.

First there is a need to set up a master plan, a long-term blueprint for growth. This is basic for any development planning. Guidelines must be established to chart where we are going and what we need to accomplish on the way. An inventory of our resources, both physical and human, must be taken and decisions must be made on how these resources may best be developed and utilized. A timetable must be set up for the orderly development of Ontario so that all parts of our province can progress at a relatively even rate. The skills and educational attainments of our people must be fitted to the necessities of our modern and fast-changing industrial economy. These things all need to be thought through and sorted out. Goals need to be established, Mr. Chairman, if we are to meet the challenges of the decades ahead.

Of second importance is the matter of regional development, which I propose to discuss in more detail in a few moments. For the time being, suffice it to say that if we are to avoid the ups and downs and the growth pains of the past, more attention must be given by the hon. Minister and by the Cabinet to the development of all portions of our province on a much more uniform basis.

Third, Mr. Chairman, there is the matter to which the hon. Minister referred, of urban renewal and housing. In this area we apparently have all the necessary machinery for action—but nobody presses the button. We have been advised of plans and programmes both federally and provincially, and the financial aspects have all been taken care of, but still we are stalled. Someone must act, not just react. Here we need leadership and I submit, sir, that this leadership must come from the provincial government, not from the individual municipality.

The fourth item on the agenda is the matter covered so ably recently by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis). It is the retraining of the members of our work force who are going to be displaced suddenly and in very large numbers by the full impact of automation. The spectre of automation has been brought up before under the estimates of Labour and University Affairs, and I expect it will be brought up again under Education, but I believe it will have such a profound impact upon our economic growth that it must be a matter for considerable concern by this department. One of the main difficulties seems to be to convince the leaders and the public that this problem is imminent. It is not something that can be shoved aside for further study. The problem is not one of limitation of the total number of jobs to be available. It is rather one of training our workers to fit the new jobs that will be created. Here again is where real leadership is needed to forestall the economic and social disorders that traditionally accompany dramatic and sudden changes in employment opportunities.

Fifth, and here we are concerned with the lifeblood of a sparsely populated yet industrialized society such as ours, we must substantially increase our exports. We must accomplish this to provide full employment, to improve our balance of payments and to ensure a high enough base for our industrial production, to assure competitive production costs and from there full employment. It might be urged that such problems as balance of payments and exports properly belong in the federal sphere. However, to this the answer is plain. Ontario provides such a large percentage of both Canadian production and consumption that as Ontario goes in this area so goes our nation.

These five items, Mr. Chairman—economic planning, regional development, housing and urban renewal, training and retraining, and our international competitive standing—seem to me to be of the highest importance to the department and to the hon. Minister. All of these problems should claim the full attention and support of this government.

In dealing with the estimates tonight, I propose to dwell in detail only on the matters of regional development and of exports. Not that the other subjects are of any lesser importance but they will be examined thoroughly by my hon. colleagues and myself a little later in the debate.

We have all been awaiting with the greatest degree of interest the speech by the hon. Minister as to the part which his ministry will play in the development of the province. There has been the conference on regional development which the hon. Minister was courageous enough to call even though some of the shortcomings of his department would be exposed and criticized. This conference showed the widespread concern in many countries with the question of economic development in a regional context: the many different ways that were being explored for solving the problems that came from urban overcrowding and rural depopulation; the need for taking a long-range view of future developments so that these problems could be anticipated and averted by intelligent action; the necessity of leadership from a central government in the form of plans, policies, administrative action and financial provisions; and above all, the long-delayed recognition that the growth and prosperity of a larger region is dependent on similar progress in all the smaller areas that make it up, and will be stronger and more effective if the particular resources of these smaller areas are utilized to the best advantage and if all the people have an opportunity to use their talents and their skills.

We have had indications that there might be beginnings of a new and rational approach to the internal development of Ontario. The report from the select committee on The Municipal Act indicates that the scale and scope of local governments' responsibilities are inadequate for the needs of today. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs stated a short time ago that circumstances were such as to make it desirable for study of development in certain areas to be made in a wider framework than that offered by traditional local government boundaries.

These and other indications gave us some expectation that tonight we would have a statement of policy from the hon. Minister regarding his government's programme for the internal economic development of the province. And what have we heard? The statement, sir, that gives some recognition to the questions that are exercising everyone's concern at the moment: a shifting of the regional development division into the office of the chief economist; a proposal for some minor adjustment to the previous way of doing things; but a statement that fails to specify government policy clearly or to lay out a real long-term programme, a programme that tries to substitute a series of palliatives for past ills rather than a programme geared to the requirements of the future.

Of course, the hon. Minister is not solely to blame for the failure to produce the policies and the programme that the province needs, although his must be the prime responsibility since his department is, after all, The Department of Economics and Development for the province. The fault lies, I think, after all, with the government as a whole, since it has never recognized its duty to consider all aspects of the economic development of Ontario. It has not appreciated the functions that a government must discharge if development is to be brought about in a coherent fashion to benefit all the people of the province.

At the conference on regional development, we have seen and heard discussed the ramshackle pattern of duplication of agencies among different departments and the multiplicity of overlapping regional organizations that exist, and I do not propose to cover that ground again. However, I wish to stress the wastefulness of such lack of co-ordination, of such lack of common policy, the delays, the frustrations and the extra costs of administration which mean that taxpayers are being burdened needlessly because of basic government inefficiency. And furthermore, there are added costs that arise from opportunities lost and from under-utilization of resources and of the talents of our people in Ontario because, again, of the lack of coherent government policies. The Department of Economics and Development which should be the co-ordinator and the mainspring of all government action in the economic field has been merely one other government department among all the others. It was to meet these needs and to correct these shortcomings that our party has suggested that there be integrated administration within and between departments. It was to permit economic-policy-making at the highest level that we recommended that there be a Cabinet economic committee, that the Ontario economic council have its functions recast and be enlarged and strengthened and that an Ontario bureau of statistics be set up to co-ordinate the gathering of economic data in this province.

Nothing less than a complete rethinking of our approach and a total reorganization of our methods is necessary if we are to meet the challenges that face us; and if we are to provide the best economic environment for the people of Ontario. I do not propose to cover the report of the economic council of Canada which we have referred to previously. I would point out, though, that if maximum productivity is desirable for economic betterment as the council suggests and with which we would all agree, productivity improvements should not be confined to business activity alone. It is at least equally important that the government should improve the efficiency of its performance and that of its agencies. It is ironic but it is happening, that the welfare of the people and the businessmen of Ontario is being hampered by poor performance of its functions by government.

I would also point out the clear recognition by the council in its report that, in our modern society, governments have functions to perform far beyond what they are now doing in the fields of education, health, communications, utilities, labour training, resources and labour mobility—the whole area of productive social capital which only they are capable of performing.

Government responsibility is wider than that of providing minimum services and following along behind the pace of developments, patching here and correcting there, responding to circumstances rather than anticipating them. One would hesitate to labour this point except for the suspicion that hon. members opposite have not even yet taken to heart the words of the hon. Minister's predecessor in 1961 when he said:

In the past, governments have been content to provide essential services to industry and to promote an environment suitable to growth. Today government must more actively promote growth.

That means conscious, deliberate action by the government and its agencies to ensure the fullest utilization of the potential of Ontario. It means policies regarding natural resources development to speed growth in northern Ontario. For business it means the provision of adequate and efficient services and facilities under policies that are clearly stated so that the business community will know where it stands and may be able to plan ahead over a long period. For people it means the opportunity to utilize fully their ability and to lead a fuller life. For all in Ontario it means government action to ensure that, as our numbers increase greatly in the future, there will be adequate recreational space, clean water for industrial and personal use, well-planned urban communities and dispersed industrial locations, so that overcrowding in one area will not be accompanied by the running down and emptying of others.

For instance, does the government have even the beginnings of an overall policy on land use for industrial, agricultural, residential, tourist and resort purposes? Has the government made any assessment of the cost and availability of services with regard to industrial location, including the cost of power, gas, water and transportation? In what way is policy in these fields related to programmes for education, not only in terms of universities, community colleges, high schools and public schools, but with regard to technical schools, trade training centres and agricultural colleges? Is it not that the government is following, rather than anticipating, future requirements for housing, hospitals and medical centres?

To pose these questions is not to suggest that they are the only ones that need to be asked, nor that answers will ever be available in full and final form, even after the most intensive study, but it is our view that it is with matters like these that this government should be concerned, if it is to play an active and responsible part in the future development of Ontario.

Public funds are a large component of total expenditures in these fields of social capital and it seems to me only reasonable, and taxpayers have a right to expect, that these funds be committed intelligently on the basis of requirements as they are likely to be in the future and in advance of costly expenditures to cope with emergency situations which have been allowed to develop through the lack of forethought.

Businesses nowadays are accustomed to taking a long view forward before they commit large quantities of capital, taking into account as many future developments as can be foreseen with any degree of confidence.

Obviously, a government should do likewise and should assess, as far as can be foreseen, the trend of developments in the future so that it can plan its activities accordingly. However, this assessment will be inadequate if carried out only by the provincial government without close consultation with the people in the different regions of the province.

First, people living and working in a region usually have a livelier and more immediate appreciation of their circumstances, of the things they think should be done to develop their region, than those who are not so close to the local scene. Secondly, things imposed from outside a region without regional support are going to have little likelihood of permanent success.

Provincial policies, then, need to be broad in their terms to provide a framework within which regions can proceed in accord with their own particular circumstances. At the same time, once experience has been gained, there will be important benefits to the provincial government from the experience of these regions. Development will rapidly become a co-operative venture between the regions and the province.

What is required initially, however, is real leadership from the provincial government and it is idle for the hon. Minister to suggest that any announcements so far have given that leadership. We have proposed that there should be a municipal and regional development committee at Cabinet level. There will need to be commissions to examine the patchwork of regional and administrative regions that have sprung up as a result of the activities of the various government departments, unrelated to each other or to any particular programme. There will need to be an eventual realignment of regional boundaries for the regional development programme and these and other basic decisions cannot be made without prior study and consideration.

For regional development to be effective, some form of regional government will be necessary with broad powers. In my view the relatively restricted powers for regional governments contemplated by the select committee on The Municipal Act are inadequate if most benefit is to be derived from this new organization. Functions relating to assessment, taxation, arterial roads, public health, hospitals, welfare and policing, are, so to speak, administrative functions. The planning function which the select committee proposes for regional government contemplates planning activities with regard to the provision of services and basic utilities, but a regional government concerned with wider questions of economic development would require more extensive planning responsibilities in order to be effective.

I consider that the tasks and needs of regional developments are far beyond the scope of the regional development associations, no matter to what extent these might be strengthened. In the past they have been, by and large, ineffective, due to lack of basic support from the provincial government, which gave no indication at any time that it really expected them to be agencies for major improvement and change. Financial contributions have been meagre in relation to the amounts needed for the job to be done properly. Moreover, membership by municipalities was permissive only, with the result that there has not been continuity of local support. The energies of officers of the association have been devoted largely to just keeping the association in being; they have not had sufficient time to do their real jobs.

Another shortcoming was that they had no real role to play. They would often be bypassed and local people would make a direct approach to the various government ministries.

Perhaps as an interim measure the associations should be provided with more adequate funds, entirely from the provincial Treasury so that they could be sure of continuity of their work in these regions. However, I would not regard that as being a feasible long-term solution for the problem. Rather it would seem that there is need for some form of regional administration that would not only be representative of the region but would have the direct involvement of provincial government personnel as well. The function of this body would be to coordinate and stimulate efforts within the region to advance the region's development, and to serve as a two-way channel of communication with the provincial government, both in terms of regional proposals and in relation to provincial government policy and/or decisions.

Accompanying this type of administration, there could be decentralization of certain provincial government departments to these regions, thus providing the service and commercial jobs which would do as much to stimulate activity in a region as would a manufacturing industry. The seat of the regional governments could be in selected growth areas, the development of which, with all the necessary services, could give a real impetus to industrial development in a region, as the proceedings of the recent conference made very clear.

Obviously the form of such a regional administration requires careful assessment and such major changes in our government system cannot be brought about overnight. The experience of other countries and other provinces will be relevant but we will need to develop something that is particularly suited to our own requirements.

The important point, however, is that something needs to be done now if we are to adjust our government structure to the age in which we are living, if we are to overcome past deficiencies, and if we are to take best advantage of the opportunities for our people that will present themselves in the future.

Let me mention, too, that our concern not only should be for the outlying regions. We sometimes tend, when speaking about regional development, to think only of the rural areas of Ontario. But the problems of urban sprawl and congestion are but the other side of the same coin and these problems are going to get worse as our population grows and the whole area of the Golden Horseshoe becomes one vast built-up area. There is, however, the opportunity to improve the quality of our urban as well as our rural life, if we are willing to make use of our intelligence to programme our economic development in the way that suits us best.

Finally, this suggested course of action will not necessarily be costly or uneconomic in the sense of promoting unproductive development. Indeed, costs may well be less, provided we use our total available resources more efficiently. If congestion and high costs of suburban sewage, power and highway facilities in Metro Toronto are lessened, as an example, because there is some stabilization in the rate of metropolitan expansion, those in the cities will benefit. If houses, schools, sewage plants and highways are built in other regions, because of expanding activity and population, they will likely be built at less cost than similar facilities that would otherwise have been constructed in the more crowded areas.

Moreover, a more widely spread programme of regional development, by stimulating employment and the use of regional resources, will relieve some of the distress that exists in these regions at the present time, distress that is now only relieved through various forms of welfare assistance. The costs of these welfare programmes are an indication of the under-utilization of our human and material resources that is occurring at the present time, not to speak of the hardship to individuals and the opportunities lost.

Through a progressive programme of economic development, the need for supporting individuals could be greatly reduced, with savings in costs, improvements in efficiency, and most important of all, a real gain in personal opportunity in the ability to lead the good life for the people of Ontario.

I would now like to turn to discussion of the need to increase our exports. I was most interested to hear the hon. Minister's plans for the extension of our export efforts to the United States. We agree, of course, that the United States is, and will continue to be, far and away the best potential customer in the future for our export goods. Our greatest efforts toward expansion should undoubtedly be made in that direction.

We also agree that our efforts should be focused on areas where the greatest results are likely to accrue. The hon. Minister has drawn a rough line around an area containing about 88 million people in the northern part of the United States, fairly close to our borders, upon which it is logical for us to concentrate our maximum efforts. But it seems to me the success of plans for developing our export trade in this area will depend on the type of effort made. Sales missions and participation in trade shows and exhibitions are good, and these opportunities should be used to the full. Prospective customers may well come and see—and, we hope, buy—our products. But no matter how nicely these items may be displayed, let us be sure we place sufficient emphasis on selling what these customers need and want to buy. We should make our products and our promotion of them fit the market we are trying to sell.

For example, a company contemplating introduction of a new product does a vast amount of leg work and research. A soap company would never make the mistake of marketing a soft-water soap in a hard-water community, or a wrong-sized bar or package out of tune with public demand, or an unattractive wrapper. This is all market researched beforehand in the greatest of detail. What follows then, is the placing on sale of the product in a test area, in conjunction with local advertising promotion. After this, one area after another is opened up until national distribution is obtained.

If the product had been put on sale over a wide area at the beginning, with large expenditures and production, advertising and promotion, without proper research and study, there would have been a great deal of money wasted, had the product not clicked. Also, assuming the product was a good one, if inadequate advertising and promotional dollars were spread too thinly over a wide area, the product still might not succeed, because it would not have become sufficiently well known.

I know the hon. Minister has had considerable experience with such things in private business, but I think it is worthwhile emphasizing that many of these very factors that apply to promoting a product domestically, are applicable when considering the expansion of our export trade, only sometimes on a much larger scale, especially to such a sophisticated market as that of the United States. Here is where the government can assist our industries, by providing vital background material and market research. Let us not have a shotgun approach to this market of 88 million people. Let us narrow our sights to the market available. Let this government help industry in determining the likes and dislikes in establishing the true potentialities of this market. Then let our aim be to help industry promote sales on a sufficiently concentrated basis so that our effort is not scattered or wasted over a broad area. If it is common good sense and practice to do this in a country of 19 million people, is it not even more important when considering expansion in a foreign market of more than four times that number?

But there is another consideration. It has been pointed out that some U.S. buyers report that Canadian goods are not sufficiently different or unique. The hon. Minister mentioned some time ago that as a result of these reports special efforts were going to be made to emphasize the different and the special. If the United States likes our colourful and uniquely styled sportswear and equipment, all to the good. Let us support such sales and let us see that there are more situations such as this.

But in addition to this market for the different and the new, let us not forget there is a very wide range of products that are pretty standard to both countries: pens, pencils, nuts, bolts and so on. The buyers of such items look first to a basic standard of quality and then to cost. Other things being equal, they buy on cost. It is my contention that this very large segment of possible trade with the United States should not be lost sight of, because future developments will make it possible for us to enter this market if we are prepared.

Our production at the present depends on local consumption. Our present markets are thus small compared to U.S. standards and unit costs are high because they do not benefit from the advantages of large-scale production and long production runs. But could we not seek out other export markets in the need of such products as we now manufacture? Combined with our own requirements, total sales would then justify extension of the assembly line and the lowering of unit costs. Not only is this an important objective in itself at the present time, but it is doubly important in reference to the future if further agreements are arrived at, similar to the present arrangement with the automobile industry. The logical trend is to a more open-door tariff policy between the United States and Canada. We need to be prepared.

In this regard I submit as one case in point that the West Indies offers definite possibilities for export development, that we have been neglecting this market and losing the chance for such development, not only for the present time but over the long-term period. In short, in this area we are missing the boat altogether. Here is a grouping of islands that differ in some respects. Jamaica and Trinidad are sovereign countries, whereas Barbados is not, but they all share important assets and characteristics which make them a natural market for us. The basic language of the islands is our language. The West Indies enjoy political and economic stability. They have good shipping facilities and are certainly very accessible from our point of view. They have a wonderful climate which is the reason for the very large and rapidly expanding tourist trade. They are making concerted efforts to expand their secondary industries and these efforts are paying off.

Canada presently enjoys some very concrete tariff preferences. Canada's relations to the West Indies were close even before Confederation. In the 1880s it was suggested in both Barbados and Jamaica that they become Canadian provinces. The exchange of sugar, rum, molasses for lumber, fish and flour has been traditional and continues to the present day. A good portion of their expanding tourist industry consists of Canadians. Canadian banks and insurance companies have had offices in the islands for years. McGill University has a research institute in Barbados. Canada has provided two passenger cargo ships which are now the only means of inter-island service. Likewise the Dominion government has once again provided funds for an aid programme totalling $10 million for this year.

In light of what has been said, let us take a brief look at the trade picture. As of old, Canada has had an unfavourable balance of trade with the West Indies for many years. In 1963, imports from the three main islands to Canada totalled $74 million, whereas our exports amounted to only $50 million. Canada's share of the combined West Indies market dropped from 38 per cent in 1945 to about 15 per cent in 1949. There was some excuse for this since trade was channelled during the war and there were restrictions and limitations during the years of federation. But Canada's share has continued to drop despite the removal of restrictions on imports from non-sterling countries.

In 1963 Canada's share of the combined Trinidad, Jamaica and Barbados market amounted to less than eight per cent, placing Canada a poor third to the United Kingdom and the United States. During the post-war period when the total market provided by these three West Indian islands has increased six times, Canada's exports to them have increased only by about 20 per cent. To give some idea of the overall potential, Jamaica alone imported $242 million worth of goods in 1963.

Now, from the point of view of this province, an analysis of Canadian exports to the West Indies continues to show a large percentage of fish, forest and primary agricultural products, principally flour. We have traditionally supplied these commodities. However, an increase in quantity of a wide range of manufactured goods, passenger cars, tires, medicinal and pharmaceutical products, refrigerators and television sets, is appearing on their list of imports, but the market for these products is much broader than the present increase indicates. It is in this area that we appear to be falling behind. Here is where we can very materially increase our volume with proper initiative and effort.

The trade pattern of the West Indies has changed but we have not yet seen the significance of the change or adapted ourselves to it. The tourist industry in this area, while booming, is really still in its infancy, yet even now a broad range of products that Ontario produces are being imported from elsewhere for this tourist industry's needs.

It is true that every effort is being made in the West Indies to foster the building of secondary industry. Here again is an opening for our suppliers as we shall see, but secondary industry will never be able to fill the great and ever-growing need for the variety of products required by the tourist industry of these islands. The expansion of the tourist industry itself puts a definite limit on the amount of secondary industry that the islands can possibly develop.

Not only do we have a potential expansion of our trade based on the very firm foundation of this tourist industry, but there is also the whole field of current development programmes with rich present and future possibilities to consider. The Jamaican government alone has a $275 million five-year development programme under way and just ending its second year. Allocation of these funds include:

(a) Agriculture—$52.2 million on development, rehabilitation, farm holdings, farm machinery and tools, demonstrations, marketing programmes.

(b) Construction—$150 million on roads, schools, housing and hospitals.

(c) Water supplies—$29.4 million on a large irrigation programme, watershed development, a 9.7 million gallon/day dam, deep well grants.

Are there not opportunities within the framework of such a programme for Ontario exports? And this programme covers only Jamaica. It is only one of many that we shall see put into operation in the West Indies in the near future.

Again I say, Mr. Chairman, an increase in our export trade is vital to Canada and to this province. It would help us obtain most of our economic and social objectives such as:

1. To enlarge our secondary industry and thus increase our standard of living.

2. To keep our work force gainfully employed in a diversified range of activities.

3. To eliminate pockets of unemployment and marginal development areas.

4. To be ready to face changing patterns of trade especially in regard to the United States.

5. To correct our imbalance of trade with the United States.

The drive to industrialize is general throughout the world today. More nations than ever before are making concerted efforts in this direction. The competition for markets is growing keener year by year. This makes it absolutely imperative that we be aware of developments and keenly alert to take advantage of every favourable situation that presents itself.

Government assistance and helping industry establish new markets is common in all trading nations today. Situations have become so complex and so costly that no one industry can do an adequate job by itself. So let this government assume an all-out aggressive approach to our export trade problems. Let nothing that could be done be left undone.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to stress again that in the five areas that I have covered tonight the department has the clear responsibility of providing not only assistance but leadership.

In fairness to the hon. Minister I should say that these objectives can be accomplished only through the proper recognition by the Cabinet of the importance of the department's true role in the future of our province.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the comments of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development made this afternoon, at the outset of his remarks, with regard to the federal Budget that was brought down last night in the House of Commons.

I noticed, Mr. Chairman, that he took a somewhat more pessimistic view of the growth potential for the Canadian economy in the current year than the hon. Minister of Finance at Ottawa. It is possible that the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, not having in mind an election this year, is in a position to be a little more honest than the Minister of Finance, or it may be that his advisors take a somewhat more jaundiced view of things. At any rate, his estimate, I take it, is somewhat lower than that of the Minister of Finance.

I was also interested in his comments on the decrease in income tax which is to become effective on July 1 of this year. I think the hon. Minister made a valid point when he called attention to the fact that that is really only a temporary decrease. It may indeed be a decrease just to tide the party in power over an election. But we all know that, effective January 1 of next year, there will be an increase in taxation in the form of contributions under the Canada pension plan. The hon. Minister of Economics and Development in this House quite rightly pointed out that at that time the increase in purchasing power that will come from the decrease in the income tax will be more than offset by the withdrawal of money from the public through the levies under the Canada pension plan.

I think that is a point that should not be forgotten. I am inclined to share the fears of the hon. Minister in this House that actually, when you put the two together, the taxation policy may not be sufficient or may not stimulate sufficient aggregate demand to maintain economic activity at a high level. That, however, is a matter upon which we can only speculate; the events in time will speak for themselves.

There is another angle of this tax decrease, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister did not call attention to and which I think is perhaps even more important than the point he made. When we take the tax decrease in relation to the levies under the Canada pension plan, which are to come into effect on January 1, there is a quite significant shift in the incidence of taxation, and in my opinion one that is not desirable. I tried to indicate to the House on a previous occasion that the levies under the Canada pension plan are inherently regressive in their effect for all but the people at the very lowest income levels. The reason for this is, of course, that those levies can be charged against taxable income when the taxpayer is drawing up his income tax so that those getting large incomes will receive a greater reduction in taxation as a result. Thus, if we take not just the gross premiums paid under the Canada pension plan but the net premiums, that is, if we take account of the offset against taxable income, we find that from approximately the $5,000 income level up, the actual contributions under the Canada pension plan decline. I will not go into the details of that again. I tried to outline them once before in this House. They are rather complicated but I think any people who have studied the matter will agree that what I have said is true.

Now we have another factor entering into the situation: That is a flat across-the-board reduction of 10 per cent in income tax up to a limit, I think it is, of $600 per year. That is the limit of the decrease that can be obtained under this new provision. When we relate that to the net contributions under The Canada Pension Act, we find what I consider to be a rather disturbing picture. You see, as of January 1 everybody will still have a 10 per cent decrease in his income tax but then there will be Canada pension plan contributions at different levels. When we offset the one against the other, we find that the net effect will be that, taking as an example a family of four, a married taxpayer with two dependent children will on balance suffer an increase of $33 per year in his tax levies. He will get a reduction in his income tax, a very small reduction, but that will be more than offset to the tune of $33 per year by the net contributions he has to make under the Canada pension plan. You may say it is peculiar that it is exactly $33 a year for all in the family situation that I mentioned, whose incomes are between $3,000 and $5,000 a year, but I have worked this phase out fairly carefully and as far as I can see that is how it is. It is a coincidence but that is how it works out. Any married taxpayer with two dependent children whose income is anywhere between $3,000 and $5,000 a year will, as of January 1, 1966, pay $33 per year more in tax levies than he will pay up until July 1 of this year.

We now move above the $5,000 level. We find that the increase in total taxation, taking into account all the factors involved, will steadily go down from $33 to zero. The break-even point will be reached—I have not had time to work this out exactly—but it will be somewhere in the $6,000-$7,000 range. Somewhere in that range the taxpayer will break exactly even. His Canada pension plan contribution will be exactly offset by the reduction he enjoys in his income tax. Then beyond that income level, the taxpayer will enjoy an absolute decrease in the taxes he pays, taking everything into account. So at the $10,000 level—and again I am taking it on the basis of a married taxpayer with two dependent children—his net decrease in total taxation will be about $75 per year. And then at the $20,000 level—I have not got this exact, but it is close enough—his reduction in taxes in total will be about $450 per year. Thus, taking the situation, which is the true situation as it will exist after January 1 of next year, the poor little taxpayer who makes $3,000 to $5,000 a year will have his taxes increased by $33 a year, but the fellow making $20,000 a year will find that his net taxes are down by $450 a year.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Liberals are still more Tory than the Tories.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Think of the benefit.

Mr. Bryden: Well, they are all getting the same benefit, there is no getting around that.

We hear a great deal these days about the need to take action against poverty. Some of us in this group have been calling attention to this problem for a long time. We are happy to note that even some of the reactionaries in the country now find it necessary at least to pay lip service to the concept. Indeed, the Prime Minister of Canada not long ago, in a strikingly original phrase, indicated that he was going to engage in a war on poverty.

The hon. Minister of Economics and Development this afternoon also made a number of references—and, I thought, meaningful references—to the need to tackle the question of poverty.

But the situation we find at the federal level, Mr. Chairman, and I am afraid that it is much the same at the provincial level, is that there is talk about it but precious little action. Indeed, the current situation at the federal level is this: The poor and the relatively poor have received a pat on the head from Mr. Pearson and a punch in the nose from Mr. Gordon; their taxes are up and the taxes of the rich are down. This is the war on poverty, apparently. But Mr. Gordon does not just come right out and punch them on the nose and be done with it. Oh no, he sneaks up on them. For six months, between July 1 and December 31 of this year, he will lead them to believe that they have got a reduction in taxes. This no doubt will be long enough to get over the election.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Why does the hon. member not let Tommy Douglas handle things? He will look after it.

Mr. MacDonald: What are you worried about? Do you not enjoy this?

Mr. Whicher: You do not even run anybody against me.

Mr. MacDonald: You are not going to run yourself, so what are you worried about? You are getting out.

Mr. Whicher: I will never get out if one of your party will run.

Mr. Bryden: So, for long enough to get past the election, the little fellow will be given the illusion that he is getting a reduction in taxes, and then on January 1 of next year, bang, he will get it on the nose. This is the war on poverty.

Turning now to the more substantive parts of the hon. Minister's presentation this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate him on a long speech, but a very enlightening and well prepared one. I was particularly interested in the excellent piece of economic analysis that formed the earlier part of his speech. I think it was a useful contribution to the debates of this House. Somebody said "but"—I think the hon. member for Bruce. He wants me to say "but" so I will say "but." The "but" is obvious—

Mr. Whicher: You will end up somewhere on your "butt."

Mr. Bryden: There is very little indication of any policy that flows coherently out of the analysis that the hon. Minister presented. This is something I may get to a little later. Before I do that, however, I will say that I was happy to note that the hon. Minister appears to have read and digested the recent review of the economic council of Canada. This, Mr. Chairman, is in startling contrast with the hon. Provincial Treasurer who presented a Budget to this House in exactly the same form as almost every budget that I can remember, and who did not give any evidence from start to finish in that Budget that he had even heard of that highly important document that was issued early this year by the economic council of Canada.

I am glad that it has penetrated somewhere into the crania or the collective cranium of the Cabinet. I hope it will filter around and all Ministers will begin to hear about it. Perhaps we might even have budgets in future years that are presented in relation to the type of economic analysis that is contained in that report—budgets that take into account, as the hon. Minister of Economics and Development tried to do this afternoon, the clear and vital challenges that the economic council of Canada has placed before the people of Canada in terms of what they should be able to achieve if they use their resources efficiently and well between now and 1970. The hon. Minister recognized that the objectives set by the economic council will not be easy to achieve, but the fact remains that economic analysis indicates that they are possible of achievement. Indeed, it is absolutely essential that we achieve them if we are not to be faced with mass unemployment by 1970.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, it is hard to see exactly how the hon. Minister plans to do his part as the responsible Minister in this jurisdiction to help to achieve those objectives. He had many fine phrases, optimistic comments and exhortations throughout his speech; but when I read between the lines and cut through the verbiage and rhetoric, it struck me that he was licked before he started.

For example, in setting economic objectives for Ontario—and I think that is a desirable thing to do in terms of the overall objectives set by the economic council of Canada—he set as our objective a growth rate in real dollars of 5.5 per cent per annum. Now, this is the growth rate that the economic council of Canada said was essential for the whole of the country.

I am going to put it to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development that, if Canada as a whole is to achieve a growth rate of 5.5 per cent, then surely Ontario, the most heavily industrialized province in Canada, has to do better. There are certainly some areas much less fortunately blessed in terms of resources and economic development than this province that will not achieve that objective in all probability. If the country as a whole is to achieve the average, surely we have to do better than the average over the next five years. If I am wrong in that, I would like to hear the hon. Minister's explanation at some proper time, but I think he has envisaged a growth rate that is really not realistic in terms of the clear needs and challenges posed by the economic council of Canada.

The hon. Minister further stated that he estimates that the rate of growth in terms of real dollars for the current year in Ontario will only be about four per cent. Now, I hope I heard his figure wrong. At least I had hoped when I was listening to him that I had heard it wrong, but I have since had a chance to get a copy of his speech and I think his speech confirms what I thought I heard. That is what he forecasts for this year.

That is not a very good start on the limited objective, the inadequate objective of an average rate of growth between now and 1970, of 5.5 per cent. It is true, as the hon. Minister said, that if we average last year and this year, we are probably somewhere around 5.5 per cent or even a little better, but last year was an exceptionally good year. We cannot expect that kind of good year every year, or every second year; certainly not unless we are prepared to get in there and do something about it. We will not get it simply by waiting for it.

The hon. Minister has engaged in a good deal of analysis of the growth potential of the Ontario economy. He has noted that factors favourable for growth exist, but they are not necessarily going to become operative unless there are policies that make them operative. I personally do not regard with the same degree of optimism as he does the fact that we can achieve our 5.5 per cent objective only by averaging last year with this year. After all, when you get right down to it, what he is talking about is a situation in which the rate of growth has declined. The average over two years may be what he considers to be a desirable level, but it is down from last year. That would seem to me to be a matter that ought to cause the government more concern than apparently it has up until now.

The hon. Minister's department has also engaged in a useful exercise, in trying to break down the overall growth objective in terms of targets for specific industries. I would say that that sort of statistical analysis, at which his department is becoming so expert, is the necessary first step in achieving our objectives in terms of growth. We are not going to achieve anything if we merely express our aim in terms of a global figure. We have to break it down into specifics to find out exactly where we can achieve the sort of growth that will produce the overall average we are seeking. So therefore, this is an essential first step, but surely, Mr. Chairman, it is nothing but a first step. We are not going to get economic growth just by saying that industry A has to achieve 7.8 per cent to offset industry B which will probably only be able to achieve 2.6 per cent, or something like that. That is necessary information, but merely publishing that information is not going to produce anything, except a certain amount of interest in academic circles and elsewhere.

The big question with which, I would submit, the hon. Minister never really did come to grips in all his lengthy presentation, is exactly how these specific growth rates are going to be achieved. I would have thought that this would be a function for the Ontario economic council, as an advisor to the Cabinet no doubt, but not only as an advisor, but as an intermediary between the Cabinet and industry. As far as I have been able to determine, this is one function that the economic council of Ontario has never thought of. In fact, I often wonder what it does exist for. It was set up a few years ago by the impulsive Mr. Macaulay, who had a great habit of hatching chickens all over the place and then leaving them to fend for themselves. I do not know if he had in mind what function the Ontario economic council was to perform, but if he had anything definite in mind, it is clear that the council itself has never received that information. It is a body that, as far as I can see, hops around from one project to another, never getting down to business on anything, and never making up its mind what it is there for anyway.

Take the annual report of the department, the Ontario Industrial Review. The economic council merits only one page in this report, which is about 100 pages long, or something in that magnitude, and one-fifth of that page is taken up with the following, which I will read:

The Ontario economic council is interested in the further development of the souvenir industry in the province. Discussions have taken place—

Incidentally, I think this is word for word from the previous report, but I have not had time to verify it:

Discussions have taken place with the purchasing officers of the Niagara and St. Lawrence parks commissions with a view to encouraging expansion in their domestic souvenir purchasing. The council has circularized 168 Ontario souvenir manufacturers suggesting that they advise these parks commissions of their present product line and future plans. As a result, a number of the companies have received orders for the first time from one or both of these commissions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that is the type of activity that is designed to stimulate achievement by industries in this province, of the targets the hon. Minister's department say are necessary, then I must say that many people in this world have been gravely misled. I take it that the souvenir industry is going to hit its target 100 per cent. I do not know how this will affect the overall average, but I do not think it will bring it up by very much. Yet this is the sort of trivia with which the Ontario economic council concerns itself.

Now, I am not suggesting that the project is not a worthy one in its minor way, but surely it is something that a junior officer in one of the line branches of the hon. Minister's department could have worked out without the economic council concerning itself with it, like a pile driver cracking nuts. It carries on a few research projects, no programme of research, but a project here and a project there. Rather, it does not really carry them on; it sponsors them, and then it takes credit also, I notice from the annual report and from the hon. Minister's speech, for projects that other people sponsor. Most of the projects concerned could be much better done by the branch and sections under the direction of the provincial economist. That branch as it has existed in the past has done excellent research and statistical work. I am sure that it could either carry out or sponsor whatever research projects may be necessary. Let the economic council look to it for research service, but let it get on with other jobs.

Then the council also sponsors conferences and gabfests and one thing and another, here, there and everywhere. None of them really related to the others—just a project here and a project there—anything apparently that comes into the council's head. What the results are, nobody ever knows, because nobody ever finds out what goes on, unless he has nothing better to do than to attend. What purpose is there in an agency like that, Mr. Chairman? Yet I would suggest that this council could perform a vital function in the very area on which the hon. Minister was so vague, and that is the area of trying to ensure that the specific industry targets will be achieved.

After all, as I recall it when it was set up, this is supposed to be a council representative of industry, labour, agriculture, I believe, and perhaps some other groups in the community. It is a sort of a microcosm of the economic life of the community. These are people who are familiar with industrial life in the province in its various manifestations, who can perform an important role in assisting the government to develop in private industry the kind of policies that will achieve the targets the hon. Minister talked about in the breakdown he presented to us, of the total growth figure he has as an overall objective.

Why should the economic council not be regarded as the body that sits down, satisfies itself that these specific targets are reasonable and then goes out and works with management and labour in the industries concerned, and with other interested groups, to try to see what they think about the proposed targets? It can modify the figures if necessary, if the industry concerned does not regard the targets as satisfactory. Let us get targets that have been accepted by industry and let us develop a spirit whereby management and labour and other groups will co-operate in achieving these targets, under the general sponsorship of the government.

It would make some sort of sense if the hon. Minister had said that the economic council was engaged in a programme of that kind. I would feel hopeful that we would indeed have a chance of achieving the targets he is talking about.

As far as research is concerned, let it use the research facilities that are already available and staffed with well qualified people. Perhaps there are not enough of them, as the hon. Minister said, but at any rate there is a good nucleus to provide research studies directly, or to sponsor and supervise studies by others, where they themselves cannot undertake them, and to integrate them with the overall research programme. That would make some sense. As it is, the economic council is a sort of a half-baked research agency and a half-baked sponsor of conferences and bull sessions. It really has no function at all. It might as well be abolished as it exists at present.

Now, the hon. Minister has—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member has come to a break in his address, I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will deal with the second readings on the order paper, the government's second readings, and return to these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.35 o'clock, p.m.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Wednesday, April 28, 1965

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Wednesday, April 28, 1965

Highway Traffic Act, bill to amend, Mr. Haskett, first reading	2341
Power Commission Act, bill to amend, Mr. Simonett, first reading	2341
Fire Marshals Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2341
Justices of the Peace Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, first reading	2341
General Sessions Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2342
Registry Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2342
Land Titles Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2342
Partnerships Registration Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2342
Limited Partnerships Act, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	2342
Planning Act, bill to amend, Mr. Spooner, second reading	2342
Ontario Municipal Board Act, bill to amend, Mr. Spooner, second reading	2343
Ontario Housing Corporation Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Randall, second reading	2343
Sheridan Park Corporation Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Randall, second reading	2343
Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964, bill to amend, Mr. Simonett, second reading	2343
Mental Hospitals Act, bill to amend, Mr. Dymond, second reading	2343
Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-1961, bill to amend, Mr. Dymond, second reading	2343
Pharmacy Act, bill to amend, Mr. Dymond, second reading	2343
Establishment and operation of the centennial centre of science and technology, bill to provide for, Mr. Auld, second reading	2343
Estimates, Department of Economics and Development, Mr. Randall, continued	2343
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Rowntree, agreed to	2372
Appendix	2373

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome as guests, in the west gallery, the Catholic women's league of St. Gregory's Church, Islington.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, changes are made regularly to The Highway Traffic Act and the bill today is of the usual nature, including an assortment of items.

Specifically the bill deals with such matters as: Transferring powers of suspension under section 25 from the Minister to the registrar of motor vehicles and setting up an appeal board to hear appeals from such suspensions; upgrading the necessity of having lamps lit to include times when atmospheric conditions are unfavourable; requiring lamps on both sides of the rear of vehicles; defining stopping and standing of vehicles; giving precedence to repayment of moneys to The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund over judgments in the hands of insurers, and increasing the maximum penalty for defacing or manipulating number plates.

THE POWER COMMISSION ACT

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Power Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of these amendments is to broaden the types of investments that may be purchased by the commission and to provide the commission, through order-in-council, with the necessary authority to issue on a regular basis short-term securities for the purpose of facilitating debt management.

Section 3 of the bill is to do with the pension and insurance fund of Ontario Hydro.

Section 6 of the bill introduces new section 58a into the Act and is related to business operations.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, an Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the amendment simply repeals one subsection of the Act and that has been taken care of in legislation now contained in The Emergency Measures Act.

THE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Justices of the Peace Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The purpose of the bill, Mr. Speaker, is to provide that The Labour Relations Act shall not apply to full-time justices of the peace.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts), notice of which has been given him.

Would the hon. Minister explain why Ian Malcolm Goldby, a graduate of the Ontario forest ranger school, who became an employee of The Department of Lands and Forests on January 4, 1965, is still not on the payroll of the department, and are the other graduates of the Ontario forest ranger school who also became employees of The Department of Lands and Forests in January, 1965, on the payroll of the department?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I would say in reply that Mr. Goldby was selected from the 1964 graduating class of the Ontario forest ranger school by the district forester at Kapuskasing and started work on January 4, 1965. He has been advanced 90 per cent of his salary, pending completion of appointment details—classification and matters of that sort which will not in any way affect his position. If he gets the proper classification, he will get his pay as from January 4, and it is my understanding that he is being classified as forestry technician, number 1.

With regard to others, the forestry school takes students each year for so many months and when they leave some of them come into the department, some of them go into industry and so forth. I would have no reason to expect that anybody in the department would receive any but the normal treatment there and be paid accordingly and be classified, if not immediately then in due course.

Without some specific names I do not think that I can answer the second part of the question any more than that.

Mr. Young: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister would answer a supplementary question. It is this:

Are the contributions to the Ontario hospital services commission forwarded to the commission on behalf of these young men during this period so that their hospital services benefits are kept in good status?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I will be answering that without checking it, but my view is that they would get all the normal benefits in relation to their employment from the time they were taken on. If there is any reason to qualify that I will do so, but at the moment I would certainly assure my hon. friend—

Mr. Young: I understand that the Ontario hospital services commission has notified this young man that he is in arrears; that is the reason for my question.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I will check.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, as the representative in this assembly of the great riding of Welland, I am particularly pleased to announce to the House that the OHA Intermediate A champions and the winner of the Robertson Trophy is the Port Colborne's Sailors hockey team.

During the regular season they took 20 games and lost 10 and in the play-offs they excelled themselves to win Ontario honours. Playing coach Neil Mahon is deserving of every applause and he and his manager, Emedio Sergenese, are to be congratulated on this great achievement, along with Bill McGowan, the captain and all the crew of the Sailors. It was a great team effort and I am sure hon. members of the House will join me in applauding the tars for winning the series in four straight games.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE GENERAL SESSIONS ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 100, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE REGISTRY ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 110, An Act to amend The Registry Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LAND TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 111, An Act to amend The Land Titles Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PARTNERSHIPS REGISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 112, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves second reading of Bill No. 113, An Act to amend The Limited Partnerships Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PLANNING ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill No. 85, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 109, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO HOUSING CORPORATION ACT, 1964

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development) moves second reading of Bill No. 101, An Act to amend The Ontario Housing Corporation Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SHERIDAN PARK CORPORATION ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Randall moves second reading of Bill No. 102, An Act to amend The Sheridan Park Corporation Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT, 1964

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources) moves second reading of Bill No. 104, An Act to amend The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MENTAL HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves second reading of Bill No. 106, An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE OPHTHALMIC DISPENSERS ACT, 1960-1961

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 107, An Act to amend The Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-1961.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PHARMACY ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 108, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CENTENNIAL CENTRE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information) moves second reading of Bill No. 114, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of the centennial centre of science and technology.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The twenty-fourth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

(continued)

On vote 401:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last night, I had been making some comments on the policies and economic prospects discussed by the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) in the introductory remarks to his estimates.

He stated during the course of those remarks that Ontario's development is, of course, determined to an important extent by federal policy. I would agree with him that if federal policies are not adequate to maintain aggregate demand at a reasonable level then Ontario will naturally suffer and there will be very little that the Ontario government will be able to do to correct the overall situation resulting from lack of aggregate demand. That I think we can take as common ground.

We have to work in this province within the framework of the national economy. We have to work in co-operation with the federal government and other provincial governments and I am happy to note that the government, within this department, is devising machinery to facilitate co-operation, joint action and interchange of information between this government and the federal government in the economic field and in other fields. That is all to the good.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, we should not overlook the fact that within the broad framework of the operation of the national economy, there is a great deal that this province can do. It can probably only have a secondary and indirect effect on aggregate demand, but given overall federal economic policy, we can do a great deal to improve our own position and thereby also help to improve the situation in the country as a whole.

Now, the hon. Minister in his statement yesterday indicated some projects that the government is undertaking. They consist of salesmanship, I would say, and some policies directed towards improving the quality and mobility of the labour market. Beyond that I cannot see that there is much in what the hon. Minister said. There is some good analysis but very little policy that flows out of the analysis.

I made some comments yesterday as to where I think serious shortcomings lie. I suggested that there could be a constructive role for the Ontario economic council whereas now it merely wanders around in futility. These things I mentioned last night. I will not go over them again.

But I would like to refer to one of the specific policies that the hon. Minister mentioned as being within the proper purview of this government, and a policy which he suggested the government is doing something about, namely, the whole question of a well trained mobile labour force.

I am not going to deal with this in all its ramifications. I am going to make one or two references to training programmes only. These can be dealt with in greater detail under the estimates of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), but I think at this time one or two comments are appropriate.

We could all agree that training plays a role in improving both the quality and mobility of the labour force. Better trained workers are more mobile, they have greater employment opportunities. They can contribute more to the productive capacity of the country and their chances of obtaining and maintaining employment are enhanced.

The hon. Minister went over that point rather quickly on page 12b of his prepared text. He said Ontario's policy is to "assess our labour requirements, train and retrain skilled labour to the fullest extent of expanded facilities, with increasing emphasis on on-the-job instruction, and where necessary meet specific skill gaps through immigration."

I will not go into the immigration phase of the problem. I will not go into other aspects of labour market policy. I will deal only for a moment with training.

Such training as is taking place in this province at the present time is under joint federal-provincial programmes. The hon. Minister stated, and I do not think he came back to the point, he just stated in passing that there was going to be increasing emphasis on on-the-job instruction. Well that, I think, comes under Programme Four of the joint federal-provincial vocational training programme. The hon. Minister was very careful not to say what the achievement to date has been in Ontario under Programme Four, so I will enlighten anyone who may not know. As of now, we in Ontario have completed a total of one project under Programme Four. One project—that was in a plant in Leaside where about 30 workers received in-plant training, to upgrade their qualifications. That is the government's contribution in one important aspect of training. Yet, the hon. Minister himself says it is important to maintain a mobile and adequately qualified labour pool.

Another important area relates to the retraining of the unemployed. That is perhaps the most important area of all, because the unemployed are the people who obviously are not fitting into the labour demand pattern at the present time.

In the city of Toronto, there have, for the last few years, been a number of centres, municipal and provincial, at which the unemployed can receive training. These centres also take in handicapped workers. The figures I am going to give include the handicapped workers, but they are a very small percentage of the total. Most of the people who went through these training schools were unemployed workers. Unfortunately a good many of them still are. In the total period from the beginning of the programme in 1961, until November 30, 1964, 8,517 unemployed workers, with a few handicapped included, have completed courses in the various training facilities in the city of Toronto. That is in a three-year period. A mere 8,517 and in that same period, Mr. Chairman, a total of 7,319, almost the same number, started courses and then dropped out. Now if that is attacking the problem of the retraining of unemployed, the hon. Minister is going to be in for some rude shocks in the future when he tries to reach his objective of an increase in the labour force of 75,000 per year from now until 1970.

One of the main reasons for the drop-outs is the totally inadequate living allowances that are paid to these people. The amount for a single person is $5 a day and for a person with a family, $9 a day. Then to carry cheese-paring to the ultimate, these pitiful allowances are not paid until the worker has used up any unemployment insurance benefits to which he may be entitled. In other words, if when he enters the training school, he has a certain amount of benefits to his credit in the unemployment insurance fund, he has got to use them all up before he can draw training allowances. The result is that when he comes out of the training school, assuming he is not a drop-out and manages to graduate, his resources are all used up. He is down to nothing. He is in no position at all to find the job that is most suitable for him. He has to take the first thing that comes along. Surely we go to the trouble of giving him training just so that he will not have to take the first thing that comes along, so that he will have a certain degree of flexibility and be able to get a job that might be more permanent than is usual with the first job that comes along.

Just compare this with the policy of the labour market board in Sweden. In Sweden they pay adequate allowances to trainees and in addition transportation allowances to help them find jobs. Transportation allowances are also given to other unemployed workers who do not go through training schools. These allowances are paid as often as is necessary, until the worker finds the job that fits his situation best. When a man gets into a job that he really fits, then he is likely to stay there. We will no longer have an unemployed or potential unemployed worker on our hands.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): What is an adequate amount?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would suggest that people taking training should be relieved of financial worries. As a minimum we should think in the following terms: For a single worker, perhaps $10 a day; and for a married worker, $15 a day, and with the amount scaled up from that according to the number of children. In any case, I am suggesting that the present allowances are far from adequate. The situation is particularly unfortunate in view of the fact that the unemployed worker has to use up his unemployment insurance benefits before he can draw his allowances at all.

With regard to the Swedish programme in which generous allowances both for living and transportation are permitted—we do not give anything for transportation here—one of the experts of the Swedish national labour market board said that these allowances are the most economical and, in comparison with other means, the least expensive of all the tools of the labour market. Now, that is from a country where a real job on labour market policy has been done and where there are a high degree of mobility and extremely low rates of unemployment. This expert considers that adequate allowances for living and transportation are not hand-outs, but a sound investment in the future both of the worker concerned and of the country.

However, as I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that can be dealt with more fully under the estimates of the hon. Minister of Education. I mention it here merely to indicate the lack of substance in many of the statements that were contained in the hon. Minister's speech yesterday and which is all too often the case with statements emanating from this government.

There is one last matter dealt with in the hon. Minister's statement that I would like to comment on at some length. This too relates, as the hon. Minister suggested to labour market policy and the building and maintaining of a well qualified and mobile labour force. As the hon. Minister said, workers in their performance, their attitudes and their capacities to get jobs and hold jobs, and children in their capacity to absorb education, are very much influenced by their environment. One important contribution to developing a proper labour market policy is to ensure that people have adequate housing. I will accept the hon. Minister's definition as given in his speech yesterday as to what constitutes adequate housing.

I would say also that if we are thinking in terms of public policies designed to maximize aggregate demand, we can think of nothing better than housing programmes. It is generally recognized that they have a highly stimulating effect on the economy. So both in labour market terms and in general economic terms, there is every case in the world for an aggressive housing policy. Moreover, and perhaps most important, if we really mean what we are saying—and so many people are now saying it—in all the talk about the so-called "war on poverty"—then the place to start, as Michael Harrington pointed out in his book The Other America, is with housing, because bad housing is the breeding place of poverty. It is the effect of poverty, it is true, but it is also the cause of further poverty; it maintains a vicious circle from which people and families often never escape. Therefore, I think that the subject merited the amount of attention the hon. Minister gave to it yesterday, and I think it merits further attention this afternoon.

To understand the problem properly, I think we have to put it in its perspective; we have to look at it in terms of the need that exists and the performance to date in meeting that need. That is what I am going to do in the statement that I will now make to wind up my introductory remarks in regard to these estimates.

Housing policy in Canada in the 20 years since World War II has been a policy—to quote a man whose name I have forgotten—“a policy of socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor.”

If all Canadian families earned $6,000 a year or more, we could say that we have a sound housing policy, but we all know that most Canadians, excluding the members of the Legislature, do not make that much. In 1963, only 14.2 per cent of borrowers under The National Housing Act were in the income group below $5,000 a year. In other words, nearly 86 per cent were in the income group above $5,000. Yet the people in the under-$5,000 group constituted 52.3 per cent of the total population. In other words, the facilities provided by the only public policy in Canada that has resulted in the construction of any significant amount of housing to date, have been available mainly to the well-to-do. You do not have to take my word for it.

The present federal Minister in charge of housing, Hon. J. R. Nicholson, said in the House of Commons on May 28, 1964:

Ninety per cent of the entire housing output associated with The National Housing Act has been provided for the middle-income and upper-income classes.

And that is not the whole story. Essentially, housing policy in Canada has been for the benefit of private builders, not of the people who need houses. Mr. Nicholson confirmed that too. He said:

Canadian housing policy has been heavily committed to the support and aid of the private market, and rather to the production of housing than to its distribution.

In this context, Mr. Chairman, it was with no little misgiving that I heard the hon. Minister of Economics and Development say yesterday in this House:

Perhaps our most gratifying experience to date . . . has been the wholehearted support we have received from the merchant builders and the real estate brokers.

Not much more than a year ago, Dr. Albert Rose, a member of the Ontario housing corporation, said in Ontario Housing:

The strongly organized and well-financed opposition to the physical expansion of low-rental housing has succeeded.

That opposition, Mr. Chairman, did not come from the low-income families who desperately need low-rental housing. It came from the merchant builders and real estate brokers whose co-operation the Ontario housing corporation is now enlisting.

Why are they co-operating so wholeheartedly? If their past record is any indication, Mr. Chairman, it is certainly not because they think a real job is going to be done in low-rental housing. I suspect that part of the reason may be that they think, erroneously I hope, that they will be able to unload their dogs on the Ontario housing corporation. Any houses that will not move at the prices they are asking can always be offered to the corporation under its new policy of buying houses from private builders.

After all, let us not forget the ill-starred rent certificate plan. It was the world's greatest boon to landlords with old and uncompetitive accommodation, who would otherwise have been faced with the alternative of reducing rents or letting their apartments and houses stand vacant. The hon. Minister said yesterday:

Ontario housing corporation, created by this Legislature last year, provides a means whereby the Ontario housing programme can be operated along lines closely allied to private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, one thing that the experience of Canada and every other country in the western world has proved, is that private enterprise will not adequately meet the housing needs of the people in the lower third of the income range. One might have hoped that the Ontario government, after having pursued to the end every blind alley it could find or construct, had learned that much at least.

But apparently not, Mr. Chairman. It is now starting all over again looking for blind alleys.

Let us consider the need that now exists. The study of the association of Ontario housing authorities published in 1964 under the title of Good Housing for Canadians, said:

Present and past activities in low-income and elderly persons housing bear absolutely no relationship to any realistic appraisal of the need in Canada.

And again:

The study anticipates that something in the order of one million low-income family and elderly persons units will be required by 1980 alongside a programme of approximately the same dimensions of moderate-income housing.

What is to be the contribution of the government, in its shiny new housing corporation, to this need? Mainly words, if the hon. Minister's statement of yesterday is any indication. For example, he said yesterday that:

Since the fall of last year when the corporation opened its doors, a total of 31 municipalities has requested surveys to determine the need for rental housing.

Last year, when he announced the establishment of the housing corporation as the answer to all our problems, he admitted that the government had not accomplished too much in the housing field in the preceding three years. He told us to take heart, however. The time had not been completely wasted, he said, because—and I am now quoting from page 2389 of Hansard for April 23, 1964:

Over a three-year period, the housing branch has completed a total of 68 surveys.

If only people could live in paper houses the problem would be solved. The surveys, reports, announcements and general ballyhoo published in the last 10 years would provide enough houses to meet all needs for the next 50 years. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I am coming to the conclusion that that is the present trend of thinking of the Ontario housing corporation.

I have here, as you can see, a piece of cardboard, with a coloured section in a sort of cross shape in the centre. Anyone with a penchant for cutting out paper dolls merely has to push this out, so that he gets the coloured section isolated. Then if he fiddles around with it enough and follows carefully the instructions given on the sheet, he ends up with this—a paper house, with Ontario housing corporation written on it in three different places.

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): The hon. member must have had a lot of fun doing that.

Mr. Bryden: I feel sorry for the people who had a lot of fun putting this forward as a housing programme. This is the latest project of the Ontario housing corporation, apparently.

Mr. Peck: Well, at least they are having fun.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You are responsible for this, do you not realize that?

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is really bad.

Mr. MacDonald: It is your government.

Mr. Bryden: According to the hon. Minister, however, the housing corporation also has hard statistics to present. Tenders, he said yesterday, have already been called for 1,951 units. The book Good Housing for Canadians estimated that approximately one million units for low-income families and elderly persons will be required by 1980. This estimate is for the whole of Canada, but one can reasonably assume, I think, that at least a third of the figure, or about 350,000, applies to Ontario. The Ontario housing corporation has stepped right into the breach created by this need for 350,000 units, with 1,951 units. To be fair, however, it always has some units on paper, if you will pardon the expression, Mr. Chairman. For example, the hon. Minister said that:

Other projects in Metro on which construction will commence this year are the 237-unit O'Connor Drive development and 390 units in Thistletown.

Mr. Chairman, the Thistletown project has been announced every year, and usually more than once a year, for as long as I can remember. Always construction was to start immediately. But to date nary a shovel has been put into the earth except for a senior citizens project sponsored by the Metro Toronto limited dividend housing company.

The government has created the illusion that it is doing a job on housing by announcing the same projects over and over again. The longer a project is delayed the more mileage the government gets out of it in terms of headlines. I suppose the perfect project in the government's viewpoint would be one that never got started; and I am beginning to wonder if Thistletown is not the perfect project within those terms. Perhaps this is the key to the understanding of government housing policy.

The hon. Minister dealt to some degree with Metro Toronto. I am especially interested in the Metro Toronto area, not to the exclusion of other areas, but it happens to be the area with which I am most familiar. I would just like to take a look at the present situation in Metro Toronto.

As far as low rental housing is concerned, the achievement of the last 15 years adds up to this: the housing authority of Toronto has just under 1,400 units in its Regent Park North project. The now defunct Metro housing authority constructed about 2,300 units in four projects. All told therefore, there are about 3,700 low-rental units to meet the need of the quarter to a third of the population who clearly need low-rent housing.

In addition, there are four to five thousand units in private limited dividend housing projects and about 1,300 units in projects owned and operated by the city of Toronto limited dividend housing corporation, an offshoot of the city of Toronto housing authority. These, however, are full recovery, not low-rental projects. Many families are excluded from them because their incomes are not high enough. It is a sad note, Mr. Chairman, when the poor are excluded from public housing projects because they are too poor.

The Metro Toronto Housing Company Limited has constructed about 1,850 units in a dozen projects for elderly citizens and has others nearing completion. To give credit where credit is due, the Metro housing company is the only agency that has been doing an energetic construction job in recent years in the Toronto area. But let us remember that these, too, are full recovery projects, apart from a relatively small construction subsidy provided by the provincial Department of Public Welfare.

Old people who depend entirely on old age security cannot really afford to live in them, so they have a choice of skimping on food or living in slum accommodation. Even at that, the active waiting list is at least 2,500. Many old people die before they can get in. Moreover, there is an unconscionable and inflexible requirement that an applicant must have lived in Metro Toronto for the 10 years immediately preceding date of admission.

Some months ago I had occasion to espouse without success the cause of a 74-year-old lady who has lived all her life in Toronto except for one period of residence in Windsor a few years ago. I think she was there a couple of years, three or four years ago. This disqualifies her until 1970 as far as the elderly citizens housing under the Metro Toronto company is concerned till 1970, when she will be about 80 years old. And yet she has lived more than 70 years in Toronto.

As far as low income families are concerned, the Metro housing registry announced recently that its file of active applications for low-rental housing at the end of March of this year totalled 3,480, up 700 from the beginning of the year. Of these families, 591 were welfare cases, 726 had earnings between $100 and $199 a month and 1,076 between $200 and $300 a month. Three-bedroom units constituted the accommodation most commonly sought because the 3,480 applications represented 8,172 children.

Where are these people living now? In shoddy but high-rent accommodation in slum empires, that is where they are living; along with thousands of other families who have not bothered to apply for public housing because they know it is a waste of time to do so.

Subway construction, expressway construction, commercial building and construction of high-rise, high-rent apartments have steadily constricted the supply of even slum accommodation, so that there is nowhere, literally nowhere, for low-income families to go. There is not even a slum for them. When yet another batch of them were due to be displaced by the St. James Town project their plight suddenly came to public notice; so a concerted effort was made to find alternative accommodation for this particular group, with very little success so far.

The Alexandra Park redevelopment project will displace still more. The project management is at this very time desperately looking for alternative accommodation for these people who will be displaced, and again with very little success. They are, of course, in competition with St. James Town people in trying to find slum houses for people.

Yet these people who are being displaced by St. James Town and Alexandra Park are the lucky ones. At least someone is trying to help them. The people displaced by the ordinary commercial projects are simply left to fend for themselves, their best hope being that they might find accommodation still worse than the ratholes from which they were evicted.

I am informed by people working in the field that housing for low income families in Toronto is now as tight as it was in 1945 at the end of the war.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): And in Hamilton!

Mr. Bryden: My hon. colleague to my immediate left says "and in Hamilton"; and I suspect that everywhere in the province, in all major urban areas at any rate, the same process is going on as in Toronto.

Slum landlords grow fat in Florida because the despicable accommodation they have to offer is scarce, and therefore they can charge what the traffic will bear. This is the fruit of 20 years of government policy.

There is a disposition nowadays among housing experts to say that low rental units should be scattered through regular housing projects so that they will not be conspicuous. I will agree that there is a lot of sense in what the experts say. At the same time, let us not get carried away with that concept.

If we place all our faith in establishing a few low rental units in private and public redevelopment projects as they come along, we will not solve the housing problem for low income families and elderly persons this side of 1,000 years.

The Regent Park North and South projects may have a few disadvantages—frankly, I do not know what they are; I do not see any important disadvantages at all, but some people say that they have disadvantages—but I shudder to think, Mr. Chairman, where we would be without them.

To an important extent the problem is one of design. It is probably true that in New York where row upon row of tenements were replaced by row upon row of high-rise apartments, many old problems were left unsolved and new ones were created. But low-rent housing projects do not have to concentrate on the high rise apartment. In fact, I would say that projects designed for families, as most of these low-rent projects should be, should not have high rise apartments in them at all. The only criticism I would make of either of the Regent Park projects relates to the high-rise apartments in Regent Park South.

If the rich want to be cliff dwellers, that is their choice; but there is no reason why the poor should be forced into the same mould. Low income families with several children can be accommodated economically and with dignity in row houses—which are now called town houses if they are occupied by the rich and maybe in the housing projects we should call them town houses—and by other forms of group housing.

Low construction costs, as compared to the cost of high-rise buildings, compensate to a substantial degree for high land costs. In fact, I suspect that they pretty well offset them. The row house, the four-plex and that type of unit, is in a totally different order, as far as construction is concerned, from the high-rise apartment—there is no need for steel frames and so on—so the actual cost per suitable unit for a family is probably lower than the costs in the high-rise apartment, enough to compensate for the lower density in relation to the high land costs. Sometimes these high-rise apartments appear to be economical in terms of construction costs because costs are stated as costs per unit. But the units in most of them are not suitable for families. If these units were made suitable for families, then costs would be very high per unit and very much higher than in the smaller type of housing.

At any rate, the situation is now so desperate that we much use every device available, both low-rent units scattered through other projects and specific low-rent projects. Commercial redevelopment is fine in its place, but let it not take priority over the housing needs of human beings as it has done in the past.

In the field of housing, the Ontario government is now taking a curiously paternalistic attitude to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. In my opinion, Metro is a big boy now and ought to be able to look after itself, within the framework of federal and provincial housing policy. That is not the view of the Ontario government. The Metro housing authority, which was really just an agency of the provincial government in any case, has now been taken over by the Ontario housing corporation. As far as I know—and the hon. Minister will be able to enlighten me if I am wrong—there is not another municipality in Ontario where the housing corporation has taken over a local housing authority. On the contrary, it is encouraging the establishment of such authorities, as I think it should do.

Why should the provincial agency concern itself with the details of construction, acquisition and operation of specific local projects in Metro or anywhere else? That can only lead to misunderstanding and acrimonious disputes, as recent history in Metro Toronto has demonstrated. The provincial agency has a full-time job to develop a dynamic housing programme for the whole province; not just surveys, but projects on about 10 times the scale now contemplated.

The situation in Metro Toronto continues to be one of divided authority notwithstanding the intervention of the provincial government. The city of Toronto housing authority pioneered the concept of public low-rent housing in Regent Park north—it was way ahead of the senior levels of government. It pioneered that concept in Canada, but subsequently it was driven by frustration into limited dividend housing which does not meet the need, and now it is boxed in so that it probably never will be able to do anything more than administer the project it now has.

The Metro housing company—a limited dividend corporation—is manfully plugging away, trying to meet the need of senior citizens for housing, but unable to do so in adequate measure because of its limited terms of reference as a limited dividend housing corporation.

And over all is cast the shadow of Big Brother, the Ontario housing corporation, which fancies it can solve Metro's housing problems directly, as well as stimulating housing development in the rest of the province. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there should be one housing authority for the whole of Metro operated by local citizens familiar with local needs. It should take over all existing projects, including those administered by the Ontario housing corporation, and should be given authority to get on with the job.

It may be true, as the hon. Minister said, that the red tape which in the past frustrated most efforts to meet the housing needs of the lower third of the income group has now been swept away. If so, that is good, but let us not set up a new web of misunderstanding. We have fiddled with the housing problem until the fiddle is worn out. Last year one of my colleagues said that, as the hon. Minister at the time requested, we in this group would wait a year to see what the Ontario housing corporation could accomplish. We have waited that year and now we find that it would take a micrometer to distinguish its accomplishments from the zero accomplishments of the past.

What can one expect with this current predilection for private enterprise in the housing field? We are never going to get anywhere as long as the hon. Minister rests his case on the proposition that he is getting the co-operation of the commercial builders and the real estate agents who have been bucking public low-rent housing all their lives.

There is plenty of scope for private enterprise in providing housing for the well-to-do and the relatively well-to-do, who are the people who have been mollycoddled in the past under The National Housing Act. I think it is time we got our priorities straightened out; let the well-to-do and the relatively well-to-do look after themselves and let them deal with private enterprise. That is the best way.

But let the government get on with the fundamental job, the job of meeting the needs that have not even been touched, in 20 years of talking since the end of World War II—the needs of the lower income families and the older citizens. And when I make my criticism, it is not directed specifically at this government; it is applicable to all governments in Canada, at all levels.

If politicians mean what they say about the war on poverty, the time has come for a concerted public attack on the real housing problem: the problem of the forgotten third of low-income families and elderly persons. The best attack will be by local authorities, assisted, encouraged and inspired, but not obstructed, by the senior levels of government. Mr. Chairman, this is as true today as it was 10 and 20 years ago. In this government, I do not know how many different kinds of housing policies we have gone through. Every year or every second year we have a bold new start, a complete beginning, something that is really going to get the thing on the rails, and every year there is the same flop as the year before.

I hate to have to say it, Mr. Chairman, but looking at the performance of the Ontario housing corporation to this date, I cannot see that this administrative reshuffle has made any significant difference at all. I do not blame the corporation or its personnel for that because, after all, ultimately the energy and initiative has to come from the government. Apparently there is not the will to do the job on housing. I hope this situation will change. I hope that when we come back next year, we will find that great strides forward have been made in the housing field, but as of this date, Mr. Chairman, one can only report the same record of a dismal failure and neglect that had to be reported by anyone who analyzed the situation every year since the end of World War II.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, on vote 402, would this be the vote where I could bring up the problem of rent control?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Chairman, I would like to table the statistical material relating to Ontario's 1970 targets, which I did not take the time to read yesterday, and perhaps that should be done before we discuss the other votes.

(See appendix page 2373)

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the hon. Minister if item 6 of vote 401 in special services, projects and so forth, would be a proper place to discuss rent controls?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That comes under housing. That will be in the housing vote, which is 407.

Mr. Newman: There would be no research done under item 6 on the matter of rent control, would there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, there is nothing under that.

Mr. Newman: Right. I can discuss this then, under housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, under 401, I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that as far as we are concerned in our one-ninth of the province—as the province is broken up into regional areas—regional development has not been a happy association as far as Georgian Bay development association is concerned. In summary it all boils down to a lot of talk and meetings and nothing ever happens.

As I say, we have broken the province down into nine sections and in all truth it is a situation of the “haves” and the “have-nots.” We are spending in this vote $150,000 for regional development, and as I say, nothing ever happens.

In the report that comes out from the department, the Georgian Bay region ranks in the last position of all Ontario in the 10 economic sectors. The three weak sisters in our province are the Bruce county, Muskoka and Parry Sound districts. For average family income, Bruce county, Parry Sound and Muskoka rank 48th, 49th and 50th respectively out of 53 areas in the province, with averages of $4,150 down to $4,000, as against the Ontario average of $5,800.

For wage earners making less than $1,000 a year, Bruce county ranks 47th with 20.3 per cent, and Parry Sound rates 47th. These figures do not mean too much to the Hogtown concept we are facing here, but in all Ontario, among the population over five years of age, 6.6 per cent has a university education percentage, but in Georgian Bay the percentage is 3.2. The average family income in our area is $4,500 against $5,800 here. Wage earners making less than $1,000 a year in 1961 were 12.3 per cent of the population in Toronto and 17.8 in our area. I could go on giving you figures to show you the need for decentralization.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that all this department does is talk a good game. We have been through this regional development association, which in essence, to the hard-boiled politician, is just part of the big Tory political machine. It is interesting to note that of 134 new plants—which you are, I say kindly, bragging about—brought into Ontario last year, 80 of these 134, or more than 62 per cent are located within the Golden Horseshoe area.

I submit to you that if you are going to quit kidding the troops, you should take a new look at regional development as far as we are concerned. You are asking us to kick into it $1 per capita across the province to match your dollars here, but this is not working and you know it is not working. Regional development is to develop the areas in the province that need help, and you will have to put teeth into your legislation to make this thing work, Mr. Chairman.

Decentralize. If we are going to keep Ontario afloat we are all in the same boat and you cannot sink half a boat. The province of Quebec has taken positive steps, and the hon. Minister knows it, to work out a programme for depressed areas, and all we hear from this Department of Economics and Development is talk. I suggest to the hon. Minister that before he kicks in $150,000 more, he should put some teeth into his legislation that will make regional development and planning work.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there was any question asked by the hon. member; there was an observation with reference to regional development. I do not know whether he attended our regional development conference in Toronto or not. I do not believe he did, he was out of town at the time. Many hon. members of the House did. I just want to assure the hon. member that the reason we held the conference was to find out what we could do with the various areas and how we could perhaps be of greater assistance than in the past.

We are not satisfied, either, with what has been done by the regional development associations. I think their funds have been limited; I think they need to be properly organized; I think they need more guidance from the provincial government and also from Mr. Drury's department, The Department of Industry in Ottawa. This department also has a man working in Ontario on regional development—Mr. Levy, I believe his name is. We are consulting with Mr. Levy. As soon as he gets off the plane from Ottawa, he heads for our office and I am quite sure from my discussions with our friends in Ottawa that they, too, are coming into regional development all across Canada, not only in this province but in other areas. We are putting together a programme for regional development which I hope to introduce before too long.

We are not going to rush into it, as I said yesterday, half-prepared to do a little here and a little there. I do not think that the shotgun approach to regional development, such as perhaps we have had in the past, is the answer to helping any of the areas that the hon. member just mentioned.

I might say to him though, that the budget for the Georgian Bay association is higher than any other budget of all the other nine regions. They top the other regions in so far as budgets—

Mr. Sargent: No amount matters if it isn't working!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a moment; let me finish. The hon. member had his chance.

The association has sufficient money to do what they are doing now, but I agree with the hon. member that perhaps they need some guidance; that we need some guidance from them and that is the reason we held the conference.

We are in touch with these regional development leaders. All of them attended the conference and I have had letters from most of them since they returned home. I have had a number of suggestions as to what we can do to have a better conference next year. I hope that we will not just have a conference; I hope that we will have something concrete to offer in the way of assistance to these slow growth areas. I hope that we will have something whereby we can assist in decentralizing industry.

Later on we will no doubt talk about ODA. We will be criticized for some things it does, but I hope also that hon. members will keep in mind that the reason ODA was set up was to help decentralize industry. The report we had yesterday indicates that we are very successful as far as we have gone; but I think we could go a lot further, I cannot help but agree with the hon. member.

I would suggest that as far as regional development is concerned this is a big subject and an important one. It is a major one, not only for us but I think also for the municipalities which are going to be involved and the federal authorities who apparently have taken a more direct interest in regional development in the last few weeks.

I am quite sure that when we sit down to discuss regional development as the plan is now being worked out that we will have a more comprehensive plan for assisting not only these associations here, but perhaps there will be a change in what we have now in development associations. Someone has recommended that we make some amendments to the nine regions that we have, and as you know we are trying to form a group right here in Metro.

In so far as the diversification of industry is concerned I think the hon. member as a private entrepreneur would be the last one to ask the government to tell him where to locate. This is the quickest way I know of to discourage investment in Ontario. We can try to encourage entrepreneurs to get out of the Golden Horseshoe area and I am sure we are going to be successful in this regard.

I say to the hon. member that I now see wall-to-wall factories from here to Windsor and I would like to see wall-to-wall factories between here and the Quebec border. This is primarily one of the things that we hope to introduce in any plans we have to put together a more sophisticated programme for regional development.

Mr. Sargent: With all respect to the hon. Minister, I think that he is an able man in his department but he has inherited part of a propaganda machine, part of his party. This is my opinion and I like to say what I think; and there are a lot of people who think as I do. The hon. Minister has one of his machines going for him. He has the women's advisory committee, which is under his department. This is a cosy arrangement for the hon. Minister to have all the gals in here at our expense, to indoctrinate them. We will go along with this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. Minister made it very pointed that I was not at the meeting he called for regional associations. I was in the business long before he was. When he was the head of a big corporation, I was a small city mayor interested in regional development and I went to scores of these meetings. I understand that there are 200 or 300 devoted people who go to these meetings who are concerned about their industry, the tax and business assessments and getting more development. There are 200 or 300 people who go to these meetings in these areas and I understand that they have a hard time getting the hon. Minister to go to one of these meetings. Has he ever been to one of these meetings?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I have. I have been invited on a number of occasions, but while the House is in session it is difficult for me to leave.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the hon. Minister how many of these meetings he has attended.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have been to three that I know of, and there have been a number of meetings in Toronto—

Mr. Sargent: If the hon. Minister has been to just three meetings, I suggest that he not criticize me for not going to his meetings. I learned a long time ago that he just inherited a myth and it is not going to work.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not criticize the hon. member for not going to the meeting; I just suggested that we talked about regional development at the meeting and it was unfortunate that he was not there to listen to what we were going to do about regional development.

Mr. Sargent: Under the present setup, Mr. Chairman, anyone who goes to one of those meetings is wasting his time.

The hon. Minister says to us that industry cannot be forced to locate other than where they want to go. I would suggest that this government encourage tax incentive programmes in these depressed areas and have industry want to go there.

Mr. Reilly: Is that Liberal policy?

Mr. Sargent: It certainly is.

This is important, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister has a very businesslike mind. I understand that Governor Rockefeller attends as many of these meetings as he can in the state. I think that the hon. Minister should attend a few of these meetings to see the useless efforts that are being made, when there is no machinery to develop their actions. All in all he is asking us to give another $150,000 in support of this programme which is nothing else but a further machine of the Tory Party. Believe me, that is all it is.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would ask guidance from the hon. Minister as to whether this is the appropriate place to discuss regional development or should it be raised under the chief economist where it has now been placed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The money is voted here; I will discuss it any place, wherever the hon. member prefers.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have a fair number of comments that I would like to make on this topic. I did go to the conference and I must say that the comments of the hon. member for Grey North really put me on the spot—when he said that anyone going to that conference would be wasting his time, because there is nothing afterwards to follow through. I do not think that I wasted my time at that conference, but the hon. member is more correct than wrong in saying that there is not much to follow through, and therefore I am wondering about the results.

I want to deal with this in a substantive way because, quite frankly, as I have indicated in this House before, I think that this whole question of regional development is an extremely important matter. I think, as I shall try to detail rather briefly, that this government has been drifting with the issue for some 10 years. Indeed, if one goes back to the regional development conference, in itself it illustrates some rather puzzling things about the government's approach.

I repeat, I found the conference itself as challenging and potentially as useful a conference of its kind as I have ever attended. Now, I will add that perhaps the reason is that I have been interested in this topic for the past year or more and I have been doing considerable reading. I discovered that when I had such a feast of experts—drawn from across the world: From Britain, from Denmark, from Sweden, from Colombia, from the United Nations, from Paris, from the United States, as well as from Canada—this was really being able to get a good number of Christmas dinners, intellectually speaking, all crammed into one. It was an extremely useful experience.

But the thing that worried me about this conference, Mr. Chairman, is its origins, its genesis. I cannot help feeling that somewhere in the structure of this government organization, in trying to cope with regional development, there is a sort of a schizophrenia.

On the one hand you have a lip service paid to it at the top. On the other hand you have certain departmental machinery which has been established and has been working with the regional development association now for a period of ten years. And there is considerable evidence to suggest that the two of them have almost been operating as though they were not in the same government.

Let me just go back for a moment. Regional development associations emerged back about the mid-50s when the federal government took the lead in the division of Canada into some 68 different regional development areas across the country, some ten of which are in the province of Ontario. There gradually began to emerge regional development associations, usually because of the initiative at the local level but with the incentive of matching grants from the government here. The first one was in eastern Ontario. They have emerged across the rest of the province with the establishment of the St. Clair development association during the past year, all have been completed with the exception of Metro.

Now, it has been observed and I suspect with accuracy, as far as I have seen it, that the hon. Minister's predecessor did a magnificent job of exploiting every branch of his department for political purposes before the last election. He certainly did a magnificent job in exploiting the women before the last election in the women's advisory committee. However, the one branch—and this is significant—which has been more or less neglected even by the politicians in this government up until now, has been the regional development services branch. The fact of the matter is that the regional development branch and the regional development associations had been drifting for years trying to find out exactly what their function was. Indeed they were drifting into dead ends, because the hon. member for Grey North is correct to this extent: that there are many men who have been encouraged by these at the local level and at this government level—in the fulfilment of their duty to promote regional development—to come on to these regional development associations. After a year or so they get off because nothing is happening, nothing of any real consequence. You persuade a businessman, or a man in any walk of life, that here is an important agency for the development of his area and his personal concern, and his public spiritedness brings him into it to make a contribution. But he discovers after a year or so that nothing is happening and he gets off the association.

Therefore it was not surprising, Mr. Chairman, that after ten years of drift—if I may switch my metaphors—these organizations, this whole development, is withering on the vine. Those who were interested in it—and I don't know where the idea came from in the first instance—came up with the idea of holding a conference to bring together the experts from New York state, Britain, Sweden, Colombia and other countries who have been working with the United Nations, who have been forging ahead on the whole concept of regional development, to come and present their ideas. This was a very good proposition. And I suppose the proposition was put forward to the hon. Minister.

Now, let me say this about the hon. Minister: I have a rather growing affection for the fellow. He is a very congenial man, he has even got his own personal charm, but he is a promoter de luxe. Give him something to promote, and if there was ever a fellow who could sell the proverbial refrigerators to the Eskimos it is this Minister.

Mr. Sargent: Washing machines?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I do not know if they need the washing machines; you are spoiling my point.

However, Mr. Chairman, I am not persuaded that this hon. Minister really knew what he was getting into when he accepted, in his capacity as a natural promoter, the idea of this regional development conference that was held down in the Royal York hotel. Because I do not know that the hon. Minister—and I am dead certain that this government has not—has grasped the significance of what emerged at that conference. We have seen no real evidence of it up until now.

And what I want to do is to take a look at some of the evidence, and I want to do it in the framework of all that the hon. Minister gave us yesterday. Yesterday the hon. Minister in the course of his introductory comments, made the observation that they were going to make the best use of the expert advice that they received at this conference—and certainly you had expert advice drawn from all across the world. What did he say to us? Well, in his introductory statement yesterday—his magnum opus—on page 16—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Notice, it is with capital letters, heavy paper and double spaced.

Mr. MacDonald: That does not reduce the content or the amount of material in it. Just let me quote:

Establishing a regional development plan tuned to economic reality will be an important part of this department's programme in 1965-66. We propose to organize a regional development branch under the office of the chief economist. It will incorporate the present regional development division to continue the promotion and co-ordination services now in effect with the various regional development associations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I say quite frankly that this really puzzles me. I have here the latest Ontario government telephone directory and in it I discover that under The Department of Economics and Development you have, as the hon. Minister announced in the House, the office of the chief economist; and in the office of the chief economist, buried among many other things, you have the co-ordinator of the regional development services. Now last year, if I picked up the directory, it was the regional development services—I do not know whether it was division or branch, there is a very fine distinction; apparently a division is part of a branch and a branch is part of an office and all of this hierarchy is a little bit mystifying. But you used to have a regional development branch.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You notice we had 11 votes last year and we are down to seven. We have also consolidated there.

Mr. MacDonald: You have consolidated them for the purpose of expanding them this coming year.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Better control.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, you had a regional development branch last year that was doing a job of working, presumably, with a co-ordinator between this government and the regional development associations across the province. It is now submerged in the chief economist's office. And now you announce to us, in general terms, that you are going to have a regional development branch established during the coming year, and you add that it will incorporate the present regional development division "to continue the promotion and co-ordination services now in effect with the various regional development associations."

Now, I have a number of questions that I would like to ask because I am curious to find out what the government's thinking is. Is the regional development branch going to be responsible to the chief economist? Is the chief economist responsible to this Minister? Or is, as was announced in the newspapers, when he was appointed a while ago, his chief line of direction going to be to the Prime Minister and to the Cabinet? Where are the lines of communication? What new chaos are you creating? Indeed, even in your various estimates here—if I may speak as kindly as I can, to the hon. Minister—you bring in an estimate book which has your regional development grants under the main office, and you announce to us that the regional development services are going to be under the chief economist. This is essentially the problem we have had up until now—a complete confusion in terms of organization and approach.

However, let me proceed to complete what the hon. Minister said yesterday by way of a preview of what may happen in the next year. He added, a little later in his remarks:

The regional development branch will provide an overall approach to regional development in this province and suggests the best method of co-ordinating the regional activities of all the government agencies and departments now involved. The recommendations of the branch will form the basis for discussion by—

Mr. Chairman, catch this collection of highfalutin' words:

—an interdepartmental high-level advisory group on regional development.

Now I ask the hon. Minister what in heaven's name, is an interdepartmental high-level advisory group? Is it a Cabinet committee?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Senior civil servants, I would say, at the rank of Deputy Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: And it will be responsible to you, or will it be responsible to the Cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If it is working through my department it will be responsible to me. Some of these things have not been clearly defined, as I pointed out to you earlier. The chief economist—I might answer that question while I am on my feet—has to work in some department. Unless you want to set up another branch of government he is working in my department. He works not only for me, because we are correlating all the economic statistics not only for our department, but for regional development, for many other departments. We do work for The Department of Labour, The Department of Highways and somebody has to take that department and control it. We have put it under Economics and Development, but the chief economist will be the chief advisor to the government—we say the government, that is the Prime Minister and anybody in government who requires economic advice. But certainly he has to be, I would say, in a department of the government, and we feel that the economics branch that we have serving all the government branches is where he should be stationed. This is exactly where he makes his headquarters, at 950 Yonge Street.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I will make some further comments on the wisdom, or lack thereof, of this kind of setup, because as I shall say a little bit later I concede that there is value in getting some co-ordination of research work in the various departments, and this Department of Economics and Development is obviously the one in which this co-ordination has tended to emerge in the past. But whether or not this is the department in which you can get, with a chief economist who has already got a lot of other major responsibilities, the kind of direction that is going to lead to meaningful regional development, or just the kind of meaningless regional development and going through the motions that the hon. member for Grey North has been complaining about, I do not know. I am not persuaded that you are headed in the right direction and I want to indicate to you why, because presumably you are still at a formative stage in your thinking.

The basis of anyone's consideration of how you can get effective machinery for regional development and planning, I want to suggest, is in a study of Professor Krueger's analysis of the structure of government and its machinery at the present time. I have requested from the hon. Minister a tabling of Professor Krueger's report and he, for some reason that perhaps I can guess after listening to what Professor Krueger had to say at the conference, is a little reticent to permit this little stick of dynamite out into public, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Everything he said has been published!

Mr. MacDonald: Everything he said at the conference has been published, but whether there is anything more in his official report, which has been made to the Ontario economic council, I do not know. Certainly what he said at the conference does not include his recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just suggest that his report has not yet been completed, that he is still working on the report?

Mr. MacDonald: The reports are going on and on because there will be a lot of studies. I am convinced that the one report that he prepared, the substance of which was perhaps given at the conference downtown, has been completed and I think this is a little dodge on the part of the hon. Minister. I would just say, as a general proposition, Mr. Minister, with regard to the Krueger report or any other report—and this your predecessor acknowledged was a fair proposition—that any reports that are prepared for the Ontario economic council surely should be public documents. Public money is being spent by the Ontario economic council to produce documents, then the public at large, and particularly those of us in the Opposition who have our job to do in terms of shaping policy in this Legislature and in this province, are entitled to have the benefit of these reports. They are not private reports to the council or to the hon. Minister and therefore I reiterate my plea to him that this report of Dr. Krueger, and any other report that is prepared, should be made available to members of the Legislature so that we can have the benefit of its information.

However, I want to go back to the general point that Professor Krueger made in the course of his remarks, in the early stages of the conference. I am quoting from page 4 of the mimeographed portion of his speech, when he said:

Another underlying problem besetting regional economic development and regional planning in Ontario has been that of co-ordinating the development programmes of the various provincial departments, branches and agencies in a way that makes them complementary to one another instead of competitive to one another. With increasing centralization of provincial government authority there is need:

Then Professor Krueger said three things that are basic—

1. To enunciate clearly defined principles of regionalism to be used by all departments concerned with natural resources, the use of land, and economic development.

I submit to the government that they have not yet done this.

2. There is need for an integrated plan of attack on regional inequality and it should be drawn up using the benefit of local experience and on the scale of regional units.

There, I would concede, something has been done, but this is the real problem that we are tackling:

3. There is at the local level a need for a means by which the rigid municipal structure can be adjusted to solve the real problems of the day.

Then Professor Krueger adds something which is rather significant. It shows the far-sighted nature of the man.

And a corresponding need to keep such adjustment as a basic part of the relations between the provincial and local authorities so that the structure does not fossilize once again as new needs and new pressures arise.

Now here is the basic problem as he spelled it out—this overlapping. He pointed out, for example, in the later stages in his report that if one analyzes the various government departments, you will discover that they have obviously accepted the concepts of regional activity. Each one of them has proceeded to develop its own particular region until, if I may quote his rather succinct summary of it:

The net result is an apparent maze of administrative regions and districts that often cut across basic statistical data-gathering units such as counties and townships, thus making it difficult to analyze trends and resources and resource use in economic development and difficult to formulate and implement planning and economic policy.

Then the professor concluded this part of his analysis as follows:

After reviewing the provincial regional administrative organization one is led to the conclusion, when confronted with the outmoded municipal structure, that the government of Ontario in place of needed basic reorganization of that structure superimposed upon it whole new and complicated sets of administrative regions. This expedient has in turn created a fundamental impediment to rational planning of resource use and economic development.

Now the next point that I want to draw from the evidence that was given to the conference—a point which I think is extremely basic and important—is that some 15 years ago now, in 1950, a department of which this is the successor was established, because even at that stage the government recognized the need for some degree of co-ordination among these government departments; and so you had established The Department of Planning and Development. It went through a number of changes until now it is The Department of Economics and Development. I got lost in the succession of names that it has had down through the years.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): You do not usually get confused like that.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I do on the terminology this government produces, but that is a minor item.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is a good story.

Mr. MacDonald: In his report to the conference with regard to the fact that within The Department of Economics and Development the regional development branch was fixed upon as the co-ordinating agency, Professor Krueger comes to his conclusions as to what success has attended on the activities of this organization, or this branch, down through the years.

His comments were as follows: He observed that “although it had never been stipulated, one may justifiably assume that the co-ordinating function of The Department of Economics and Development, as spelled out in the original Planning and Development Act, is also the responsibility of the regional development division.” However, in order to provide the regional development associations with the expert advice and guidance they really need, the manpower of the regional development division would have to be strengthened. He goes on to indicate how it will have to be strengthened with specialists, research people and others.

Whether or not they are right in that division or whether they could be borrowed from other government departments, he indicates, is not a prime requisite, either one or the other. But to be effective, their full-time work should be devoted to survey, research and regional development programmes and problems; and they should be available to travel though the regions to give counsel to the managers and to the directors of regional development associations.

The department simply has not had this kind of staff. The hon. Minister has taken a big job and he has an organization that simply cannot do the job. Therefore, it is not surprising that Professor Krueger would come to these conclusions:

As a liaison organization between the regional development associations and the government, the regional development division has not been very successful.

He points out that when they went out and interviewed and analyzed the situation, they discovered in many cases that the government departments prefer to receive their information from their own people and other agencies, but not through the regional development association or through the regional development division, so it simply has not succeeded on the administrative level in fulfilling the role of a co-ordinating agency.

He also points out that, with reference to policy, “the regional development division has been even less successful in co-ordinating the policies and the programmes of government departments. Any requests for assistance, co-operation or co-ordination of efforts from other departments, as well as from other divisions in the same department, have usually been met with something less than enthusiasm.” I think he was indulging in a bit of understatement at that point.

The hon. Minister has suggested that he is going to establish a regional development branch. He had one; it tended to wither away; it got lost as a division in the chief economist's department; now the hon. Minister is going to re-establish it as a branch. The question I want to put to the hon. Minister is this: What conceivable prospects, in light of the record of the last ten or 15 years, are there that this department is going to be able to succeed in reconciling those basic conflicts that Professor Krueger spelled out? It was almost laughable to listen to him—it was sad and disturbing, but almost comic to listen to him—as he documented the incredible duplication of effort, the overlapping of boundaries, the confusion of responsibilities. What prospects are there that the new branch that the hon. Minister is now thinking about is going to be able to resolve this?

For example, the regional development associations are supposed to be engaged, as their name indicates, in development in their particular area. One of the most important features of this development may be the acquisition of new industry. What is the relationship between the regional development associations and the industrial commissioners, who comprise another branch that the hon. Minister's own department is responsible for, Mr. Chairman?

Let us not complicate it for the moment by the problem of co-ordination with another department of this government; let us make it very simple: Why should the hon. Minister have within his own department regional development associations which are responsible for regional development, while off in the trade and industry branch there are grants and the whole machinery for setting up industrial commissioners?

I understand that across the province of Ontario there are some 370 municipalities with some sort of organization, which range from a committee with no people full-time, sometimes part-time people and sometimes a full-time industrial commissioner. These people are gathering together the 170 or 200 new industries that were brought to the province. But it is one of the functions of the regional development associations to do this. When is the hon. Minister going to reconcile this conflict right within his own department? Clearly, Mr. Chairman, what we have here is a waste of time, a waste of effort, a waste of public money, a confusion of responsibilities which results in less effective achievements.

However, let me move out beyond the hon. Minister's department. What can this branch that he is considering establishing—a regional development branch or a revival of it—do to cope with the problem of the very serious conflict between regional development associations becoming in some instances pre-occupied with tourist development? If you go up to northwestern Ontario, if you go to the Lake Ontario association centred in Peterborough—if you go to almost any of them, particularly the Georgian Bay associations, tourist promotion is one of their major concerns. Yet right within this same government, there is The Department of Tourism and Information, which has established tourist councils. As Professor Krueger points out, it has created boundaries within which these tourist councils operate and the boundaries do not even coincide with the boundaries within other operations of that same department.

Certainly they do not coincide with the regional development associations' boundaries and there is no co-operation between the regional development associations.

What is the point? Here I find myself almost unwillingly beginning to stand with the hon. member for Grey North. What is the point of this government putting $150,000 into the regional development associations when it should be much, much more? But why should they be putting it into one organization to compete with the tourist councils when another department is putting money into another organization?

This, Mr. Chairman, is lunacy—administrative lunacy—and what I want from this government and from this hon. Minister is some indication of how the government proposes to resolve this kind of administrative chaos.

Let me go one step further, with another example of conflict. It is clear that if there are to be regional development associations, a look will have to be taken at county planning boards, because there is nothing more integral to regional development than modern planning. The prospect now is of joint county planning boards emerging as they have in Waterloo county, being authorized by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner). As Professor Krueger points out in his report, the terms of reference that have been given to the joint planning board in Waterloo county, are the development of the area.

This is in conflict with the regional development association. How is this going to be reconciled? When does the hon. Minister propose to reconcile it?

I will go one step further in detailing with this, because it is basic. It is idle for the hon. Minister to get up and give us some general talk about what he is planning to do, if he is not going to reconcile or resolve this utter confusion in his own department and the whole government. But when we get on to research, we find the hon. Minister has said that the chief economist of the province of Ontario is an agency that is going to co-ordinate and presumably reconcile some of the overlapping and the duplication in the research effort, which is becoming more and more necessary and more and more vital. In his report, Dr. Krueger referred to the kind of situation there is in research. He points out, for example—and I will quote just one example:

It appears that there is some overlap between these regional economic surveys and the regional studies done by the community planning branch. For example, not long after the community planning branch completed a comprehensive regional survey of the Niagara peninsula that took into consideration the economic base of the region, the special research and surveys branch carried out a completely independent economic survey that included an analysis of the regional planning problems.

Here we have, in rapid succession, two research agencies in the same government carrying out and doing a research job in the same area.

The hon. Minister is too endowed with common sense and is too much of a businessman to accept that as the kind of thing that can be tolerated. What is being done to make certain that kind of thing is going to be eliminated? Dr. Krueger added:

It appears to me that the province of Ontario is not gaining full value from government economic research activities because of a lack of co-ordination among the various research agencies. I am convinced that it would be useful to investigate thoroughly the function of all government research agencies and branches to ensure that not only is there not duplication of effort but that there is positive co-ordination of activities.

There is one other point in the basic analysis that was made at this conference which I was really struck with. This is the important potential that is involved in the ARDA programme today. In the province of Ontario ARDA has become limited to The Department of Agriculture. It is regarded as an agency with funds that can be used to revive certain dwindling aspects of the agricultural industry. But, Mr. Chairman, this was not the original concept of ARDA.

The original concept of ARDA was that it would take a rural community where agriculture was becoming a smaller and smaller aspect of the economy of that community and where a full economic development of it was wanted, which would involve not just the Minister of Agriculture and his department, but would involve this hon. Minister's department—indeed it could conceivably involve half the departments in this government.

It is very interesting that if one goes down to the province of Quebec—and I want to do this in a moment and take a look at some of the things they have done—one will find how seriously they have moved in, using the resources that have been made available from Ottawa. I have here, for example, another of these goldmines of information that were provided at the regional development conference, namely the papers that had been given at still another conference at Kingston back in January. This is the one that was given by Leonard O. Gertler. I understand this government thinks enough of him that they brought him in as one of the planners to set up their own conference. Well, just listen to one of the experts that you had, not somebody from Colombia or Holland or Sweden, but right back at home.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You will admit that we are not afraid to bring in the experts?

Mr. MacDonald: You are not afraid to bring them in but when are you going to start to take some of their advice and put it into effect?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think you have given us an opportunity this afternoon to reply to that.

Mr. MacDonald: Good. For example, this is what Mr. Gertler says:

One of the most striking demonstrations of the difference between the Quebec type of approach to the problems of economic development and the Ontario type is the relative importance placed on research in the ARDA programme.

Incidentally, if I may just interject here by way of a political aside, I would concede that Saskatchewan, back in its heyday, before it fell into its present unhappy state—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Before it was rescued.

Mr. MacDonald: —had some concept of economic development and was applying it. About the only other province that has a real concept of economic planning at this time is the province of Quebec. And they are doing it for the simple reason that there happen to be within their ranks people who are not afraid to call themselves socialists in the 20th century and who are promoting genuine economic development of a nature which, incidentally, I am certain would cause near panic in the ranks of their fellow Liberals here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): We will speak for ourselves.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me proceed with what Mr. Gertler was saying with reference to the ARDA programme:

In the figures released by the federal ARDA this past summer and projects at the end of the first full operational year of the federal-provincial programme, Quebec projects are shown to include an amount of $1,203,546 or 23 per cent of the total for research. While the amount for the purpose in Ontario is $187,405 or about six per cent of the total ARDA expenditures in this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has conceded, if one forgets for the moment the fact that ARDA in this province is so narrowly conceived—it is conceived as being a department of agriculture instead of a broad government approach in coping with the problems in the rural areas—even if one forgets that for a moment, the fact of the matter is that this hon. Minister says we are not sure exactly where we want to go. Well, you are going to find out where you want to go in any particular area by research, by investigation in depth and not merely by general survey.

I do not want to deprecate the kind of general surveys that have been done by the hon. Minister's department but they are no more than a first step toward the kind of mapping out of a programme in any specific area. You have money for doing that job. All you have to do is have the imagination and the initiative to work out the programme and you can tap the funds that are available in Ottawa. They are doing it in Quebec. You are not doing it. You wander around not knowing exactly what should be done in any one of the particular areas where a full ARDA programme might be developed.

Now, there is one other aspect, before I come to some general conclusions here, that I would like to draw to the attention of the House and to the hon. Minister as he contemplates the establishment of the machinery for an effective approach to regional development. I think there are some lessons that emerged very clearly and very quickly from your conference. And I am not impressed when the hon. Minister says they are still studying the presentation.

You are wasting a year, a year at the end of which your regional development associations are going to be floundering even more than they are at the present time. You come before this House with the proposal for a regional development branch. I submit you should have had your regional development branch established and staffed and into operation in many parts of the province, using these funds that are available from the federal office. Let us look at the way they did it in Quebec, for example, where they had a really intensive, serious approach to economic planning. You see, Mr. Chairman, the problem with this government is that they have reached the stage, as many active Tory politicians have, of paying lip service to economic planning, but they are really inhibited because economic planning is in basic conflict to Tory philosophy.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh yes, it is. Until a year ago you were not even paying lip service to it. The only kind of economic planning you had was the kind of economic planning that Robert Macaulay did where he came up with a 21-point programme by throwing together a lot of projects. Well, we will just see what real economic planners think about that kind of approach. For example, down in the eastern part of Quebec, Mr. Chairman, they have an area not unlike the eastern part of Ontario, which is now being examined for purposes of an ARDA programme. They established what is known as the eastern Quebec planning bureau. And here I am quoting from a paper that was presented to the conference downtown by Mr. Guy Coulombe, sociologist, and Mr. Francois Poulen, economist, to the eastern Quebec planning bureau. He says:

For the past 20 months the eastern Quebec planning bureau, staffed with some 80 specialists of different scientific disciplines, has been engaged in an experiment which we will now try to define.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, in this one area which might be described as the equivalent of one of our regional development associations, there are 80 specialists with the kind of intensive research work I referred to a moment ago, tackling the job to find out exactly what can be done. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is quite possible that this one project in Quebec has more specialists working on it than the hon. Minister has in his own department. The chief economist and all the various branches under the chief economist in the province of Ontario are, by comparison, toying with the whole problem.

And he points out that their approach to it is an analysis of all the problems in the area, not just taking a look at agriculture, or fisheries or forestry or any one of the constituent elements that make up the economy in that particular area, but an overall approach.

And he deplores, Mr. Chairman, for example, the proposition of individual projects that are just tossed in because they happen to be a good kind of gimmick, a kind of thing that Robert Macaulay trotted out for the last election—

Mr. Reilly: A very able man!

Mr. MacDonald: He may have been an able man but this was a pretty inadequate substitute for economic planning. He strung together 21 projects that went all the way from something in relation to the ONR up in Moosonee to something to meet southwestern Ontario's needs and something elsewhere, and this presumably was economic planning. What do these people say about that?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): What about our highway system, is that not the heart of economic planning?

Mr. MacDonald: It is part of it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is a pretty large part. How would you like to compare that to Quebec's policy?

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister should not be too boastful for too long about our situation because even there they are meeting the challenge and catching up.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What about the educational system in Ontario compared to Quebec?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to get drawn off by the hon. Minister. There are many very important elements involved in effective economic planning in the province of Ontario. I am not denying that roads and education, and the retraining which you are not doing, all these are factors in the picture, but they have all been dealt with as isolated factors. This is the very point I am making, you are not co-ordinating them.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, no, look at the results. Look at the position we are in today. Twenty years of good government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the weak applause was an appropriate reflection of the amount of applause that that comment should have brought. As a matter of fact, anybody who read Dr. Krueger's report of the indescribable administrative chaos that characterizes this government should be silent in shame at this point, silent in shame; and if the hon. Minister of Labour has not read it, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that one of the great problems of the regional development conference downtown is that if we are going to get regional development in this province, and I am really stealing my own conclusions, we have got to get it by Cabinet decisions, from the Prime Minister right down, and you have got to be aware of the chaos that is in existence, for example, between your own department and The Department of Education and resolve some of it. I know you are aware of these problems, but you have been living with them for 20 years instead of solving them.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I cannot accept that at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us not interject in a smug way and say it is all the best of the best possible worlds because we happen to have had a Tory government. The fact of the matter is that it is not, and you found out, if you learned the lessons of the regional development conference downtown, just how far away from perfection you are.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is about as extreme a statement as has been made all session.

An hon. member: You are on the wrong page.

Mr. MacDonald: If I am on the wrong page, I know what page I am on. Mr. Chairman, if I can get back to where I was before I was derailed by the hon. Minister of Labour.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I was referring to the objections of the economists who were involved in economic planning in this particular project in Quebec—their objections to the isolated project approach and the suggestion that this really achieved economic planning. What they said was this: "No matter how grandiose such projects may be, they neglect completely the background of fundamental economic imbalance of the region to which such projects should be integrated, and furthermore they contribute little to the human promotion of the regional population." Furthermore, if we may think back on Robert Macaulay and his 21-point programme that he went out to get votes with—and unfortunately he got more than the programme deserved—this is their observation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would not say that is the case.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You cannot argue with success.

An hon. member: You would make a good speech if you would leave some of that stuff out.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Quote:

We believe that the true solution to the miseries of the region is not in sprinkling a few industries or the construction of a few extra roads.

This is the wisdom of people who know something about economic planning. I submit that you take a look at it and get away from this rather facile collection of projects that is put together and is suggested as economic planning.

There is another rather interesting thing, and I go back now to Mr. Gertler's paper, given to the Queen's conference last January, in which he was contrasting the Ontario economic council, this organization that the hon. Minister is so proud of and my hon. colleague from Woodbine quite rightly demolished.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He knows nothing about it.

Mr. MacDonald: Who?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Your colleague.

Mr. MacDonald: With respect, I assert he knows far more about economic planning than the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am referring to the economic council.

Mr. MacDonald: Even the economic council!

Hon. Mr. Randall: No sir, no sir. He does not know the background of the economic council.

Mr. MacDonald: This is on the level of cocktail planning, as it was once described by David Lewis at Ottawa with regard to the Canada economic council. This proposition of a few people coming together infrequently and supervising some research project, is a pretty poor excuse for economic planning.

However, let me get back to Gertler. This is one of your experts.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We hired him, go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: You hired him, have you got him on the staff now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not yet, but we may have.

Mr. MacDonald: Well I think he was on your staff and then left to go out to a private concern. However, his comment was this—

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton East): Did you lose your page?

Mr. MacDonald: I will find it.

The membership of the council is similar in nature to its other Canadian counterpart.

He is talking about the Quebec council.

A cross-section of the economic and related professional community. What is of particular interest from the point of view of its role in policy-making is its integration with the government and its role in economic planning. The first is achieved in a number of ways.

1. By including in its membership certain individuals who have important oblique relationships to government functions—such as Jean-Claude La Haye, a planning consultant who is also a member of the provincial town planning commission and Paul Normandeau, a senior official of the general investment corporation.

2. By adding to the council five associate members representing key government activities, namely, the deputy Ministers of Trade and Industry, Agriculture, Natural Resources and Youth and the president of Hydro-Quebec.

And this, Mr. Chairman, is vitally important.

3. By making the council responsible to the Cabinet through the Prime Minister.

Here is planning at the level where it is going to be effective, for the co-ordination of all departments must take place if you are operating at all meaningfully and seriously.

4. By requiring council recommendations to be submitted first to a permanent ministerial committee composed of the Ministers of Trade and Industry, Natural Resources, Forestry, Agriculture and Colonization and Provincial Secretariat.

5. By the establishment of working groups made up mainly of officials from government departments aided by university consultants to initiate, undertake and supervise the studies required by the council.

Now there, Mr. Chairman, is an economic advisory council that is integrated with the government. It is not a detached body of citizens and yet it includes citizens that are going to provide a link with the economy in the business and the labour fields. It is integrated with the government at the Cabinet level. It is integrated with the government at the administrative, civil service level. It is responsible to the Cabinet directly through the Prime Minister.

This is economic planning that is meaningful and it is going to involve all of the agencies of the government. If you implement that kind of economic planning, you are going to have to resolve the administrative chaos—that you have in your own departments where a half-a-dozen departments are attempting to do the same thing.

Now, the interesting thing, Mr. Chairman, is that this kind of proposal is not really a new one for the province of Ontario. Professor Krueger, in his report, recalls rather an interesting episode in Ontario's history that got lost in the shuffle and that is that, back about 1950, there was a conservation committee in the province of Ontario. Indeed, I think it is rather well known to those who had any associations with it, that one of the main authors of its report was my predecessor in the leadership of this party, Ted Jolliffe, who was active in that committee and who was intensely interested in conservation.

But as Professor Krueger points out, in 1960, in belated fulfilment of the kind of recommendation that was made on conservation, this government moved to establish what is known as a Cabinet committee on conservation and land use. It involved the Ministers of the following departments or commissions. Agriculture, Economics and Development, Energy Resources, Highways, Lands and Forests, Mines, Municipal Affairs and Treasury. They met, apparently at both the civil service level and at the ministerial level, for policy and administrative purposes. Now, what was the result of all this? Well, apparently after a while, the Ministers lost interest. The committee really ceased to act.

Professor Krueger states that the real value of this committee was in the kind of co-ordination it established, though it was never followed through, at the administrative level with the top civil servants. Indeed, let me quote his exact words:

The greatest benefit arising from the Cabinet committee on conservation and land use was the better understanding of the roles and functions of the different departments gained by the civil servants. Branch chiefs from various departments were provided with the opportunity of discussing how their programmes were interrelated and what programmes they had in common. According to one participant, the committee was of value if it did nothing more than establish a rapport among various senior government officials.

A number of people mentioned that a perceptible improvement in interdepartmental co-ordination at the civil service level resulted from the meetings of the advisory committee.

However, Mr. Chairman, note this:

There is little evidence to indicate that the committee was very effective at the ministerial level or that it resulted in any co-ordination of major policies or programmes.

Mr. Chairman, I pause right there. The hon. Minister has said that he is going to establish a regional development branch. It is going to make recommendations to an interdepartmental high-level advisory group and the hon. Minister informed us that this would be composed of top civil servants.

I say to him right now that if this is as far as he is going, the hon. member for Grey North is right. The hon. Minister might as well cancel the $150,000 that he is pouring into his regional development associations. He is not going to resolve the conflict in his department; he is not going to get the co-ordinated effort that makes economic planning possible.

What has got to happen, I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and it is as clear as crystal to anybody who comprehended a modicum of the lessons that emerged from the regional development conference, is that there must be a decision by this government at the Cabinet level with the appropriate Ministers involved in a Cabinet committee working through the Prime Minister. If the chief economist is going to be the man through whom the regional development association branch works, he has got to be responsible directly to the Cabinet Ministers.

Because I say this to the hon. Minister, and I warn him that I am going to put him to the test next year, that if he thinks he is going to resolve the conflict, for example between the regional development associations and the tourist councils over in The Department of Tourism and Information without going right to the Cabinet level, he is mistaken. He knows that he has no control over what goes on over in that other department.

How is this hon. Minister going to resolve, through this regional development association, the conflict between regional development associations and joint planning boards involving the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs? He cannot do it. He may be able to resolve the conflict between regional development associations and industrial commissioners, this is right within his own department; but he cannot resolve them within any other department.

So I would say to the hon. Minister that if he is serious about regional development and the kind of economic planning at the top within which meaningful regional development can take place, he has got to go to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and say: "Look, John, I cannot do this job. It has to be done at your level and at the Cabinet level."

If he does not do that, he is wasting his time; he will have missed the basic lessons that emerged from the regional development conference downtown; and I have seen nothing in what the hon. Minister said yesterday that indicates that he is going to do it. He is going to go through the motions of reviving the regional development branch which simply cannot do the job of controlling and resolving the conflict throughout all the government departments.

I have talked longer than I intended and perhaps longer than I wished but, Mr. Chairman, this is an extremely important issue. If you go to New York you will see that Governor Rockefeller has blocked the state out into areas, and they have mapped a 25-year programme. If you listen to the experts right through to Jean Gottman of l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes of Paris and the author of Megalopolis, that classic study on the industrial complex of the northeastern United States, if you listen to his most dramatic and inspiring story of the kind of thing that is happening in regional development all across this world, you get some concept of what might be done in the province of Ontario.

But we have creaky, outdated, inadequate machinery to achieve it and the hon. Minister might just as well set his objectives away in mothballs along with Aunt Minnie's hoop skirt if he cannot sit down with the Cabinet and resolve the basic machinery that is required to achieve these objectives. I wish him well, but I warn him that I am, as well as more on this side of the House, going to come back to the issue next year when he has got his concept of how this can be achieved into operation. My only regret is that he has not got it into operation this year as it should have been.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted that the hon. member is on my side—and I say he is on my side because he attended the conference religiously for the three and a half days that we had it, together with some of the hon. members from the Liberal benches, and I am sure that what we have heard this afternoon as a result of attending the conference will show that he and I agree on many of the suggestions that he has put forward here today.

First, may I say that I feel complimented that the hon. member started out by saying that I am known as a "salesman's salesman." I have sold refrigerators to Eskimos and I have sold clothes driers in the Caribbean, but I also found that to get as far as I got in the business world, you cannot take conversation to the bank. Eventually you have to come home with an order and I do not believe that government business is any different. Now maybe it is—maybe we can hand out lots of conversation, entertain everybody day in and day out, but eventually if you are a Minister responsible for a department, sooner or later a plan must be evolved that will work. I think that since I took over The Department of Economics and Development we have had some plans that are working very, very successfully. I am quite sure that this one on regional development is going to work, but I assure the hon. member, although I do not think that I have to, that this is a big problem and not one we should rush into just because we have had a conference and just because we have had one report from Professor Krueger. I think that he is a very well-informed man and did an excellent job on the report. In fact, as I said, we employed him to do the job.

Mr. MacDonald: It was a devastating job.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could care less. That is why we invited him. I am glad that Mr. Gertler accepted our invitation to help put the conference together. If we cannot take criticism, then we should avoid conferences and I assure the hon. member that I do not intend to walk away from criticism of my department or anything that my department can do to assist the economy of this province. But I want to assure the hon. member that, having studied some of the papers and many of the presentations, not only at Queen's but here, and read a great many people who know something about regional development and economic planning, I know that this is not a programme that this government or any government should rush into overnight.

I announced a year ago in the House that we were going to have a conference and we had the conference. I agree with the hon. member that a year from today I should come back with some activity that he will approve of, otherwise we have wasted a year and I do not intend to waste a year. I have not got that time to waste. I will say to him that we have economic reports in this province second to none in Canada. They can be improved; we are not complacent about them. Much of the information we have given the House this year to date indicates that we do have a department that is producing facts and figures on every area of the province. The information, I believe, during the next few months will enable us to put together a plan and a programme for regional development that really matters and will work.

I think also that we must remember the Krueger report is a one-man or a two-man study, and there are others that I hope we will have before we make any major decision. I can assure the hon. member that we certainly cannot bypass the Cabinet and have any Minister make a decision of this magnitude without having the complete support of the hon. Prime Minister and every member of the Cabinet.

When this programme is approved, I do not believe we will get the same action by having busy Cabinet members meet every week or two weeks or two or three days a week, that we will get if we have civil servants and men such as Professor Krueger and others who, I think, along with our chief economist, will make the plan work and work as fast as possible in the areas where we want it to operate.

I believe that having had the conference, putting together the staff under the chief economist now, and recognizing that no economic programme can operate without these economic facts, it is easy to say we are going to have a plan and that we are going to start off tomorrow and wave a banner. But I think we have to put the bodies together and put the right bodies together to make sure that when we do have a plan it is a success, because we cannot live on failures.

Now I agree that the regional development programme that we have had in Ontario has been inadequate. In a sense I think it could have done a lot more, but this is one department that perhaps needed a lot more study than some of the others. I came into the House last year and we put together the Sheridan Park corporation. We put the housing corporation together, and I think that before long we will put together a regional development programme that will work just as effectively.

But I want to make sure that when we do put this plan together—and we do have the sums of money voted for regional development—we spend them in the right areas. Certainly, we, in our conversations with the federal authorities, have been advised time and time again in the last several months, that they want to co-ordinate regional activities with us. As I said earlier, their man has been in here and certainly we should not start on one plan and have them start on another.

We have to co-ordinate, I believe, with not only the municipalities; we certainly have to co-ordinate with the federal authorities. This, I am sure, is going to be done. I have no doubt that the federal authorities are just as interested in spending their dollar as wisely as we are in spending ours. When the plan is put together, it will be at the Cabinet level and approved at the Cabinet level and it will be voted on at the Cabinet level.

Also, I recognize, that every Minister here has something to do with regional development. Certainly, we cannot ignore The Department of Municipal Affairs, The Department of Highways and The Department of Tourism and Information. These departments have been making a contribution to regional development over the years. But I agree, we have said amongst ourselves that perhaps we are not getting credit for what we are doing in regional development and perhaps it is time we put the programme together and we advertised it as a complete package, instead of every Minister doing his share, but not getting credit for what he is contributing to regional development.

Now, I listened to many of the gentlemen from Europe, as you did. We listened to the man from Sweden who, I thought, presented an excellent paper, and the man from Holland, and I believe it was the man from Holland who said that we ask ourselves after all the years of planning, did it mean anything, what would have happened if we had not planned? I think it was the gentleman from Holland who said that, and the Swedish speaker agreed. Well, we do not know, but so far we have been successful, so why quibble about success? This is one of the things of which, I think, we have to be very careful. If we are going to put a programme together, I would certainly hope that I would be associated, and this government would be associated with a success story, not a failure. That is one of the reasons why I believe we have to find out, through the other departments, where we will work with them.

For instance, you brought up the area of tourist councils. We have already had meeting with the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld). We have already started in the field to work with these tourist groups. I think we can work with them. I have no doubt we can work with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs in the planning aspect. I am working with him every day in the week on urban development. We have had no conflict of interests, and, I think, before we move in any direction, I can assure you that we do sit down and discuss where our department works with theirs.

This is also true in working with The Department of Labour and The Department of Education. We have all been involved in talking about regional development since the conference, I can assure you. There is no intention on the part of this department to rush into a half-baked programme. I recognize that perhaps it is long past due. I recognize along with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), with whom we had a chat a few days ago about the same thing, that ARDA is something that could be and should be, certainly, co-ordinated with any department on regional development. Certainly, to go on our own and start a programme would be a waste of time, a waste of money, and I certainly think a waste of energies and effort.

Now, I cannot attempt to answer all the questions you posed, because I did not write them all down, but perhaps the situation in Quebec is really not comparable with Ontario. I think we have to recognize that. They have a lot further to come. In Europe today, we hear about Greece being the country that had the greatest growth over the last few years, or since the post-war years, but perhaps that is because they have the farthest to come. Now this is quite true in many countries in Europe, as I think most of us recognize. Today, Spain is moving past Greece, because it is upping its productivity and it is improving its living standards.

The Minister of Labour in Quebec yesterday, as reported in the Globe and Mail this morning, said that he wanted control over the labour situation in the province of Quebec. Perhaps you read that, because he said he did not want them being attracted to dynamic Ontario. So I think that perhaps we do not recognize the things that we have here with which we have done a good job—you other people do recognize this. I do not believe in saying that, that it should be assumed that I am complacent. I am not a bit complacent about some of the areas in Ontario, not even in the Golden Horseshoe that our hon. friend from Grey North talked about a few minutes ago.

But all this matter of regional development is tied in with the Ontario development agency, it is tied in with the tourist industry, it is tied in with labour, it is tied in with municipal affairs. For me to produce a programme here today and say, Well, we have had the conference, here is the programme, we want to get cracking with it; I think would be a mistake. I think a year from now you would really be able to fry me, because I do not believe I could put a programme together that fast and make it work.

But I have had a number of discussions with the hon. Prime Minister. I have had a number of discussions with my hon. colleagues in Cabinet. We know that when we put this programme together that we have to have a co-ordinated effort and whether this high-level committee will consist of all Cabinet Ministers or all Deputy Ministers or civil servants, remains to be seen. But whatever the committee is, I can assure you that it will be a committee that will work and work together in the interests of all departments. Knowing what is involved, we have to work with other departments. It is obvious we cannot go it alone on regional development.

Now you made some comments about how do we correlate the activities of the regional development group with the industrial commissioners. As you know, the industrial commissioners are hired by a city such as Oshawa or Bowmanville or Windsor and they work entirely different from regional development. They are interested in that city or that particular boundary.

Mr. MacDonald: That is part of the problem, though.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, it is part of the problem, but we do not subsidize them. We have nothing to do with them, as you appreciate, but every industrial commissioner is in touch with our industrial development department, because he wants us to know that he has developed land on which he would like to have new industry. When they beat a path to our door, as we point out in the book here, it is because they say: "Well, you fellows are going abroad, inviting industry to come into Canada—at least into the province of Ontario—will you make sure that they know that in Bowmanville or in Oshawa or Windsor we would welcome new industry?"

We have in many instances, as we show you here in this report, been able to get industry to move into these other areas. They are not all in the Golden Horseshoe. I think last year, if I remember the figures correctly, I mentioned that 80 per cent of them were within 100 miles of Toronto, not necessarily in the Golden Horseshoe.

But again I only suggest this to you, that we recognize that the services of industrial commissioners are invaluable. They perform a somewhat different function to the regional development group that we are talking about now who look after an entire group like Georgian Bay. I can assure you also, since the conference, that if I had correspondence from the nine associations before, I get recommendations and motions and reports almost every day in the week now, because they recognize that we have taken, and will take, an interest in the area with which they are concerned.

Now, just to conclude without getting into too lengthy a discussion on this, you read the names of the people who are on the board of directors of the Quebec economic council and I am very impressed with these gentlemen. I do not think I know any of them, but I think we have got a pretty impressive board on the Ontario economic council, too. For instance, we have David Archer, president of the Ontario federation of labour. I think you would agree that he is a pretty sound individual and rather co-operative with us and business in general.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister will permit me, he is missing my point. My point was that the Quebec economic council involved people who were integrated with government at various levels.

Sure, David Archer is a very capable person. But he comes and he meets two or three times a year in the economic council. Is that going to produce economic planning? Of course, it cannot and will not. What you want is a group of people integrated at the government level, along with others from the community, so that you get the tie with the community, so that you have got an on-going, serious organization and not just a periodic—I was going to say gabfest, but that might be unkind.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think that is quite right. Let us look at the rest of these people on here. We have Mr. Clarkson, our Deputy Minister; Mr. Ray Engholm, president and general manager of Marcotta Company and vice-president of the Canadian manufacturers association. You have got George Gathercole, who was the economic planner for this government, I think, for 14 years. You have got Rowland Hill, regional director of the international union of operating engineers. I think he is a pretty qualified fellow. You have got Purvis Littlejohn, member of the board of governors of the Ontario federation of agriculture. I think he is interested in the ARDA programme. You have Ian McRae, chairman of the board of the General Electric Company's atomic energy group, I think he is interested in the success we have in the province of Ontario. You have Mr. J. H. Moore, president of John Labatts Limited; I think he is a gentleman who cannot afford to waste his time belonging to any kind of a group unless we can get some action. You have Charles Monroe, member of the board of governors of the Ontario federation of agriculture, you have Mrs. Plumptre, national president, consumers association of Canada, and if you read any of Mrs. Plumptre's reports I think you would know she is a pretty astute lady and does an excellent job for the economic council of Canada, as well as being on the board of this association. We have Larry Sefton, director of the united steelworkers of America; Harry Sheppard, past president of International Business Machines, and now the chief commissioner of LCBO. So you see we have a pretty good conglomeration—

Mr. MacDonald: A very spirited group.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You bet they are. We have Roy Thompson, past president of the Ontario regional development council and now the industrial commissioner for the ONR. We have Ross Willis, vice-president, University of Western Ontario—

Mr. MacDonald: Do you want me to bring a few letters from a few of those people on what they think of the effectiveness of the council?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have Mr. Stadleman, treasurer of the Ontario research foundation; we have just got Mr. Douglas Gibson, who is the executive vice-president and deputy chairman of the board of the Bank of Nova Scotia who, I think, was very active in putting together the Royal commission's report on banking for Ottawa. These are pretty able people.

All I want to point out is: I do not think we can deprecate the work of the Ontario economic council with the kind of people we have on the board.

Now, just let me clear one thing. This council does not have a large staff of economists behind it; they are a group from industry, from agriculture, from the universities, economists, to advise the government. Now we can either take the advice they give the government or we can tell them that we cannot act on it. They are an advisory body. They are not set up as a planning board. Perhaps we could change them into a planning board and give them twice as much money as they have right now and let them hire economists but we do not think they will be as effective as they are, doing exactly what they are doing; and with our own economics development setup we believe that we are in a position to do many of the things that they recommend and do them perhaps more quickly than they could by setting up a separate organization.

Again, I do not think it can be compared with an area like Quebec where they are going through not only a social but an industrial revolution. More power to them, I hope they are successful and I hope they are going to be more successful. I might say to the hon. member that there is not a department of this government that similar departments in Quebec have not visited. They have sat down with our people and asked our advice and worked with us. And we have been glad to give it. In trying to reply to some of the comments the hon. member has made, I just want to say that I concur wholeheartedly with him on the fact that we must have a good, sound, active regional development programme.

And where the regional development branch is now may not be the same position a year from now or when we get the plan worked out. But in the meantime they cannot make any move without economic facts, and this is why we have tied them in with the chief economist because he is working with the various Ministers here. And I would think that when this programme is put together, if we call it a regional development branch, or whatever we call it, they will be closely allied in the months ahead. I think this bodes success. If we do not do this I am quite sure that we would be here a year from now with either no plan or one that is not successful. As I said earlier, I have no time to waste, I am not going to give the hon. member a lot of conversation because I believe that you cannot take that to the banks, you eventually have to produce results.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the hon. Minister's reply to the hon. member for York South and I might say in my opinion that the reply surrounded by all the words—even though the hon. Minister says he is not here to waste time and to use excess words—the reply indicates more clearly than anything else, at least as clearly as the hon. member for York South said, but it is more effective I suppose when it comes from the hon. Minister—that not only is there no programme, there is no idea of how to begin a programme. There is no thought of regional development.

I was interested because the hon. Minister did reply to the Opposition critics from both parties in the different approach than he has from his predecessor. He obviously discards all that Mr. Macaulay put forward. There was not a time when Mr. Macaulay used to rise in this House but that he did not have a seven-point programme for this or a 21-point programme for that, or a 97-point programme for something else. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, very few of those points ever came to pass, but it sounded good and at least when that Minister came into the House in his time he said, if there was a problem like regional development, "Here is a programme 1, 2, 3, 4, 5," and then he repeated it and had variations and so on. But at least he was thinking about it.

The thing that is very disappointing, the thing that is so disappointing about the hon. Minister's reply is not his admission that he has not a positive programme to present now, but that he has not even a thought of how a programme is going to be organized. I wonder if he bothered to read the report of the select committee on The Municipal Act and related Acts? That spells out in some detail the deliberations of an all-party committee of the House; and the conclusion is obvious: Representatives of all parties agree unanimously that there must be a form of regional government. Now I think you have to start there. One of the important criteria that will go into determining the size of regions and the boundaries and so on has to be the economic problem.

This would presumably lie with the hon. Minister's estimates which are before us now, Mr. Chairman.

But surely you cannot expect to get into any programme of regional development unless someone in government is prepared to reorganize the whole municipal setup.

The puzzle to me, Mr. Chairman, is that we have not heard a word from the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs about the economic phase of regional development. This hon. Minister this afternoon says, "I will, I will do, I have done. There may be a programme that will come forward that will consist of the Deputy Ministers' planning, there may be some Ministers in it, Cabinet will approve."

Well, Cabinet, I presume, approves of everything that you do and say in broad principle. Certainly when you come before us and ask for whatever dollars you are asking for today, the hon. Prime Minister had given his approval to this or otherwise you would not be asking for that many dollars.

Your Cabinet colleagues undoubtedly approve, but that is not the sort of thing that is needed in this situation. The sort of thing that is needed is a revolutionary approach to municipal organization in the province of Ontario, an approach that will replace this broken down horse and buggy system that we have been operating on since 1849 when Borden brought in his municipal Act, and it has not been substantially changed since that time.

We must recognize, surely the hon. Minister must recognize, nothing is going to bubble from the bottom up; there are not suddenly going to be great flocks of our 972 municipalities rush in and say: "Let's get into your regional plan; we do not know what it is, but that is what we need."

There has to be direction come from the hon. Minister and his colleagues, or whoever is saddled with that responsibility, from the government of the province of Ontario to bring regional government about on a proper basis.

The hon. Minister must have been here when his colleague, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs stood in his place a few weeks ago and said: "Now I have ten studies that I think should be done"; and he named the areas in which these were going to be done. And he said: "I will be very lucky if I get the people to conduct these studies in more than three or four or five of these instances which I named."

How does this hon. Minister plan research? I think we deserve this answer, I think we need this answer. How does he plan to join in these studies? Is he assisting Murray Jones in his study in Ottawa now? Did he or his department or his advisors or his statisticians go before Mr. Goldenberg when he was investigating a regional problem here in Metropolitan Toronto?

And the other plans that are beginning to be investigated in the Niagara peninsula, and the three or four others that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs named that he was going to start on immediately: Is there anyone from the department, Mr. Chairman, who is allocated to go before these people who are conducting the inquiries and give them economical information so they can come to reasonable conclusions?

This is the sort of thinking that surely should be going on right now. Otherwise, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, this hon. Minister's colleague, is working at cross-purposes from him, because if he is going to have more studies done that do not have a real analysis of the economic features in them, then those studies are a waste of time.

His promise to this House and to the people of Ontario was that he is going to try to get as many of these 10 or 12 that he enumerated done as quickly as possible. He admitted, quite frankly, that he might be able to get only four done this year. What is this hon. Minister's role in this? Is he even aware that these studies are going on? Which one of his officials has been allocated to serve with Jones, Goldenberg, or whoever the other people are and to assist them?

None of this has come forward at all. It seems to me that with all the good will in the world and all the ability that the hon. Minister believes is vested in himself—and he is not modest about patting himself on the back and we will give him full credit if he comes forward with something—with all of that ability he still has not turned his mind to regional development, and his colleagues have not, and it is still departmentalized. He does a little bit, and his colleague, the hon. Minister of Highways, does a little bit and the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information does a bit and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is trying to do a bit, too, and is conducting some studies.

There must have been 20 studies done on the Niagara peninsula in the last 10 years. They are all sitting on somebody's shelf and gathering dust. We have not had a regional plan for the Niagara peninsula.

The hon. Minister talks about these industrial commissioners. They come to him and say, "We have service land in Bowmanville or Oshawa," or wherever it is. Does any industrial commission go to the hon. Minister and say, "Our area is dying because we do not have industrial development, but we do not have industrial development because we have no services. We have no water; we have no sewers; we have no road facilities"? Is the hon. Minister faced with that problem?

There are many regions that find themselves with that problem. If the hon. Minister is faced with that problem, what does he do about it? Is that part of his responsibility or is it part of the responsibility of the hon. Ministers of Highways and Municipal Affairs? Who does something about them? Or is there a municipality that appoints an industrial commissioner even if they have not got services? Because, after all, the council may say, "What is the point of getting an industrial commissioner to attract industry when we cannot service it?" In the meantime, the area is in difficulty.

Should the hon. Minister not be concerning himself with having services available so that industries will come into areas which have a surplus of labour, which have difficulties in balancing their assessments and all that sort of thing? This is the sort of thing, really, that I hoped we would have heard, but unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we have heard none of this and the hon. Minister says that he cannot bring in a plan because we would not want a premature plan or because he has not even thought who is going to plan it.

We were entitled to hear, and have not heard, and this is the real criticism. We were entitled, Mr. Chairman, and we have not heard anything new in this field that has not been said and repeated in different types of language, depending on which Minister occupied which seat over the period of the last six years since I have been here.

There is no desire on the part of government to get at this problem in a co-ordinated way and unless something radically changes, unless there is a government policy that is really going to mean something with real co-ordination—not a Cabinet approval of a general policy but a real working co-ordination between the various departments that are interested in this and that have to be interested—we will be no further ahead twelve months from now than we are today.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I should like to add one comment, Mr. Chairman. I do not know how long it took to get that municipal report put together but I not only went through it, I also sat and listened to the hon. member read most of it in the House. I do not pretend to understand all of it because I was not on the committee; I was not living with it for two or three years; however, it is one other reason why I do not think that I would be justified in rushing out and coming back in with a programme just because the report is finished. I think it consists of many hundreds of pages and the things that the hon. member has brought out certainly have to be studied by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, and his recommendations would have to come out of that report before I could assume that I have all the answers and run with the report and set up a programme.

I think what the hon. member said points out the fact that if we are going to have a programme, let us not be premature but make good use of the material that is now becoming available. Let me also say that there are not enough hours in a day to read all the reports that come across our desks, and I think that I speak for everybody here. But I do not think that reports, as a rule, are going to give us a development programme or going to build houses. We can get report on top of report. I agree with the hon. member that we have to have some action and my hope is that now that we have some of these reports, now that we have had this conference, now that we recognize that there is a regional development programme in the offing, we get busy and get it done. Certainly there will be more reports and more economic facts that will have to be found in various areas and I think that the hon. member will be the first to agree that one simply does not go out and shovel programmes down the throats of the municipal officers when they are elected by their people. They have to be consulted because perhaps at the grass-roots level we get the best advice as to what kind of a programme will fit in the province of Ontario.

I want to assure the hon. member that the comments he has made are welcomed and if he has any suggestions to make—both he and his party—that are constructive in putting the programme together, let us have them. We will listen to anybody.

Mr. Newman: One year ago, sir, the report of the Windsor economic council had been submitted and one of the recommendations in there was the fact that the location of institutional facilities may have a marked economic effect on the community. Has the department any studies to indicate the effect of governmental or institutional facilities on a community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that yesterday in my presentation of the estimates, I pointed out that in the eastern part of Ontario the building up of some of the government institutions there added to the economic welfare of that part of Ontario, and that while they were looking for industry and more agricultural assistance, nonetheless those institutions did make a contribution.

I concur with the hon. member's comments. I think they do make a contribution to an area and certainly this is another matter that should be seriously considered when this government, or any government, is spreading its institutions across the province into areas where an institution would very well fit.

I can think of Aylmer, Ontario, where they had that disastrous fire a few weeks ago. As you know, the Ontario provincial police have taken over the old airfield down there and it is now used as their training school. In talking to my colleague, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), he informed me that they were adding staff down there, and there were more police being trained. I would certainly think that in that area where they need industry and cannot get it overnight, this institution would make a contribution to the economic welfare of that part of the country.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the hon. Minister if he will be prepared to recommend to the government that institutions be decentralized and set up in various parts of Ontario? Does he plan on making recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Frankly, I do not have sufficient information at the moment to make a definite statement on that. This is one of the things that I certainly think we will carefully consider when we make recommendations to our colleagues who are responsible for these institutions, that they give every consideration to our regional development planning.

Mr. Newman: Does the department plan on inducing industry to locate in regions outside the Golden Horseshoe?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not have a definite plan except that we are all putting on, let us say pressure, to get new industry to go into other areas. This is of interest to us as well as to the hon. members. I think it would be a wonderful thing if we could have a payroll down Main Street in every town in Ontario that would keep the unemployed in that town fully employed the year round.

Again, this comes back to, do we want to insist that industry go to certain areas or do we want to let the entrepreneur choose his site? All we can do is to show him, as we do in our industrial development department, the choice sites that are available, the areas where we think his plant would fit and perhaps would be more welcomed than others, the amenities that he and his employees would enjoy by not being in the crowded city of Toronto or the metropolitan area; and hope that this persuasion will have its effect over the years to come.

Mr. Newman: Is the hon. Minister prepared to use incentives to get industry to locate in certain areas, such as the federal people have with their tax reduction programmes and so forth?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have no plans at the present time to use incentives. We have not found the need for using incentives in the province of Ontario. As you know, the federal government are about to remove the designated areas. They have some other plans that we have talked about, and I would hope, before too long, that there will be an announcement that there will be a joint programme between the provinces and the federal government to assist in the diversification of industry in the areas such as those of which the hon. member was speaking, the slow growth areas, to get them out of the crowded metropolitan area where at the present time we are getting much of the industry and much of the expansion.

But again, I think that industry itself is recognizing that there are many advantages to not being in the Metro area.

Mr. Newman: Does the hon. Minister not think that possibly Hydro could be one of the means which the government could use in attracting industry into slow growth areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There have been a number of discussions with the Hydro people with reference to their role in diversifying industry. I think in some areas that perhaps it would be welcomed; or on the other hand this is a matter that has not been discussed in detail. I think we have low power rates in Ontario compared to many other areas and I think it is something we could consider in the future. We could talk to the Hydro people and see if they would have an interest.

Mr. Newman: About seven months ago, Mr. Minister, you were in my area and you mentioned the fact that an economic survey was going to be made of the area, that Windsor was going to be the first area to have its industrial resources inventoried in a programme that eventually was going to completely cover the province. Now the survey was going to provide an analysis of the area's population, labour force, industry, transportation, trade and other industrial factors. You suggested that this type of study could counter the concentration of industry in the Toronto-Hamilton area and would be a definite advantage when it would come to selling the community.

Has this survey for the Windsor area been completed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I understand the survey is almost completed and will be released very shortly.

Mr. Newman: It will be released?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Newman: Will it be made available to the hon. members of the House?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It certainly will.

Mr. Newman: Does the hon. Minister plan on conducting similar surveys throughout the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think yes, in relation to this programme we talked about this afternoon it is almost an essential that we conduct these studies.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, my remarks may take a few moments and I am just wondering, in view of the time, if you would want to carry on?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes; I think this is an appropriate hour for the committee to rise.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, Thursday, we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development; and should they be completed we will proceed and continue with the estimates of The Department of Highways. There will be a night sitting tomorrow evening and on Friday morning we will have Budget debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

APPENDIX

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

Tables showing orders of magnitude for employment and production if the Ontario economy is operating at full potential in 1970—Economics Branch, Ontario Department of Economics and Development, April 26, 1965.

Table 1
POTENTIAL EMPLOYMENT IN ONTARIO IN 1970, BY INDUSTRY (Thousands)

Goods sector	Census number		Potential 1970	Average annual change ('000)
	1951	1961		1951-61	Potential 1961-70
Extractive goods
Agriculture (labour force)	201.5	168.8	135	-3.3	-3.8
Fishing and trapping (labour force)	2.2	2.2	3	—	0.1
Forestry	21.0	16.7	13	-0.3	-0.4
Mining	30.1	42.2	39	1.2	-0.4
Total extractive goods	254.8	229.9	190	-2.4	-4.4
Secondary goods
Manufacturing	591.2	627.1	764	3.6	15.2
Construction	100.3	123.8	175	2.2	5.7
Electric power and gas utilities	24.8	26.5	32	0.2	0.6
Water and other utilities	5.9	2.5	4	-0.3	0.2
Total secondary goods	722.2	779.9	975	5.8	21.7
Total goods sector	977.0	1,009.7	1,165	3.3	17.3
Service sector
Transportation, storage and communication*	117.8	140.0	192	2.2	5.8
Trade (wholesale and retail)	216.2	306.5	440	9.0	14.8
Finance, insurance and real estate	57.1	91.3	130	3.4	4.3
Public administration† and defence	116.7	196.8	239	8.0	4.7
Community services, total	109.8	205.2	336	9.5	14.5
Education	42.1	86.8	140	4.5	5.9
Health	48.8	95.5	168	4.7	8.1
Other	18.9	22.9	28	0.4	0.6
Recreation services	9.8	14.6	33	0.5	2.0
Business services	18.5	34.6	60	1.6	2.8
Personal services	81.1	121.0	176	4.0	6.0
Misc. services	2.9	19.3	33	1.6	1.5
Total service sector	730.0	1,129.1	1,639	39.9	56.7
Unspecified	17.7	48.1	63	3.0	1.7
Total of above	1,724.6	2,186.8	2,867	46.2	75.6
Coverage differential	151	134	88	-1.7	-5.1
Total employment	1,876‡	2,321§	2,955¶	44.5	70.4
Total unemployment	32	131	60	9.9	-7.9
Total labour force	1,908	2,452	3,015	54.4	62.6
Unemployment ratio	1.7%	5.6%	2.0%

*Excludes post office

†Includes post office

‡Includes 38,000 in armed forces

§Includes 59,000 in armed forces

¶Includes 37,000 in armed forces

Note: From Forestry down to Total service sector the concept is "paid workers."

The item coverage differential results from a different coverage basis between the decennial census taken in June of the census year and the annual average of the monthly labour force survey.

Table 2
PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION OF EMPLOYMENT IN ONTARIO

	1951	1961	1970
Goods sector
Extractive goods
Agriculture (labour force)	11.7	7.7	4.7
Fishing and trapping (labour force)	0.1	0.1	0.1
Forestry	1.2	0.8	0.5
Mining	1.7	1.9	1.4
Total extractive goods	14.7	10.5	6.6
Secondary goods
Manufacturing	34.3	28.7	26.6
Construction	5.8	5.7	6.1
Electric power and gas utilities	1.4	1.2	1.1
Water and other utilities	0.3	0.1	0.1
Total secondary goods	41.9	35.7	34.0
Total goods sector	56.7	46.2	40.6
Service sector
Transportation, storage and communication*	6.8	6.4	6.7
Trade (wholesale and retail)	12.5	14.0	15.3
Finance, insurance and real estate	3.3	4.2	4.5
Public administration (†) and defence	6.8	9.0	8.3
Community services, total	6.4	9.4	11.7
Education	2.4	4.0	4.9
Health	2.8	4.4	5.9
Other	1.1	1.0	1.0
Recreation services	0.6	0.7	1.2
Business services	1.1	1.6	2.1
Personal services	4.7	5.5	6.1
Miscellaneous services	0.2	0.9	1.2
Total service sector	42.3	51.6	57.2
Unspecified	1.0	2.2	2.2
Total of above	100.0	100.0	100.0

*Excludes post office.

†Includes post office.

Table 3
POTENTIAL VALUE OF PRODUCTION IN 1970, ONTARIO
(Millions of current value dollars)

	1956	1963	1970
Goods sector
Extractive goods
Agriculture, fishing and trapping	415	537	695
Forestry	73	60	65
Mining	358	454	600
Total extractive goods	846	1,051	1,360
Secondary goods
Manufacturing	3,885	5,070	8,250
Construction	617	739	1,515
Public utilities	382	560	940
Total secondary goods	4,884	6,369	10,705
Total goods sector	5,730	7,420	12,065
Service sector
Transportation, storage and communication	850	1,120	1,480
Trade (wholesale and retail)	1,470	2,025	3,360
Finance, insurance and real estate and services	2,265	3,925	7,760
Public administration and defence	695	1,140	1,915
Total service sector	5,280	8,210	14,515
Total value of production at factor cost	11,010	15,630	26,580

*If Ontario achieves its potential, its value of production by 1970 will exceed that of all Canada 15 years earlier, in 1955 ($24,326 million).

Note: In Ontario the value of production in the service sector exceeded that in the goods sector for the first time in 1959, and the figures in the table indicate continued broadening of the differences.

Table 4

PERCENTAGE CHANGES OVER 7-YEAR INTERVALS, 1956 TO 1963
AND 1963 TO POTENTIAL 1970, FOR TOTAL VALUE OF PRODUCTION
AT FACTOR COST, BY INDUSTRY, ONTARIO

(Based on current value dollars)

Goods sector	1956-1963	1963-1970
Extractive goods
Agriculture, fishing and trapping	29.4	29.4
Forestry	-17.8	8.3
Mining	26.8	32.2
Total extractive goods	24.2	29.4
Secondary goods
Manufacturing	30.5	62.7
Construction	19.8	105.0
Public utilities	46.6	67.9
Total secondary goods	30.4	68.1
Total goods sector	29.2	62.6
Service sector
Transportation, storage and communication	31.8	32.1
Trade (wholesale and retail)	37.8	65.9
Finance, insurance, real estate and services	73.3	97.7
Public administration and defence	64.0	68.0
Total service sector	55.5	76.8
Total value of production at factor cost	42.0	70.1

Table 5

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION BY INDUSTRY OF TOTAL VALUE OF PRODUCTION AT FACTOR COST IN ONTARIO, 1956, 1963 AND POTENTIAL 1970

(Based on current value dollars)

Goods sector	1956	1963	1970
Extractive goods
Agriculture, fishing and trapping	3.8	3.5	2.6
Forestry	0.7	0.4	0.2
Mining	3.3	2.9	2.3
Total extractive goods	7.7	6.8	5.1
Secondary goods
Manufacturing	35.3	32.4	31.0
Construction	5.6	4.7	5.7
Public utilities	3.5	3.6	3.5
Total secondary goods	44.4	40.7	40.3
Total goods sector	52.0	47.5	45.4
Service sector
Transportation, storage and communication	7.7	7.1	5.6
Trade (wholesale and retail)	13.4	13.0	12.6
Finance, insurance, real estate and services	20.6	25.1	29.2
Public administration and defence	6.3	7.3	7.2
Total service sector	48.0	52.5	54.6
Total gross domestic product at factor cost	100.0	100.0	100.0

Table 6
 POTENTIAL GROWTH IN MANUFACTURING, BY INDUSTRIAL GROUP, 1964-1970
 CANADA

	Compound Annual Growth Rates				Production Indexes of (1949=100)		Compound Annual Growth Rates
	1949-51	1949-51	1959	1963	Indexes of		1964-1970 to 1964	to 1956	to 1964	to 1964	1964	1970	%
	%	%	%	%
Non-durables
Foods and beverages	3.8	4.3	3.3	7.3	174.0	225.0	4.4
Tobacco and products	5.6	6.6	3.5	3.0	214.0	270.0	4.0
Rubber products	4.6	5.2	5.8	12.2	213.8	320.0	7.0
Leather products	2.3	3.3	1.6	2.8	130.5	150.0	2.5
Textiles	3.4	1.3	6.7	8.0	172.3	260.0	7.1
Clothing	2.2	2.6	3.7	-0.9	135.8	160.0	2.8
Paper products	3.6	4.0	4.3	9.0	179.0	230.0	4.3
Printing, publishing, etc.	3.5	5.0	2.8	5.0	164.6	210.0	4.1
Products of petroleum and coal	7.3	11.3	4.7	2.8	304.2	420.0	5.5
Chemical products	7.0	8.2	6.1	12.3	279.8	465.0	8.8
Misc. manufacturing	6.5	5.3	7.4	6.2	261.9	405.0	7.5
Total	4.1	4.6	4.2	7.1	184.8	256.8	5.7
Durables
Wood products	3.2	4.3	4.1	4.8	166.7	215.0	4.3
Iron and steel products	3.9	5.3	4.3	12.6	182.1	270.0	6.8
Transportation equipment	4.1	5.7	8.6	9.7	198.9	325.0	8.5
Non-ferrous metal products	3.1	3.9	3.7	8.7	161.8	215.0	4.8
Electrical apparatus and supplies	5.6	9.5	5.3	6.9	239.0	345.0	6.3
Non-metallic mineral products	6.8	9.6	4.5	14.2	277.6	475.0	9.4
Total	4.2	5.9	5.2	9.7	192.9	286.7	6.8
Total manufacturing	4.1	5.2	4.7	8.3	188.3	270.6	6.2

No. 80

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, April 29, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, April 29, 1965

Report, standing committee on privileges and elections, Mr. Boyer	2379
Estimates, Department of Economics and Development, Mr. Randall, continued	2380
Recess, 6 o'clock	2411

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1965

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, in the west gallery, students from Gravenhurst high school, Gravenhurst.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka) from the standing committee on privileges and elections presented the committee's report, which was read as follows and adopted:

The committee recommends to the House that the report of the special commission on redistribution of electoral districts in Ontario be referred back to that commission, in order that the commission may give consideration to submissions relating to the electoral district boundaries made by interested persons, or to be made by such persons, during such period as the commission may prescribe; in considering such submissions that the commission also consider population trends and up-to-date population figures, and report to the legislative assembly not later than the next regular session thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), notice of which has been submitted to him.

Does the government plan any legislation requiring safety standards and inspections for mechanical rides at fall fairs, shopping plazas and carnivals?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under The Municipal Act, subsection 7 of section 401, municipalities may, by bylaw, determine whether they will permit or refuse to allow the operation of this type of equipment. Inasmuch as they possess the power to license, they are also vested with the authority to regulate, which would encompass the imposition of safety standards and inspections.

When mechanical rides, merry-go-rounds and so on are to be relocated, they must first be taken apart and then reassembled on the new site. If checking this type of equipment were to fall on the provincial government, it would necessitate assigning inspectors who would have to travel continuously with these rides wherever they might go, so they would be present each time they were taken apart and present each time they were reassembled, and it is apparent why it has been regarded as logical that at the local level, inspection should take place in and be the responsibility of the municipality, who grants the license and receives whatever fee there may be for permitting the piece of equipment to operate, and which will be patronized by the residents of that community.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask the hon. Prime Minister a supplementary question. All municipalities, and primarily the smaller municipalities, do not have sufficiently competent inspectors to inspect such equipment. It would remain a responsibility of the provincial government to see—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: A supplementary question, Mr. Chairman? This is a—

Mr. Newman: Well, then may I ask is it not then the responsibility of the provincial government to see that such equipment is inspected in municipalities where the inspectors are not qualified?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate that the local municipalities are empowered to charge a licence fee. That licence fee can be sufficient to bring an inspector whatever distance may be necessary, from the nearest municipality that has someone qualified to inspect. As I say, the alternative is, we would have to assign an inspector to each one of these mechanical rides in order to ensure that every time it was taken apart, it was correctly put back together again. It seems to me not too difficult for a municipality to charge a licence fee for operating the machine in that community sufficient to bring an inspector in from wherever he might have to come.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I may, a supplementary question. Would it not be more satisfactory to have such an inspection rather than have youngsters killed?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the member has had explanations for a couple of questions now and I think that is sufficient.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), notice of which was given. It is related to collective bargaining for the nursing profession. He may be outside bargaining now.

Mr. Speaker: If the member would wait for a few minutes perhaps the Minister of Health is expected back.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we can proceed with the question of the member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart).

When was a used car dealer's licence issued to Don Smith Auto Sales, 1682 St. Clair Avenue West, Toronto? And if no licence was issued by the registrar of used car dealers, under what licence is he operating?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, at this time Don Smith Auto Sales of 1682 St. Clair Avenue has not been granted a used car dealer's licence pursuant to the provisions of The Used Car Dealers Act.

At the present time, the used car dealers section is conducting an investigation into the business activities of this firm. When that investigation is completed, the department will take whatever action warranted.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if I may just draw to the attention of the hon. Attorney General that last night's paper has ads from the gentleman, so he is operating as a used car dealer.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think there was a question asked of this dealer some short time previously. At that time he had made no application. He has now made an application and we are investigating it.

Clerk of the House: The fourteenth order; House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Sandercock in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

(continued)

On vote 401:

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Last night, Mr. Chairman, I was about to make a few comments in regard to regional development associations. I do not want to repeat all that has been said about them, but I want to say that I was at the regional development conference which was called by the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) and I enjoyed it very much. I found it most stimulating, and I think there were many ideas put forward at that conference which he would do well to take into consideration.

Last year I made some comments about the regional development associations to the effect that most associations find it rather difficult to plan a programme on a long-term basis because they are never sure of the financial support forthcoming from the individual municipalities. I mentioned at that time that I thought it would be a good idea if the hon. Minister would consider some form of a cushion whereby the development associations could plan on a long-term basis if a municipality did not provide the financial support that was anticipated. At that time the hon. Minister is recorded in Hansard, at page 2493, as saying that he recognizes this problem and he was looking at it. Beyond that, of course, we have seen nothing or heard nothing. I wonder what has happened in that regard?

The whole problem of financing, as far as the regional development associations are concerned, is a very interesting one, and is perhaps one at which we should take a look, although it relates to the whole broad area of reorganization, it is certainly a very important part of it.

I have a number of friends who are managers or who are employees of regional development associations and I am told by some of them that they spend upwards of four months of the year going around from municipality to municipality trying to encourage individual councils to participate and be a member of the regional development association.

It seems to me, sir, that under these conditions it is very difficult for them to concentrate on the job that they should be doing, regional development. If they have to go around in their area and spend this amount of time trying to convince people to join the regional development association in order that they can try and match dollar for dollar the grants that are given by the government, then

I think it places them in a very awkward position.

Really, in effect, what they are doing is going around like community chest fund raisers trying to raise money. Not that there is anything wrong with fund raisers as such, but this is just not their job. I would suggest to the hon. Minister—as has been pointed out by a number of other speakers on this subject yesterday—that when the machinery and the reorganization is contemplated, the hon. Minister and his department should give consideration to giving these people adequate machinery with which they can do the job of carrying on regional development. Certainly under the present circumstances and conditions they just cannot do it, because they are trotting all over the place trying to raise money and come up with an adequate amount in order that they might get a sufficient grant from the government.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, may I say a few words along that line with regard to regional development? Much has been said and I am not going to rehash what has been said, but we know that during the past year 143 industries have been located here in the province of Ontario. If I understand it correctly, two-thirds of these industries settled in the Golden Horseshoe; only a third established in rural Ontario. We have discussed regional development many, many times in this Legislature, but there does not seem to be too much taking place.

I, with reeves and mayors of municipalities, have visited the office of the hon. Minister, talked with his officials, and received a courteous reception. He did everything possible to help us by giving us a lead on industries that could be established in certain municipalities, but there does not seem to be anything developing. I know that we just cannot tell these industries that they must locate in rural Ontario and I am not against this Golden Horseshoe whatsoever, but I am in favour of seeing something done for rural Ontario.

I attended a conference last fall and I was greatly impressed. But I would like to know from the hon. Minister why a programme that is very successful in England cannot be adopted here. There is a development in the rural areas there that is satisfactory and is doing the job.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Perhaps I should answer the hon. member for Huron-Bruce first, with reference to the money allotted to the various regional development groups. This, as I mentioned earlier, was under considerable discussion prior to setting the budget for the department, and in view of the fact that we were going to have the regional development conference—this is one thing, of course, that was discussed—so were the amount of money required and where would be the best place to spend it.

It was felt, under the circumstances, that instead of suggesting, as we have done before, that we would give them $15,000 if they could match it, we gave them an outright grant of $10,000 and all they had to do in 1964 was match the $5,000. All of them met that objective.

I agree with the hon. member that perhaps that is not the proper way to handle a regional development officer. That is one of the things that our own people have recognized—that a man cannot spend his time doing the job he is supposed to do if he is going around town to raise his salary. I can assure the hon. member that we have some thoughts in mind with reference to incorporating this in our new regional development plan. We have to, because I believe it is essential that this be overhauled in that manner.

With reference to the hon. member for Kent East and the industrial development in England, I think, as he will recall, the gentleman we had from overseas who spoke at our annual dinner and the other chap who spoke, from East Kilbride—which I might say is an area that I visited last year—pointed out that some of the older towns wanted to move in and build new industry within their own boundaries. It was felt that in view of the facilities available the planners were far better off to build a new town and build industry around the new town. That is how areas such as East Kilbride were developed and I believe that more of them are going to be developed on that basis from here on in.

We have a similar development out here around Brampton—I guess this is the nearest thing to what is known as a satellite town. Certainly we would like to see more of them, but as I said yesterday, I would first of all like to see wall-to-wall factories from Toronto to the Quebec border as we have from here to Windsor. I think we have ample commercial area available in the small towns in Ontario to get industry to go in there, in preference to starting a new development ten or 15 miles away.

This, of course, is open for consideration. I do not say that we have explored the problem to the point where we are satisfied that what we are doing is right. Certainly we would welcome any recommendation that will help to get industry decentralized into the smaller areas and that is the objective of our industrial development people.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong this discussion, but I think hon. members will agree with me that this great metropolitan area is certainly having its problems and has had its problems in connection with traffic, education, welfare and so on, and the tendency at the present time is for these large centres to get larger and the small towns and centres to get smaller—in fact, to stagnate, in a sense.

Although they have these great problems in a metropolitan area where a few years ago a four-lane highway was built, today they are talking about building a 12-lane highway, subways are being built, and problems are innumerable in connection with this great growth. Yet, in each municipality in this area we have high-priced, professional industrial commissioners who brag about how many industries they are bringing to this area every year, and all they are doing is compounding the difficulties that exist here.

I refer again to a few years ago. It is only a matter of a few years ago that a four-lane highway was built—I will not mention its name—but now they are talking about building a 12-lane highway to take care of the growth. Yet they are compounding their difficulties day by day and year by year, by bringing new industry in here. It is time that there should be some programme of diversified industry so that the smaller centres will get a certain amount of growth.

As has been mentioned, there is talk in Britain of building complete new areas. That is good. But I know a national industry—this is a few years ago I will admit and I do not know if regulations have changed since that time—which decided to establish in Britain. It chose an area in the London district but it had to meet with the Board of Trade, which as you know is an arm of the government. The chairman of the Board of Trade is a Cabinet Minister. The industry representatives had to check there and they found that they could not locate in the area they wanted. Finally, it was decided that they should locate in Scotland. Now that is decentralizing industry, not having it congregate all in one large centre.

As I said, and I repeat again, the more industry you bring here, the more you compound the difficulties you already have, and there is plenty of industry here. I think you will agree with me, in connection with expressways, housing and so on, that the small centres in Ontario could handle new industry and would be very happy to get new industry. Of course they would have to have housing—you have to have housing here—so you could build housing in the smaller centres to take care of new industry. But you would have to give the industries some incentive to go to these small places. And that is what should be done. Give them some incentive to have them move to these smaller centres—something such as the federal government did with what was called the designated areas. They were not depressed areas; designed areas. I know that Brantford was a designated area and because of that fact quite a number of new industries came to the city of Brantford. That could be done in other centres and diverted away, to a certain extent, from this large area here which already has enough.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I say in answering the hon. member that we have been doing a pretty good job of diversifying industry in Ontario. I think I mentioned in my estimates speech and also in the book that you received on industry that 523 companies expanded their facilities. They certainly were not all in the metropolitan area, they were all over Ontario; 104 new licence agreements were made and of course they have been made with companies which are located all over Ontario.

Just for the record, if you want a breakdown of 163 companies; 14 of them in 1964 went to eastern Ontario, four to northwestern Ontario, 10 to Georgian Bay area, four to Lake Ontario, four to northwestern Ontario, 10 to northwestern Ontario, 31 to Niagara, five to Lake Erie, 15 to Lake St. Clair, 66 to Metropolitan Toronto, so that 93 out of 163 were out of the Toronto Metro area. I think that is a pretty good job of diversification. I do not say that we should take credit for that, but this happens to be the way the 163 were dispersed.

Mr. E. Sargent (Gray North) Repeating again my statement in the House yesterday, I feel that this whole department is another propaganda arm of the Tory Party, and checking with municipal associations across the province will bear that out, I believe.

I have been noticing this report of the Ontario Industrial Review. The last odyssey that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. Minister took to Europe—under this vote 401 there is an item of $545,000 for advertising, films, concerts, and so on. While you were overseas, Mr. Minister, I saw a very glowing account of you and the hon.

Prime Minister looking very handsome in Europe.

An hon. member: We always look handsome.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the hon. Minister, did he carry his own television crew and if so, who paid for it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, this is part of the sales promotion of increasing our manufacturing exports overseas and I think the hon. member will recognize from the figures that have been released, not only federally, but in the province of Ontario, that if we looked good in Europe we did a pretty good job in moving merchandise. I am sure that if you were able to see the 15-minute broadcast on provincial affairs a few weeks ago of these marketing ventures put together, it was probably one of the best 15-minute programmes, according to CBC, they have had in many a year. There have been a number of comments that more departments should do the same thing.

Now I would like to suggest to the hon. member that, yes, we do take along a television man, and we take along a still photograph man, and we have been doing that since the mission started, and they are paid for by our department. They also do work for about 35 or 40 companies in Ontario. They are now doing work for the federal government, and I think they have also done some work for your own party.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask whatever gave the hon. Minister the idea that I, as a taxpayer, would like to pay for a television crew to follow him all over Europe, taking pictures of him having a holiday at our expense.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Oh, nonsense!

Mr. Sargent: May I ask about these shots in this report, in England, Italy and Germany, in Ghana, pictures of the hon. Minister? Who took these pictures? The still shots?

Hon. Mr. Randall: A photographer!

Mr. Sargent: Whose photographer?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Our photographer!

Mr. Sargent: Well, may I ask, Mr. Chairman, being personal, as president of a company which you were in private business, did you carry a photographer with you to take pictures of you travelling about the country?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Selling washing machines to the Eskimos!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did anything that would move merchandise.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Could the hon. Minister elaborate on that?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): This is wrong, is it?

Mr. Sargent: It is wrong for this department to carry a television crew with them to show propaganda of their people at work. Especially when this hon. Minister tells the House yesterday that he has had the time to attend only three meetings in Ontario of the regional development board. I know it is nice to flit about the countries in Europe at our expense, but I think his job is here at home. If you are going to have regional development, do it in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder if I might return to an observation that was being made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce in regard to the difficulties faced by the regional development associations in spending a very great deal of their time in soliciting funds from the constituent municipalities. Indeed, I think if one examines some of the promotional efforts of the regional development associations—and I do not say this too critically, though I think upon analysis it is open to some criticism—that some of their promotional effort is designed in good part just to get a municipality interested so that it will contribute some money, so that in turn they can have it matched by the government here. Now, I wonder if an answer to this would not be to have membership in these regional development associations mandatory?

I recognize that every time one suggests something is going to be mandatory that there are a lot of emotional overtones injected into the picture immediately. But it seems to me that if you want these associations to be effective, if you are operating on the assumption that the job they are attempting to do is an important job, it simply cannot be done if some—and in some instances key municipalities—are not participating. What is the hon. Minister's reaction to the proposition that has been raised? Indeed, it was raised by Dr. Krueger in his comments to the conference, and I suspect it is in his report. It might even be a recommendation in the report—if it were tabled and we could read it—about the proposition of making membership mandatory.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think it is a good idea. I would like to see all the municipalities participate. Maybe I did not attend some of the meetings to which the hon. member for Owen Sound referred, Mr. Chairman, but I have attended some municipal meetings and spoken to large gatherings of mayors and reeves and planners, and I never lose the opportunity of inviting them to participate in the regional development programme.

I do not know whether Dr. Krueger will recommend this or not. If he does, certainly I would be in favour of seeing all the municipalities participate because I think if we are going to have good regional development it has to be almost 100 per cent participation, particularly in the areas that we believe are in need of help through slow growth.

Mr. MacDonald: Do I conclude from the hon. Minister's remarks that he is going to make it mandatory? Or that the government will make the necessary legislative changes for membership in the regional development associations mandatory?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I would not say that at the moment. I think it needs more study before we make that recommendation.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this is the last time I will speak on this part of the vote. I say that unless the hon. Minister can establish a decent policy of decentralizing industry that really works you might as well stop talking about this whole business and wash out this vote for $150,000. But the question I asked the hon. Minister before he said he had a TV crew with him overseas was what was the size of the group? And I would like to know, Mr. Minister, what was the cost of this to the government, and how long were they with you? This is very important. It would be interesting to see how much money you can throw around in this propaganda type of business. I would like to know the figures of what it cost the people of Ontario for you to be glamourized in Europe on this holiday.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will answer the first part of your question about a TV crew. It consists of one man, with a movie camera. He takes pictures in colour and he takes them in black and white.

Mr. Sargent: What about sound?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The sound is made up when we get back. He has a tape recorder with him and if we need to make sound, we make it when we get back.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): How do you sell without making a sound?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well now, if you understand the making of this kind of movie, you can take a movie with a man speaking but you can record the same speech when you get back, so you do not have to take along a lot of recording equipment. It is not too difficult to solve that problem.

As far as the still photographer is concerned, we have one still photographer, and we have got more mileage for the province of Ontario in the local newspapers and magazines than anything else we have ever done.

Mr. Sargent: How much money?

Hon. Mr. Randall: For 1964-65 we set up $25,000 for films and $20,000 for public information. Promotion expenses are $15,000. Our film programme last year was $25,000.

From those films that we now have, we are about to put together some films for use in these export forums we have across the country. Instead of hiring Crawley Films or some professionals which would cost many thousands of dollars, we use these films we have taken as we have gone around on these trips, and we are making a film in 1965-66 called, Our Man from Ontario in which we show our instant international salesmen abroad in the markets of the world. This can be shown to the Lions Clubs, Rotary Clubs, ladies meetings, in order to encourage manufacturers to export. From those films we also will be able to have another one called, Ontario Today in which we indicate the fact that Ontario—

Mr. Sargent: Where do you show these films?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you wait just a minute?

—in which we indicate that the province of Ontario is highly industrialized, that we are not just a province of farmers and fishermen, that we do have a highly industrialized manufacturing complex—which is not quite realized, even across the border. Then we have another film, called, The Heart of Canada in which we say Ontario is a good place to work and play, and this will be shown by our international offices and particularly on our investment missions to the United States.

I think you will agree that sometimes a 15- or 30-minute movie is worth 10,000 words. We believe that the films we have taken in the last two years and put together in these three 15-minute and 30-minute productions, is money well spent.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, I agree with you. But do you not agree that we are not interested in these films? It is the people in Europe you should be showing them to. We do not like to be paying for propaganda of you over there working on our behalf. We know you are working on our behalf. That is what we are paying you for. We hate to pay through the nose for a television crew, or one or two people to follow you around. I think you should be showing these pictures to Europe, not to us in Ontario here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you were not listening very closely.

Mr. Sargent: I heard you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, you did not. Do you mind if I straighten you out?

We have two films. We have one that we will sell domestically to get domestic manufacturers interested in going abroad to sell. The other will go abroad to get people interested in coming and doing exactly what the hon. member for Brantford just said—to get industry to locate in the province of Ontario. So we are doing the two jobs you are talking about. They both have to be done, you cannot do one without the other. It is a waste of money to do one without the other.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Ham and eggs like?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure!

Mr. Sargent: One last question. How much did that film cost, the one taken in Europe of you and the hon. Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I mentioned that we set aside $25,000—

Mr. Sargent: How much did it cost?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I finish the answer? I told you we spent $25,000, and the films that we are now preparing will come in this year's estimates. I do not know what they will cost until they are put together, but they will cost a lot less than if we were doing it on a professional basis by hiring an independent film company. That is one of the reasons why we did it. We will save several thousands of dollars.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this. The only point I am trying to make is that I want you to know that the people of Ontario are conscious of this kind of propaganda. Your whole department, your women's league of voters, the ODA, regional development, your whole department is all propaganda.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, if I understood what the hon. Minister said, certain films were produced by the government at public expense for use in a party programme on the CBC. The "provincial affairs" programme, as we all know, is a programme for which time is made available to political parties to present their points of view. The presentations are recognized to be strictly partisan, and as far as the Ministers are concerned, are supposed to be sponsored by the Conservative Party. Frankly, when I saw the programme, I thought it was quite a good programme. I had thought that the Conservative Party, which admittedly is much better heeled than other parties, had underwritten the cost of it. I am amazed to discover that the cost of the factor that made it so much superior to the efforts of other people, was underwritten by the public Treasury of Ontario. I object strenuously to public funds being used for political partisan purposes in this way. We could all put on that superior type of programme if we could dig into the public Treasury to get professional cameramen and professional production people to help us along. But we have to do it with our own resources.

This is another phase of a problem that we discussed earlier. I certainly think that the government should be scrupulously careful to distinguish between its political promotion, and general informational services about the province. I realize that it is difficult on occasions to make such distinctions, but surely this particular case we are now talking about is a flagrant violation of the principle.

Mr. Reaume: It happens every day.

Mr. Bryden: It was a straight use of public funds for the advantage of one political party!

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, if I may. Earlier in the afternoon, the hon. Minister took great pride in the number of industries that have settled in the province of Ontario. Could he elaborate and tell us how many industries settled in Ontario in areas other than federally designated areas? Some industries came into designated areas because the federal government gave sufficient incentives to encourage them to come in. How many have come into areas other than designated, that you can claim credit for?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, let me suggest, first of all, I think this should not come under the same vote, but I will try and answer your question. I do not have the figures immediately before me as to what went into other areas, but let me also suggest to you that while you have taken great pride in saying that in Windsor you have got a great many industries just because the area was designated, I might also point out to you that you are doing perhaps a disfavoured to the Chrysler corporation who spent millions of dollars revamping their car line and their plants, their engineering, their advertising and designing, to get back into the car market and employ many hundreds of people in Windsor. I think you have got to give credit to business, too, in Windsor that was already there, besides just giving credit to the designated area.

And in the town of Brantford a similar situation existed. If the wheat situation in 1962 and 1963 had not been as good overseas as it was, I am quite sure there would not have been the implements manufactured. But on the other hand, I say the programme did work. I think the programme is a good one. The government feels so and now it has worked out so well they have removed it.

I understand they are coming out with another one. I do not think it is going to be perhaps as elaborate as the one we had, because they, too, feel that there is some discrimination in making designated areas. I am sure that people in Guelph and Galt were not too happy about Brantford being designated as an area, when some of the industries may have been going into their area. So is the federal government involved in this one. We have talked to them. Mr. Drury knows what the difficulties are in designating an area as well as the benefits. I would suggest that they did not all go into designated areas. I will try to get the figures for the ones we mentioned that did go outside a designated area.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, why does the hon. Minister pull this red herring across the stage here about the Chrysler corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not a red herring.

Mr. Newman: Any time the hon. Minister has criticized the Chrysler corporation, we in the Windsor area commend them for not only staying in the area, but also for increasing production more substantially than any other industry in the local area.

All I asked the hon. Minister for was the number of industries that settled in areas that were not designated. He did not have an answer. He comes into this House and all he claims is that the provincial government is the only government that has been able to bring industry into the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I never said that at all.

Mr. Newman: This is the first time this year that the hon. Minister has mentioned the Chrysler corporation; he just mentioned the Chrysler corporation a while ago—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I never mentioned it—

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister should have!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will get the hon. member the figures of the industries that have gone into other towns. I do not have them immediately before me because this will come under trade and industry; we are not on that vote, but I am trying to answer the questions as we go along.

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister does not have to come along and talk as though we are casting aspersions on the Chrysler manufacturing company in our area.

An hon. member: Give him the works!

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may pursue this further, on Tuesday the hon. Minister mentioned in his speech that there were certain slow growth areas in the province. Would he mind naming these slow growth areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The hon. member has before him the contents of the report that was tabled; the slow growth areas are listed there. I do not have them here, but they are listed in that table that was put on the hon. member's desk. I would suggest that he look at that if he wants to question any of them, and I would be glad to answer any questions that he may ask.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister tell me what he would designate as a slow growth area, then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think any areas such as the one that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) mentioned earlier—Norfolk, for instance, where the income per capita is around $1,000. I think some of those areas could be considered slow growth areas and some of the areas in eastern Ontario where the family income is around that figure, too. Certainly we would concentrate our efforts, I believe, in trying to help the slow growth areas, either with industry or other means.

Mr. Newman: Why is the hon. Minister afraid to designate by appellation the various slow growth areas? And while he is on his feet, could he tell us what his overall programme is for these slow growth areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: First of all let me say that on page 16 of that report will be found the percentages of slow growth areas. It is all down so the hon. member can read it for himself without me reading that page to him. He might also read the two or three pages following page 16.

As to what are we going to do—all we are doing in the department of trade and industry is try to help the slow growth areas. I pointed out that we are trying to diversify industry. We are doing it with our Ontario development agency; we are doing it with our trade and industry branch; we are doing it with the Sheridan Park corporation, and when we put together the regional development programme certainly it will be aimed at the slow growth areas.

As I suggested to the hon. member yesterday, we are not prepared yet to walk in with a regional development programme because this has to be given very careful consideration. Perhaps Norfolk is the first county we should go into; other hon. members here would perhaps say that we should go into eastern Ontario, so this all has to be studied. We will have a programme.

Mr. Newman: May I ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, if he will name one specific financial inducement that he is giving any one of the slow growth areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not have any specific—

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister is not doing anything then.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we are not doing anything, according to the hon. member.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister was discussing a few moments ago, a tour taken by himself and the hon. Prime Minister through Europe, and I remember well that one of the films that came back from that tour involved the hon. Prime Minister discussing the possibility of an Italian industry moving into the agricultural areas of Ontario. This industry was going to involve the raising of beef in large amounts, which would be controlled entirely by Italian farmers and would be sent back to the homeland for consumption there. I have not heard much about this since then and I wonder if the hon. Minister would say something about the progress of that plan.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will be glad to. There was a delegation over here which asked us if there was a possibility that in Ontario there would be sufficient land available to raise cattle, to slaughter it, to tan the hides and to take the squeal out of it, and to sell it in the area where the cattle were raised. The delegation was particularly interested in northern Ontario.

When I was in Italy I went to them and told them that we had looked over some areas and what the possibilities were, but we had to have more information as to what they intended to do. They subsequently said, through the chamber of commerce which this group represented, that they were putting together their own requirements before they came here with a group and with this investment.

They did that, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and I looked over it very carefully. There were a number of questions that they wanted us to answer for them. One was the amount of feed that would be available in northern Ontario to produce sufficient cattle, and another was whether we had any objections to colonization. I think the hon. member knows what I mean by that, and this latter situation is one that we in agriculture are not too interested in encouraging.

We gave them the information they wanted and since then I have not heard anything further as to whether they are interested in coming back or whether they have gone to some other country where they can get the kind of agricultural area that they are looking for.

One of the major problems, and I think the hon. member would know more about it than I, being a farmer, is that they were going to raise great herds of cattle in northern Ontario and in the winter months they would have to store great quantities of food for the cattle. This perhaps would be one of the detriments to the programme that they had in mind, since as I said, they would like to have a colony which we—and I think the hon. member would agree—are not too anxious to encourage.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask the hon. Minister if his department is enthusiastically pressing this plan, as it appeared the department was when it was first announced? I remember very well that the hon. Prime Minister made much of this announcement on television, which was carried into all parts of the province.

I would also be interested in the hon. Minister commenting on the sale of this beef. He said that the plan was that the beef would be sold in the area where it was produced—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it was to be sent back to Italy.

Mr. Nixon: What about the approach of the department at the present time? Is the hon. Minister trying to forget about this plan or is he actively encouraging it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we are not discussing it any further with the group from Italy but the hon. Minister of Agriculture will bring it up in his estimates, I am sure.

What it has done is probably awakened a few of us in government to the fact that there are greater opportunities for cattle-raising in northern Ontario. The objective of the Italian group, of course, was to produce everything up there and export it. One of the problems was, of course, would the Italians export it or would they dump it into the market here, which would upset our conditions on the local markets.

However, at the moment we are not pursuing this any further. We gave the Italian group all the information it wanted; we told it what the pitfalls would be; we told it what the benefits would be; so far it has not come back. This was three months ago and we have not heard anything further from them. Now whether they are going to pursue it, or not, remains to be seen.

Mr. Nixon: It appears then that this market, this need for beef in Italy, is there. I wonder if the department is doing anything to encourage certain areas of our own agricultural industry to fill this need.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that both the federal government and our own Department of Agriculture are doing everything they can to export more food from this province.

Mr. Nixon: But specifically, about the Italian market—is The Department of Economics and Development doing anything in direct conjunction and co-operation with The Department of Agriculture to fill this marketing need that has become apparent due to the hon. Minister's own efforts when travelling through Italy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All I can say is that we have an office in Milan; Dr. Tony Santamaura is there. We have our agricultural representative in Ontario House. We have missions going over, food missions as well as for manufacturing products; they have been in Italy recently. I know that the agricultural man in Ontario House is visiting with Dr. Santamaura. I am sure that if there are opportunities there for us to export agricultural products from Ontario, they will exploit them to the fullest.

Mr. Nixon: Just to conclude this: Are we at the present time exporting any beef to Italy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not tell the hon. member that; I shall have to check and give him an answer.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in support of my colleague, the hon. member for Brantford, I would like to ask whether in the opening up of regional industrial development, the hon. Minister has discussed with the hon. Minister of Highways the possibility of building four-lane highways to northeastern Ontario—I am talking of the areas around Pembroke, Smiths Falls, Renfrew county, Georgian Bay, Owen Sound and Tobermory. Have you discussed with the hon. Minister of Highways the possibility of building four-lane highways in those areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I have not done so but since you bring it up, I will do it, and see if there is any merit in it.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on item 6 in vote 401, having to do with the grants paid to the Ontario research foundation, can the hon. Minister explain to the House some specific instances where research undertaken by this foundation for individual companies, or groups of companies, has enabled them to advance in their own technology? I am thinking particularly of specific plans or perhaps formulas that have been developed by the Ontario research council and are now used by industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think there is some information available on that through the Ontario research foundation. As you know it has been operating since about 1928. It has an enviable reputation with industry for developing new products and for assisting small businesses, particularly to get their products on the market. I do not believe we have a list from the foundation as to what companies have been helped specifically but I can assure you it has helped. I would be glad to get a list of those companies if the hon. member would like to have it.

Mr. Nixon: What I am particularly interested in is if this particular agency of government does develop a new process or product, that is then taken over by private enterprise, developed and sold, is there any financial advantage that does accrue to the government through the research council because of the work that they have done in this connection?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am informed that we undertake that work under licence, and they pay us per licence basis.

Mr. Nixon: So that if a new process is established, the licence to use it is retained in the hands of your department and then you sell the right to it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is held by the Ontario research foundation, and first preference is given to Ontario industry.

Mr. Nixon: Do we make money then from the sale of the rights to these licences?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have a figure here, I have just checked it again. We have never made substantial amounts. Perhaps in the past ten years it has amounted to $50,000.

Mr. Nixon: But we do actually charge private enterprise for the use of developments that have come out of the foundation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, yes, certainly.

Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, under the same item in last year's estimates there was the amount of $760,000 for northern Ontario development foundation research and so on. What specific projects were completed with respect to northern Ontario, and what projects are still under investigation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You said $60,000 not $760,000?

Mr. Taylor: It was a total amount of $760,000, including many other things.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, northern Ontario development was $60,000.

Mr. Taylor: It was not broken down separately. Could you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will read off some of the feasibility studies, if you wish. We had 15 in northern Ontario.

There is potential for peat moss production in northern Ontario; potential utilization for coarse fish in northern Ontario; potential use for mine tailings from gold mines; feasibility study of a proposed refuse screening pellet plant and crude log operations at the Lakehead; feasibility studies for a proposed abattoir at the Lakehead; study of a jet smelting process in northern Ontario; a study of co-operative marketing of produce in northern Ontario; a study to determine the potential manufacturing opportunities for wet and dry mill corn products; further expansion of the needle trade industry at the Lakehead, where we thought we could get some needle trade work up there; feasibility of forest fertilization; the potential for manufacturing skills in Ontario; potential manufacturing opportunities in Ontario in electric and gas welding equipment; potential manufacturing opportunities in Ontario for calcium carbonate whitening; and potential manufacturing opportunities for carbon and activated charcoal and sawdust utilization.

These are all the things that would come out of the area of northern Ontario and they have been determined. The feasibility studies are now in the hands of people who requested them from northern Ontario. Some of them may come to fruition, and others, like many projects after research, may not get off the ground.

Mr. Taylor: Are there still some studies being made?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, there are still a few being made, and there are more recommendations, I understand, coming in that we will take a look at. I think northern Ontario has been more active than most areas in supplying us with information to work on the feasibility studies.

Mr. Taylor: Are those studies in addition to the ones you mentioned, or including the ones you mentioned?

Hon. Mr. Randall: These are completed, but there are some more in process at the present time.

Mr. Taylor: Could you indicate what they were?

Hon. Mr. Randall: In the research branch, they are doing an economic survey of northern Ontario. I will try to get these others for you in a minute.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, just before this vote passes.

I have listened very attentively to both the questions, and the answers by the hon. Minister, and I would say that both I and my colleagues have taken a particular interest in The Department of Economics and Development. We have been particularly interested in regional development. Frankly, we had come to the same conclusion that the hon. Minister suggests.

May I say also that I congratulate him on his frankness to us. I find it quite refreshing. He told us that he has no programme and he does not intend to start a programme until he has got all the facts. I say that is refreshing because it is so unique to hear from these government benches some Minister who has the courage to stand up and say: "We have not got the facts, and I have not got a programme yet."

The usual approach, if I may recall such things as the nursing shortage in welfare is that they stick their feet in and say "we have got a programme" and so on. I think it is particularly courageous of this hon. Minister to tell us these facts in view of the fact that in the past we have listened to a 20-point programme, and I do not know what else. And before that Minister we had another Minister who was in charge of Economics and Development, and we listened to him even suggest, with respect to EMO, that he had a private army throughout the province—which was actually non-existent as far as I could tell—in case there was an emergency.

It is for these reasons I had a number of questions to ask the hon. Minister about the whole approach taken to encourage the decentralization of industry and the development of regions throughout Ontario. But I appreciate that he is going to get all the facts together; had called a conference, and is going to come up with a realistic approach.

I would say as we did about housing last year, when we asked the hon. Minister and he said—after looking at the Ontario housing corporation—I am going to come up with facts and if I have not produced housing by next year—which is this year—then fry me.

Sir, we congratulate the hon. Minister on his candour in reporting that he has not had a programme. Our only opinion is that it is regrettable that other Ministers are not as open about the fact that for 22 years there has been neglect and ineptitude and indifference about the problems around this province. You have shown a refreshing candour. We look forward to next year and we hope we will not have to fry you, but if we have to, we certainly will.

Vote 401 agreed to.

On vote 402:

Mr. Sargent: I do not think we should throw too many bouquets at the hon. Minister. We know that he is an able man, but he is in the wrong slot.

Mr. Chairman, on vote 402, I would like to ask the hon. Minister briefly regarding the Ontario economic council: What are the terms of reference? How many employees does it have? How many meetings does it have? How many committee meetings does it have? How many reports have been made to date? What action has been taken on these reports? What current studies are underway now, and what studies have been completed?

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): It is all in the reports.

Mr. Sargent: This is a vote of $211,000, and it seems to be one of these things out on left field that no one can put their finger on. Can you tell us briefly what you are trying to do?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I say to the hon. member, the 15 studies I just read originated from the Ontario economic council to start with. I will not repeat them because of time, but if you would like me to read a couple of pages on the function of the economic council I will be very glad to do so, so you can get it into the record. But, first of all, may I suggest to you that there are different kinds of economic councils across Canada. There are always different kinds of economic councils in Europe. They do not all perform the same function, although they may be using the same title.

The one that we have in Ontario, of which I had the privilege of being the chairman, the first chairman, its function is to advise the government on matters that come before the council that we believe will help the economy of the province. These ideas are submitted to the government. They can accept them or they can reject them. We work in conjunction with the various Ministers. They may have a problem they say they would like the economic council to look at, so the council, in effect, is working with all the Ministers of the government.

The council is made up of 17 representative citizens—I read their names off the other day—very reputable people. I do not think I have to go over that again, but I will, if you want to get it on the record. They are very reputable people, and they would not waste their time working with the council unless they thought they could make a contribution.

They meet at least once a month. They have a board meeting once a month, more often if it is required, if there is something special that they want to discuss.

The council is engaged full time in looking at consumer association work, in looking at labour union situations. It works with the universities, the research organizations. At the present time it is compiling a list of the research that is going on in the province, so if there is any overlapping of research where our money is involved, perhaps we can do a better job of getting it co-ordinated. It works with the regional development associations and it has worked with many of the federal authorities up in Ottawa to work out some of the problems we feel are mutual. There are mutual problems, as we all recognize.

The economic council has this year taken on the matter of automation and technological changes, as the hon. Prime Minister outlined to the House here the other day. This is one of the major functions of the council. With the labour men who are on the council—I mentioned Mr. Sefton, Mr. Archer and Mr. Hill—certainly we feel that the economic council can make a major contribution to what we should be doing about automation. It has also assisted the government—

Mr. Sargent: May I interrupt the hon. Minister? Would the hon. Minister take its advice on automation? Would the government take the advice of the economic council on policy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All I can suggest, as I said earlier, is that we will listen to its advice and if we feel that it is apropos to the occasion, surely we will adopt it. We may think we have a better idea; the council does not have all the ideas and admit it. If the advice is constructive—and most of it is—if it will solve the problem of automation, we will take advice from anybody. But the council is making its contribution, the same as the labour unions that meet with us, and other political parties that make their contributions periodically. We will take advice from anybody on the matter of automation.

The council, I believe, is doing perhaps more on this than any other department of government at the present time. I might also say that since Dr. Deutsch was made head of the economic council of Canada there has been a very close liaison between the chairman of the economic council of Ontario, Mr. Cranston, and Dr. Deutsch. Much of the co-operation we get from the economic council of Canada comes through the economic council of Ontario.

These are just some of the things that the council is doing and it is almost opening the store the first day—you do not know who is going to come through the door and what kind of a problem is going to be presented.

I might also say that the economic council has done a great deal of work for the department in this automobile pact. It has been assisting us in the surveying of the problems and giving us the benefit of its advice.

Therefore, I think the council has served a very useful purpose. But I would like to establish with the hon. members that this is not a huge planning board of citizens who sit down and lay out a blueprint for the government, it is set up purely as an advisory group. You have one in your own party, I believe. When you came into the House this year you said you had 300 economic advisers working for the Liberal Party, and I am sure our friends across the hall here have the same thing—they have outside advisers.

Mr. S. Lewis: Thousands of them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thousands of them, the man said. We believe that this body of men and women drawn from all parts of the province can make a very useful contribution in advising the government. Certainly I know from my own experience that I made many recommendations to the former Minister and some resulted in legislation and some resulted in some of the trade promotion plans that have been very successful.

Mr. Sargent: Would the hon. Minister, under this economic council, consider that automation is a field of his department?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Automation is, I would say, a field of three departments—The Department of Labour, The Department of Education and The Department of Economics and Development. I would say that these are the three major departments. I am quite sure the other hon. Ministers who are involved in planning the government's programme are also interested in automation, but these are the three major departments that are looking at the problems of automation.

Mr. Sargent: Would the hon. Minister suggest that the ITU strike is in his jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. Address that remark to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree).

Mr. Sargent: Just the study of automation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The study of automation, yes.

Mr. Sargent: May I say that I think this is one area where this government is doing a very poor job insofar as it has no dynamic programme right now to meet the problem, and to realize that job security is the number one issue today in labour circles. The ITU strike here in Toronto is a test of automation. It is the first test we have had in Ontario and the government has failed miserably to meet this test. The government could have made trail-breaking history by installing the Kaiser plan here. It is now in force in Kaiser Steel in the United States.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Which Kaiser?

Mr. Sargent: Kaiser Steell

This plan gives workers a share of any cost savings and guarantees those with half a year or more service against layoffs. It guarantees them job security. This plan is working well. In essence, the employers are paying $5 million a year for the right to automate. The money guarantees every one of the 17,000 employees a full pay envelope every week.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Chicken every Sunday!

Mr. Sargent: The union states that there is a simple underlying philosophy to this agreement that workers have a right to their jobs. The Kaiser contract, it says, means that a man owns his job for life unless he is discharged for cause or bought off through disability or early retirement.

The same kind of basic philosophy is inherent in demands made by the other unions for lifetime job security. In this case, 17,000 jobs are being secured by $5 million a year. This government could have stopped automation once and for all by ending the ITU strike here. And the hon. Minister and his department—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): May I ask the hon. member a question? What were the circumstances of the Kaiser Steel pact to which he makes reference? Was that not an agreement reached between the employer and the employee group? That is the first question.

The second question is: Does the hon. member advocate the imposition of job security legislation by this government and the consequent withdrawal of the right to strike?

Mr. Sargent: Please repeat the question. Can the hon. Minister remember the question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this hon. member does not know the subject matter about which he is talking.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. Minister of Labour should know the answer to the question; what is he asking me for?

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. Minister of Economics and Development has a study on automation given him by this economic council, I doubt very much if his government would instigate this policy because it would not be politic to do it. The government has not the courage to stand up and fight the newspapers. That is why this strike is going on downtown today.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring up one item under the economic council, and that concerns the survey that was conducted in the city of Windsor in 1964. Certain recommendations were made in that survey. Is it the intent of the hon. Minister to form a Cabinet group, or a high-level group to study that survey, with the intention of implementing some of the recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think, as you will recall, the recommendations in the report were made to the city of Windsor, as I see by the local newspapers yesterday. Some of those recommendations are being brought into effect, and the remaining recommendations were to the municipality. If it wants to implement any of those and we can cooperate with it in assisting in implementing them, perhaps this again will come into the regional development planning programme that we are talking about, if not before it.

Mr. Newman: May I ask the hon. Minister, then, if he is well aware of the situation that is to occur in the city as the result of the auto trade agreement between Canada and the United States? There will be approximately 1,600 employees who will be laid off in a period of approximately one year. This does have a very disturbing effect on the employee, especially the employee who is in the older category. Does the department have any staff members in the community, or is the department in touch with the Ford Motor Company, in an attempt to ease the impact of this mass layoff, or this phased layoff? Does the department have any plan for assisting the employees who will be laid off in obtaining either retraining or other types of jobs? Possibly this may be done in co-operation with the federal government. That is quite all right, but I would like to know just exactly what this department is doing in relation to this problem.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think this is as good a place as any, or perhaps as proper a place as any, to discuss the problem that you bring up, and to give you perhaps some personal views which I think are reflected by this government.

First of all, I think the hon. member is well aware that the automobile pact was arranged by the federal authorities to offset what was probably a terrific loss in business on parts being exported to the United States—according to the Americans, illegally. If you read the Congressman from Wisconsin yesterday, he said the Canadians are perpetuating a felony that they started with the parts business and now they are trying to get legislation to confirm it—or something to that effect.

I can assure you there is perhaps just as much consternation in the United States as there is in Canada, with reference to the problems that this pact may bring on, and perhaps there is also just as much enthusiasm for the long-term arrangements which will come out of it.

I have said before, and I think I will say again, that having been in the manufacturing business and knowing what it takes to revamp a plant and set it up for new production lines, I do not think at the moment it is correct to criticize the man who has signed a contract on behalf of the federal government and the U.S. parent, and who has to do what he is asked to do, and to do it as quickly as possible, in order to reach that achievement of another $260 million or $275 million a year in production.

Perhaps before I read a statement I have here, I would suggest to you that there will be some short-term dislocations. It is inevitable, I think, that we are going to have some short-term dislocations. This happens in any industry. Perhaps it happened in the farm implement business when there were free trade arrangements—I think it was back in 1934. It was decided to have free trade on farm implements.

But one of the things I believe we should keep in mind—and this is uppermost in my mind because I have had some experience with it—is that our federal officials are operating now in Geneva, and have been since, I think, May, 1963 or 1964, I forget which, to bring about what is called a Kennedy round of negotiations. The Kennedy round, we hope, will make trade freer, not only between Canada and the United States, but between some of the blocs that are building up around the world, and believe me there are other groups that are building up besides the inner six in Europe. There are blocs like Latin America and South America building up. As I said the other day, I think the United States and Canada are almost in the same trading straitjacket, so that we have to recognize that this may be an approach to solve what could be some very difficult problems economically in the years ahead.

We have been asked many times what our government is doing. We did not, as you know, negotiate the agreement. We were not told what the agreement was, and I do not think that at the time the negotiations were going on we had a right to expect Ottawa to keep us informed, despite the fact that we have 90 per cent of the automobile business here. I would think that we should respect the rights of the federal government to negotiate an international agreement, which this is, and as soon as this agreement was completed, then we were informed.

To get it on the record and clear the situation up in the minds of the hon. members such as yourself, who comes from a motor town, and the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Walker), I will tell you what our government has done. I think then you will have a better understanding of some of the problems that are going to arise and what we are doing to help offset them in co-operation with the federal government.

First, on January 15, 1965, an automotive free trade agreement was reached between Canada and the United States. We read about it in the newspapers the same as you did. Through the co-operation of the federal Department of Industry, copies of the agreement were sent to my department within hours of the announcement. My department undertook an immediate investigation and a survey of the automobile industry in Ontario and how it would be affected by the new agreement. Subsequent consultations with the automobile manufacturers association, the automotive parts manufacturers association (Canada), and officials in Ottawa, raised a number of questions, and I can assure you there were many of them.

My department then organized a conference with the federal Department of Industry and the provincial Departments of Education, Labour and Municipal Affairs, to which the Ministers and Deputy Ministers of the respective departments were invited. So it was a Cabinet committee meeting, or a high-level meeting, I should say. At this time a senior official of The Department of Industry outlined the terms of the agreement, answered questions in detail and outlined the probable effect this legislation would have on the automotive industry.

Following the meeting, a working group was established to undertake an immediate investigation of the number of locations of motor-vehicle and parts manufacturers in the province, determining also their present products and occupational skills. The working group, with the approval of the hon. Prime Minister and the Cabinet, consists of senior representatives from The Departments of Economic and Development, Education, Labour, Highways, and Municipal Affairs, and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. The group reports to the director of the trade and industry branch of my department. Representatives of my department are in constant contact with their opposite numbers in the federal Department of Industry. Visits to the department in Ottawa are made at least once every two weeks, and when we are not up there, as a rule they are down here. Copies of these reports are circulated to the people in question, so that everybody is fully informed in the Cabinet as to what is going on.

Contact was also made with the industrial commissioners in centres across the province, including yours in Windsor. In addition, close liaison has been established with Mr. Don Woods of the automotive parts manufacturers association (Canada), and Mr. James Dykes of the motor vehicle manufacturers association, so that first-hand knowledge can be obtained on changes within the industry. I have met with Mr. Woods myself.

From various lists obtained and any additional information available, a list of motor-vehicle manufacturers, machinery producers, tool and die makers and other automobile accessories suppliers was made up for the province of Ontario. We are also in the process of determining from various sources specific products made in each company, the current number of employees directly involved in automotive production, and whether the company is a direct affiliate of a U.S. parent organization or is an independent Canadian organization.

I have personally discussed the implications of the agreement with major producers in the automotive industry throughout the province. I have offered the services of this department and the government to assist in any way we can to implement it, recognizing full well that more than 90 per cent of the industry is in Ontario and that we have the most to gain—and also the most to lose if it does not work out. Therefore, we have probably a major reason to assist wherever we can to make sure it does work.

One parts manufacturer who had experienced some difficulty was invited to visit my department and discuss his specific problems. He was met by the chief economist, the director of the trade and industry branch and directors of my committee, and at this time various implications were thoroughly discussed. Subsequently this manufacturer indicated his intention to seek manufacturing and licensing arrangements in Europe, to fill the anticipated gap in his production. My department, through our offices in Milan, Italy, and Dusseldorf, Germany, has assisted him in making contact at international fairs in Milan and also at the Hanover fair in Germany.

I would like to point out that the problems of readjustment and the full impact of this legislation are still some time away. The automobile companies have already made their contacts for the 1965 and 1966 model years and not until the 1967 model year will there be any significant ramifications in this programme.

The interim period provides us with an opportunity to assess the broader implications of the agreement and to work closely with all the persons concerned in an effort to bring about as smooth a transition as possible. We feel that we can come up with a programme that will fulfil the need of these changing conditions.

This, broadly, is what has been done, and I think you will see from it that we are recognizing that the federal government needs our assistance and we need theirs, and that the automobile manufacturers accepted a terrific challenge. I think one thing is overlooked in this automobile business. As I often say, we in Canada make "a quarter of a dozen assorted," and suddenly we get on a basis where we become a continental supplier. From my experience in business, I know that if you are going to make 10,000 of something from a 600-ton press, you can make them with a very inexpensive set of tools; if you are going to run ten times that, then you have to spend a lot more time tooling up, and I think our friend Ford, in Windsor, has made the first move to fulfil the agreement conditions as the company becomes a continental manufacturer of one or two motors instead of the eight that they are now manufacturing. It is obvious that they cannot crowd those through the present plant; they cannot use the same equipment; perhaps they cannot even use the same dies and tools.

I believe that these things are going to happen, not only in Ford, but perhaps they will happen in other plants which may not have moved as quickly.

As hon. members know, there are 25 or 30 agreements with various people in the automotive business, and the full details of that one agreement have not been released to the public. I think it is going to be discussed in Ottawa this week when the Budget debate is finished. How much more information will be available as to what the individual manufacturer has to do, we do not know any more than hon. members do, except that this morning, I believe, in one of the newspapers I was given notice of how much each automobile company has to produce in extra dollar volume in the goal years such as 1966 and 1967.

I would only offer one word of caution at the moment, and that is that there are perhaps 50 per cent of the people in the United States who are not too enthusiastic about the automobile agreement. And there are some people in this country, perhaps, who are not enthusiastic, possibly because they do not know all the details. We do not know all the details, but we know that there is great pressure on in Washington right now to block it—as I told you about the man in the Globe and Mail this morning, and he is only one of many.

Despite what is said, the United States is still a very high protection nation. They talk about free trade, but it is not always free trade as far as they are concerned. It is a most difficult market to get into.

On the other hand, I think that President Johnson is recognizing that he has to do something to free trade between Canada, the United States and other countries, and I would suggest that the less we say about what the automobile companies have to do in order to become continental manufacturers, the less information and ammunition we are going to give those in the United States who are waiting, perhaps, for Canadians to make these statements so they can use them for their advantage in the United States.

I have no doubt in my mind that President Johnson will sell this to Congress. It was hoped that he could sell it in April, but now the rumours are that it may not go through until fall. If they keep up a filibuster in Congress and have a number of hearings it may not go through until fall. On the other hand, we have time between the 1965 and 1966 contract to assess the situation, and move in whichever way The Department of Labour or The Department of Education or this department has to move in order to help implement the contract. But I would say to hon. members in all sincerity that I believe it is a good deal. I believe it is a good deal because I do not see any other way that we are ever going to become competitive in world markets unless we get longer runs. And longer runs can only come from increasing the possibility of making less products and distributing on a wider basis without these ramifications and circles.

I think I have had sufficient experience in trying to get my former company's products into these markets to know that you can turn the key off almost overnight and find you have lost the market. This is not good for Canada because we are highly industrialized with only 19 million people. We should stop to figure the opportunities that are ours if the agreement is successful, and I am quite sure it will be.

Perhaps these short-term dislocations are a blessing in disguise. In Windsor—I do not know what the labour conditions are, I think Mr. McEachern said that many of these people would go to work for somebody else—the hon. member himself mentioned, I think, that 19 new industries moved in there recently and there is a shortage of labour in some of those plants, particularly the skills that will be released on this programme. I think with the supplementary benefits, the unemployment insurance—which I hope they do not have to draw on for too long because I think a man would sooner work—I think that with what Chrysler is doing to step up its production, plus the automobile manufacturers in Windsor who are still turning out 1965 and 1966 contracts, that there will not be too much dislocation. And if, in this period, there are people who need to be retrained, this is a good opportunity to retrain them.

Just before I conclude, there is some concern as to whether we will be making the same variety of products when the agreement is consummated, or will we not? I do not think that anybody knows that, but we do know that the agreement calls for up to 60 per cent in Canadian content, and that these cars are going to be produced and this amount of money—this $265 million of extra business—has to include certain Canadian content. It may be quite possible that a man who is making four items at 10,000 a piece today, when the continental agreement is through he may be making 100,000. I do not know; maybe it will be one item and he will employ just as many people and will need more equipment—as many undoubtedly will. They will need new tools if they are to get on to a continental basis, but I firmly believe that if there is any training required—and I discussed this with the hon. Minister of Labour—it may be easier to make fenders, for instance in Detroit and car radios in Windsor, and the man making the fenders may have to be trained to make radios. I am not using a very good example, but I am going from one extreme to the other, but these are the economies of continental manufacturing. I would think—I would be willing at the moment to concede—that the federal authorities have done a good job in negotiating a very difficult arrangement to keep Canada in the United States market and I would hope that with our support—and they certainly will get the support of this government, we have already intimated that if there are any short-term dislocations between the federal authorities and ourselves—we can find the answers.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, knowing the hon. Minister's capabilities and enthusiasms, I was certainly well pleased to hear him speak so optimistically concerning the programme. This is all well and good, but in the meantime we are going to have numbers of people who will be laid off.

I know that the younger fellow will not have difficulty because he can leave the community and go elsewhere to get employment. Some of them will be absorbed in the Chrysler manufacturing plant in their new night shift programme. That will take care of approximately 500 or 600.

We still have on our list of unemployed, including those seeking employment in the community as of March 31, 5,779 people, five per cent of our work force, and to throw an additional strain on the number that are unemployed has a very substantial effect on the economy of the community.

I am interested to a large extent in those who are 50 years of age and over who may be laid off. How does a man at the age of 50 get employment these days? He applies at a factory and quite often is told that age is his handicap. In addition to that, some of these employees at the Ford Motor Company may not be too well versed in the English language when they apply for employment and are given a 50-question test, they look at the test and flunk out immediately. So you see this bars some of the men who are working at Ford and seeking employment in some of the other industries—industries that do not use such a test.

What efforts are going to be made by either this department, or any other department of government, to attempt to cushion the effects of these proposed layoffs? We know they are going to come, we foresee them, we have been forewarned. Now is the time when we should plan to see to it that the effect is very minimal.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will just try and answer the hon. member's first two questions. The first question he brought up was about 5,700 people seeking employment—this is in the Windsor regional area, it is not just the city of Windsor?

Mr. Newman: This is as the national employment service turn out their figures. What area does it include? It does not include the town of Leamington and Kingsville, it is Metropolitan Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But the figures are somewhat misleading because—

Mr. Bryden: It is a unified labour market though.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but here is the situation. Chrysler at the moment is reporting that it cannot get enough people for the night shift. Maybe it is skilled workers they are looking for. I cannot argue that because I do not know. I understand that GM is having the same difficulty in its new trim plant, it cannot get the number of workers required. So perhaps the hon. member's second question is the one that is of most importance, and I think I am inclined to agree with him, that there are a number of older workers—we say "older workers" but a man of 50 in my estimation is not old or I should not be here—but I am inclined to believe that these are the people we are going to have to spend time with through the national employment service, to help; we are working with the federal authorities to lay out plans to retrain these people for a job that will be available. I think one of the biggest problems in the automotive industry particularly is to find out what kind of job is going to be available, because as the companies change their production lines around, they have to determine whether they need trim workers or press men. This is one of the things our department—this group that I am talking about—is trying to put together.

Mr. Newman: If I may suggest it at this time, I would like the hon. Minister to forget about the trim workers because my understanding is most of these trim workers may be women.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I imagine a fair number of them are. But I also think the manpower the hon. member talks about down there is going to be utilized in some of these areas. I think he mentioned a figure of 19 industries having moved in during the last year. It is obvious that these companies are going to put in continental manufacturing that will attract and expand these 19 companies and attract new industries.

This again brings up the problem that the hon. member posed of training the workers who are available today and who do not have jobs. I think all I can suggest to him is that this is certainly under consideration by our department, and I know The Department of Labour has spent more time on it perhaps than we have. But it is one of the things on which we are working in co-operation with the federal authorities. I think Mr. McEachern has made a number of statements with reference to the necessity of training as quickly as we can the people to fill the labour force. I mentioned the other day that that is our major problem; the second one is to fill the gaps among our skilled workers by immigration.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak once again on this same issue, I do know that the hon. Minister is in close co-operation with the federal authorities, but the retraining is going to be a provincial endeavour. As a result, what steps will this department or any other department of the government undertake to see that these people are retrained? Now is the time when you can approach the Ford Motor Company and find out from them just who is going to be laid off. Knowing who will be laid off, these people could possibly be taken into some type of evening retraining programmes in advance of the time that they are going to be laid off, so that they could step right into industry once they are laid off, provided the job is available in industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would suggest also, while we are talking about the 1,600 workers out of the Ford plant, that this is only a temporary layoff, as you recognize. Many of these people want to go back and do what they have been doing—build more motors and probably better motors—so that many of these people will be off for a period of perhaps five or six months from the Ford plant—

Mr. Newman: One year!

Hon. Mr. Randall: That may be, I do not know; they talk about five or six months. But they will go back to doing what they were doing previously, so we will talk now about the unskilled, as the hon. member says, who do not have jobs at that age and whom we would like to retrain. From the hon. member's own Greater Windsor and industrial commission we have a letter here on the Windsor situation. Perhaps I could read just one of its paragraphs. It says:

Due to the increased interest in Windsor location by manufacturers of parts and equipment, job opportunities in the future for our citizens will increase rather than decrease. We are hopeful that municipalities will study ways of more adequately servicing industrial land and that owners of such land will keep the interests of the citizens in the area in mind and be realistic in their asking price.

If we all work together our community will be able to capitalize on the long-range benefits the auto plan is designed to bring into Canada. This announcement by Ford stresses the importance assigned Windsor as a production centre, and while the jobs of citizens are always important, so are the tools of production.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, we can foresee the long-range effects but what I am primarily interested in is the immediate effect once these people are laid off. Then it is bad and it is particularly bad for the elderly in these laid-off categories because they are going to have a most difficult time in obtaining employment.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite know how this subject came up at this time under the vote relating to the economic council, because I gather that one body that really is not very much involved in it is the economic council. However, I think there are still further implications in this matter that might be explored.

The hon. Minister said the federal officials did a good job in negotiating a very difficult type of agreement. I am inclined to agree with him. Admittedly, this is a matter that is extremely complex and with extremely broad implications. Any person who has not studied it has difficulty in forming an opinion, but the general principle seems to me to be sound—that if this country is going to grow industrially it has to get bigger markets than can be provided by 19 million people. That principle seems sound and I believe the hon. Minister is right when he says that the agreement is a forward step. I am not sure that the hon. Minister of Labour agrees with him, judging by some statements he made recently, but that is a matter they can sort out between them.

However, I think that where there has been a failure is not in the negotiation of the agreement, but in the failure of the federal government to exercise any real foresight in considering the full implications of the agreement. We know that there was a layoff not long ago at Windsor. It would appear from what Mr. Paul Martin said that this layoff came as a complete surprise even to the federal government. He was quoted in the Globe and Mail as saying:

No one likes to see any layoffs but I don't like the way the announcement of this particular layoff was handled by the Ford Motor Company. We met with the company a short time ago and there was no indication given then of this action.

This is the sort of problem that will be compounded as the readjustments that have to take place in relation to this agreement take place. If layoffs of people come as a complete surprise to everybody, obviously there is going to be real difficulty in making necessary adjustments to prevent excessive dislocation and excessive distress for the working people.

I would like to know if any machinery is being worked out whereby these matters can be anticipated. It would appear that the federal government representatives who negotiated the agreement were not even in consultation with representatives of this government. Yet the government of Ontario has a real interest in the matter. I think they were entitled to be briefed as to what was going on and what could be expected. There seemed to be no planning at all other than to get the agreement through. When another layoff takes place, is that going to come as a complete surprise to officials at both government levels? Or can some machinery be worked out whereby the governments will know as far as possible in advance that the layoff is likely to take place, and can start laying their plans before it takes place?

Another difficulty that arises is the extreme division of jurisdiction in relation to easing the adjustments. First of all, the federal government has jurisdiction; second, the provincial government has jurisdiction; then different departments within each government have jurisdiction for different phases of the problem. It ends up that there are committees trying to co-ordinate all their activities, but I am not so sure that through committee work we will necessarily get the kind of action that is going to be required.

I would think that a major responsibility would be with the national employment service, in developing alternative opportunities for these people. That also involves training and retraining, and I really cannot see that an informal committee system is going to provide the kind of co-ordination that is going to be necessary to ease the adjustments.

We know that economic progress creates dislocations. This agreement, I think, will result in economic progress but there are going to be acute dislocations along the way and who is it who has to bear the brunt of the dislocation—the working man. I think it is time that we got over the idea that the working man is expendable—he is like the tools; he can be discarded when he is not immediately needed and then brought back again. I think we have to look at him in terms of his needs as a human being, not merely in terms of his usefulness as an instrument of production.

The hon. Minister said that these 1,600 workers who have been laid off are likely to be called back during the next number of months. What are they going to do in the meantime? It is fine to say they can go on unemployment insurance. Well, I would not like to live on the allowance paid under unemployment insurance, and I do not think the hon. Minister would either.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You understand about the supplementary benefit which is $60. As I understand it they get $60 plus the unemployment insurance which is $96—

Mr. Bryden: You mean supplementary benefits under their own union agreement?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: Well, these workers, I will agree, are fortunate in that they have had a very strong and forward-looking union that has negotiated a lot of benefits for them. But there are going to be other workers laid off, quite probably, in other industries as a result of this agreement who may not have the same advantages. I know of people who were laid off—I will not mention cases now—but I know of people who were laid off and lost everything, pension benefits and everything.

This is a matter too that has got to be looked into. Where there is a good forward-looking union like the UAW, I suppose we can assume that the problems will be dealt with at least in part, but what about the overall problem of the laid-off worker, the worker who has been displaced by technological change, either for a short- or long-term period?

I think we have to start thinking in terms of much higher benefits than are currently available under The Unemployment Insurance Act. I think people, when they are displaced in this way, should be able to look forward to pretty close to their full wages in the period of readjustment. I think that steps should be taken to protect pension and related benefits. Then of course the whole question of training is vital, I dealt yesterday to some extent with this training problem and really we have not got to grips with it at all. It is a joint federal-provincial programme and everybody and his brother is mixed up in it, but not producing any results.

I do not know that it is the prime responsibility of this government, but I think it is high time in Canada that we developed a co-ordinated labour market policy along the lines proposed by the economic council of Canada. I think that is really a federal responsibility, and I think perhaps the provincial responsibility in the matter may be mainly to press the federal government for action, and then assist and co-operate where necessary. I know the hon. Minister of Economics and Development is an energetic Minister and a forward-looking Minister, and I am going to suggest to him that he really put the heat on the federal government—urge it to read the report of its own council and get down to business on a co-ordinated labour market policy.

This layoff at Ford is just the first, a sort of first warning that this type of problem is going to become much more acute and widespread. The more economic progress we make, the more widespread and acute it is going to become, because progress means dislocation inevitably. I can see some acute suffering among working people, especially those who are not represented by strong unions if there is not a much better type of policy than we have at the present.

Could the hon. Minister indicate if any sort of procedures could be developed whereby this government and the government at Ottawa will get advance notice of layoffs, changes in plans and so on that are going to take place, instead of being caught by surprise as apparently one of the senior Ministers at Ottawa was by the Ford announcement? I must say that I was a little shocked when I heard that the first the hon. Minister opposite heard of the actual signing of the agreement was at the same time as I did, when it appeared in the papers. I think that is terrible, I think a protest should be made to the federal government. They ought to keep you informed so that you will have a chance to get adjusted.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just make a couple of brief comments following your remarks? There are always two sides to a story. I have it on good authority that not only did Ottawa know that the layoff was coming, but also Mr. Burt. I have that on good authority. I am not going to press the issue, I am just going to suggest to you that when the meeting took place between the president of Ford Motor Car Company up in Ottawa yesterday, or the day before, you noticed the comments in the newspapers. Well, it was not as bad as it appeared. I do not think the company should be classed as a whipping boy because somebody runs off at the chin and says we were not informed.

Mr. Bryden: This government was not informed.

Hon. Mr. Randall: This government was not informed, I can assure you of that. I know the hon. Minister of Labour was not informed and we are taking steps to talk to our friends in the motor car industry and say that if this is going to happen again, I certainly hope that you not only inform the people you say you inform, but you will also inform us. I think that with the group we have working with the federal authorities from here on in, that we will get this information and be able to do something about it, at least be prepared for it.

Second, I would suggest this. I talked about the Kennedy round, and as you know the Kennedy plan was that if industries were affected and workers were dislocated, there would be a programme set up over a period of months, or three years, to pay them an income plus train them, and maybe what has happened is a blessing in disguise. Perhaps instead of having the entire economy dumped in the same position with all these unknown factors, the automobile business can be a good example of how we are going to solve further problems if we have freer trade.

There are always some benefits. There are going to be some pleasures with a little pain. I am inclined to believe that while at the moment this is a hot subject—it is a very major one because there are over 81,000 persons employed in this industry and most of them in this province—we certainly have a deep concern about people who are going to be laid off and about what is going to be done about assisting the manufacturers. If my business drops off, what do I do about the money I owe? What do I do about new equipment? We are gathering all this together. Perhaps we have not been able, in view of the circumstances, to move as quickly as possible and have a programme ready. Neither have the Americans. I think we recognize this, and it is one of the things that is coming up in Congress right now.

I think that if we look at this as an experiment that we have to learn to live with, and learn quickly in the matter of a few months, perhaps if other industries go this way in the not-too-distant future, we can prevent mass layoffs and dislocation. At least I think we will be better prepared to find the answers than we are at the moment. I am encouraged to believe that this is an example of how we can get co-operation with the federal authorities. We have different political faiths, but I can assure you that as far as I am concerned—and I am sure some of the other Ministers will say the same thing—we have a very good working relationship with the Ministers up there now, and I can understand their reluctance to discuss with us the minute details of negotiation until it is completed. On the other hand, we would have liked to have been informed, but we were not. However, there is no use sitting around crying about something you could not do anything about. The thing for us to do is get on the job, work with them and make sure that the man in the factory that carries the lunch pail is not the victim of a lot of conversation and no action.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, did I understand the hon. Minister to indicate that some training programme is going forward at the present time that will occupy the time and energies of these people during the period of layoff? I understand from what he said, that he is very optimistic that the industry will ultimately absorb these men, either back in these factories when they are retooled, or in other phases of the industry. But what he has just said would seem to indicate that a programme is going forward for retraining. Is this the fact, or did I misunderstand what the hon. Minister said?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I did not say there was a plan going forward. I said I am quite sure that at The Department of Labour and at The Department of Labour at Ottawa—as you know the national employment service has been transferred into The Department of Labour—there has been a lot more activity to see what it can do about retraining, and I think there will be some very definite changes and plans coming forward, and we will be informed of it and make our contribution to it. I would think it is too early for us to predict what the plan will be, but certainly it is obvious that the change up in Ottawa of the national employment service means that they are going to put some teeth into it, and they are going to get perhaps more co-operation with the provincial authorities in doing so. There are some plans as you know. We have had in-plant training in some areas. We have had some pilot plans going on, but we recognize, and we are probably the first to admit, that there has not been the activity in this that we would like to have. Certainly

I would be inclined to believe this will be stepped up also.

Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I would like first of all to thank the hon. Minister for his very frank remarks regarding this international agreement. I would also like to agree with many of the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine.

The first time I heard about this agreement, the Drury Mark II plan, I thought it was a new cigarette. I think that the idea of negotiating prior to the making of an international agreement that affects an industry which is more than 90 per cent in our province, is important. I also agree with the hon. member for Woodbine when he says there should be co-operation in planning between the two levels of government and also with the particular companies concerned. I would also include certain agencies in a municipality.

I was wondering, if the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, could inform me and inform the House whether or not he has any indications of any layoffs at Ford in Oakville?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, there is no indication and I have talked to Mr. Carl Scott in the last two or three days. I would say, knowing what I know of manufacturing, that that is a brand-new plant out there with lots of acreage around it, so it is not too difficult to knock out a wall, and while you are still producing, to extend the building and extend the line. I do not think they will have the problems there that perhaps they would have in Windsor. I have been through that plant out there and I know a large section of it is temporary. It is put up with telephone poles; it was done that way purposely, so that they use it during the summer months for storage and extra production. Knowing how quickly a company of that size can work, I would think there would be very little dislocation. I am not quoting Mr. Scott, I am just suggesting that the plant layout, the area, lends itself to knocking out a wall and extending the plant and turning out more sausages without too much disruption.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I wonder whether it would be appropriate to offer the hon. Minister a thought related to this Windsor situation. It would seem to me that in view of some of the studies which have been done in the United States on the effects of the impact of technological change that this is a perfect opportunity for the government of Ontario, under the aegis of the economic council, to institute a case study of what happens to the workers during the interim period of displacement.

Why would it not be wise for The Department of Economics and Development to choose 300 or 400 or 500 of the workers who have thus been displaced and follow them through their travail and their difficulty during the next year, analyze the existing contracts, discuss the aspects of monetary return during this displacement, analyze the age distribution of the work force attacked, take a look at the applicability of Programme Five and those who can make the adaptation and those who cannot, take a look at the economic and social forces in the community and how they come into play over the next six months to a year when the displacement will be at its height, and perhaps present this Legislature in a year or a year and a half with a case study of economic dislocation due to technological change, the precise effects on individual workers, on their families, on their incomes, on their psychological adjustment problems if there are any, and give us some kind of basis upon which to predict for the future?

I think that as sad and unfortunate as some of the aspects of the Windsor case are, it does give us this opportunity. It is an opportunity which has been seized with great dispatch and intelligence by the labour statistics branch of the federal department in the United States and I think it is one that could well be duplicated here on this occasion, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I thank the hon. member very much. I think that this is a recommendation that certainly the economic council can give very serious consideration to. Mr. Cranston informs me that it would not be too difficult for us to do this, particularly in Windsor, where the problem has boiled down to one particular city, or if it happens—say, for instance—in Oshawa. Certainly I think it is one we can take into consideration and see what we can do about it.

I am also informed that through the figures released by the national employment service in Ottawa, a Department of Labour release, that there are more than 25,000 unemployed going through various retraining programmes across Canada now, and this compares with 65,000 in the United States. If there is a retraining programme going on, I cannot give you the details, except that these figures were released by the federal authorities at Ottawa, how factually I do not know, and give some indication that there is a training programme going on. I think what we would be more interested in is the 1,600 people we are talking about in Windsor. Is a man going to make radios; is he going to make automobile fenders?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, before we get into some of these very large-scale problems, I do not think the hon. Minister had an opportunity to answer one of the questions asked by the hon. member for Grey North regarding the composition of the staff of the economic council. I am not concerned about clerks and stenographers, but some of the more senior staff. I am also not interested in names. I would just like to know about the classifications and the duties of the people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I will be glad to give it to you. We have, as you know, a chairman and 17 members on the economic council.

Mr. Bryden: None of those are salaried people, though, are they?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The chairman is on a per-diem basis.

Mr. Bryden: And otherwise they get their expenses?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is all, yes. We have ten permanent people on the staff of the economic council. We have one secretary to the chairman, one executive officer, one senior economist, two other economists—I suppose they would be considered to be junior economists—three project consultants and two clerical stenographers, for a total of ten.

Mr. Bryden: How does this staff tie in with the staff that comes under the next vote—that of the office of the chief economist? Do they have some sort of clearing to make sure they are not engaged in the same things? Why is the staff separated from the office of the chief economist in the first place? I can see that the council may need a small staff to make its physical arrangements for it—meeting places and that sort of thing—but it seems to me that there would be sense in the co-ordination of research functions and I would judge from the titles that you gave that most of these people are carrying out research of one kind or another, either as economists or on special projects. Why is not the whole research function co-ordinated?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just suggest that even in some other departments of government, as you have already heard, there is an economist or two to prepare some of the work for the department. Then, when the detail of that work has to be taken into consideration, it is transferred, let us say, to the mass department of economists, which is now under the chief economist.

In other words, if there is a preliminary report to be prepared to decide what a department wants or what the economic council wants, the department has to have those people on the staff, but they are not running a regular programme of work on specific projects. They prepare the projects, turn them over to the chief economist, and he in turn will do one of two things. If we have sufficient staff to carry out the research for the economic council or any other department, we will do it; if we do not, we will have it done by a consulting service, so that the work is done as quickly as possible at the lowest cost.

This is the minimum number of people, we believe, with which the economic council can be operated to do the things that it has been doing. I can assure you that they are many and they are varied, and much of the information I have given to the House this afternoon has been gathered by the economic council with its authorities up in Ottawa and various other sources. Therefore, it is not a duplication of the economist in The Department of Economics; it is just a feeder service so that we can do the detail work for it if the work is of long duration.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, how is the council going about studying the problem of automation, as the hon. Minister indicated it intended to do? The impression I get is that automation is a sort of fringe concern of three different departments. It is very deeply submerged in the research division of The Department of Labour; it seems to be one of many activities that is engaging the attention of the economic council along with such matters as the souvenir industry. Personally I think the problem merits a much more co-ordinated attack than that and it is possible it can come through the economic council. The members of the council are certainly experienced and knowledgeable people, but they themselves can only provide the benefit of their general savvy and experience. The job still has to be done by somebody else. How is it being organized? I mean, what sort of results can we expect from this study? Will we have published documents to indicate the anticipated projected impact of automation? How is the project going to proceed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, as the hon. Prime Minister announced a few weeks ago, the assignment on automation and technological change was given to the economic council because it is one in which it originated. Let us say it originated through the economic council at the conference we had here some two years ago. It was thought that we could use the council to work with Dr. Deutsch and the economic council of Canada, with the universities, and also with our own chief economist, The Department of Labour, The Department of Education—it will be almost a co-ordinating body to find out what is the programme, what is the plan that should be established to deal with automation. I would think that it is in the right department at the present time, because there are people there who are very much interested, as you see from the makeup of the council. Not only many businessmen, but labour leaders, who perhaps have as much interest in this as anyone else, and have more time to devote to it and give us their thinking on it.

I would suggest that the pivot point of this automation programme should be with the economic council. Much has been done already to get the programme started. I would hope that we would have a further report on this in the not-too-distant future. It is something I think the hon. Prime Minister outlined fully about our feelings on automation. Certainly it is something that cannot be ignored, it is something, as I pointed out in my estimates speech, that only 26 per cent of the workers by 1970 are going to be employed in manufacturing, and yet we are going to be turning out more products so that many more will be included in the service industry. When we talk about automation, I think we also have to talk about the service industry, because even the service industries are going to have to become more automatic and more efficient than they are.

I would think that with what we are doing through the economic council we will come up with a plan and a report that will satisfy the hon. members of the House.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, one reason I am concerned about this is because of the statement that the hon. Prime Minister made some time ago and to which the hon. Minister referred on a few occasions.

My impression from the hon. Prime Minister's statement was that he really did not think the problem of automation was a very serious problem—that if we just let nature take its course everything would work out in the long run and we would all be better off. That may be true, except the long run can be an awfully long time and a great many people can get hurt in the meantime. I had hoped that perhaps the economic council was going to take what I would call a more realistic view of this thing; that it would get down to cases and actually try to anticipate the kinds of problems that are going to arise. You see, this automobile agreement we were talking about is just one of many similar situations that are going to arise.

Something that strikes one about the hon. Minister's department is that it seems to have a great many committees with pivot functions and people whirling all around the pivot point. Is anybody ever going to get anything focused, and get on with the job so that there can be not just opinions or guesses but some pretty hard study on which to develop policies? There seems to be a great deal of talk about all these problems and everybody is getting into the act, but nobody seems to be pulling anything out of it. I may be wrong on that, but this is the impression I get from some of the statements the hon. Minister has been making.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to assure the hon. member that the hon. Prime Minister has a very serious interest in the problems of automation. I think that is one of the reasons why we have asked Mr. Cranston who, I am sure, knows as much about automation as anybody else in this House. He has been in the shoe business for many years and if anything is automated it is certainly the shoe business. I think I know something about the problems of automation. I certainly have a great interest in making sure that these problems don't get out of hand and we don't get in real deep trouble.

So I would suggest to the hon. member that while it may sound like we are putting committees together, there is not a day goes by but, you will have to admit, your own side of the House gets up and says, "Why don't you appoint somebody to do this, why don't you appoint a commission here, appoint a commission there?" This seems to be one of the major things you do in government—to appoint bodies and commissions. I agree with you. It is probably necessary in view of the amount of work that has to be done. For the gigantic job that has to be done in government certainly we require, I believe, committees for this and committees for that. The major problem about committees is being able to control them and get them to reach deadlines. One of the things that I have discussed with the hon. Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet, particularly with the economic branches, is that I look at it somewhat like a drafting room. If you are running a plant and you keep throwing jobs in the drafting room and you do not put a deadline on them, you may never get them out of the drafting room.

I think our economics department is set up on the same basis. When we put a job in there we would like to have a deadline as to when we are going to get it out. If they do not have the bodies we will get them. If we do not think the bodies are needed for a length of time, perhaps we should get a university to do the job, as we have done in the past. I would think that the matter is well in hand insofar as automation is concerned. We have been charged by the hon. Prime Minister in bringing in a report, and we certainly are going to.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, it has been said that a dromedary is a horse that was organized by a committee, and I think there is a lot of truth in that. I know there is a role for committees, and I know they are proliferating at all government levels, but I still think that stress has to be laid on the actual development of co-ordinated policies and co-ordinated attacks on problems.

However, at this time I guess the most we can do is wait and see how the hon. Minister and his advisors manage to work out some of these problems.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, just on that particular theme for a moment. Is there anything top secret about the studies which the hon. Minister intends to do, the projected areas of analysis? Would it be possible at some juncture in this House for us to have from the hon. Minister, under the umbrella of the Ontario economic council, a list of studies, whatever they may be, manpower or adjustments, presented to this Legislature so we will know what it is doing? And could we at some point have a list from the hon. Minister of Labour of what his research branch is doing, because certainly the words which have come from both hon. Ministers in the last several weeks have directly overlapped, and we on this side of the House, I think, have at least the right in this broad field to know which branch of government is undertaking which study at which time. It is not a matter of criticizing the study, it is just a matter of knowing what is being done in this general field.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I would say there are some studies that we could release. I am not sure we could release all of them because they may be released in part and they would not be factual. I would suggest that we will take that into consideration, and that any studies we have that we think would be of interest to the hon. members we will certainly release them.

An hon. member: You cannot beat that for co-operation.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Scarborough West suggested a study in the community concerning the effects of automation, but I think this study was primarily centred around the Ford Motor Company and the layoff where you would have a select group. May I suggest to the hon. Minister that while they are conducting that study—there is a resources study that I think has been completed by your department of the Windsor area, so this would simplify the study as far as the automation factor was concerned—there is another effect that this auto trade agreement may have. The hon. Minister mentioned the number of parts that will be manufactured by a given industry will now multiply.

I would say the number of individual pieces will multiply, but the number of different parts will be much fewer. In other words, an industry now will make, let us say, 100,000 parts of one given item rather than make 20,000 of five items. This may adversely affect the tool and die industry in the community. The tool and die industry in Windsor is very substantial, so that while the department is undertaking this automation study, I would appreciate it if they would undertake to study the effects of this auto trade agreement on the tool and die industry. These manufacturers may not have to make the number of dies they would have had were there not an auto trade agreement. So, Mr. Minister, would you look into that at the same time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is included in the study.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, I have a question of the hon. Minister.

The hon. Minister mentioned a time limit on certain studies, I believe in 1962 a study was made of the tourist industry. I have asked this question prior in the year: Is this study now completed and printed, and will it be made available to the public at large?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The study is in the hands of The Department of Tourism and Information. I understand it is not printed yet but my information is that it will be very shortly.

Mr. Paterson: Is there any point in my continuing with questions in regard to this report, or should I await the published report from the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would suggest that it would be just as well to wait for the published report, you will have all the facts.

Vote 402 agreed to.

On vote 403:

Mr. Taylor: The hon. Minister indicated earlier that under the new setup the chief economist would likely be responsible for the statistics for all government departments. Do we infer from that that his department would be compiling those statistics as well, or will they continue to be compiled by the departments and co-ordinated by the office of the chief economist?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think that the major reporting on statistics—we have a statistics branch—will be done by The Department of Economics and Development under its chief economist. But as I said before, it is quite possible that some departments can put their own figures together. They will send them on to us and they will be compiled as they are in this report here so that they come out under the one report. I would say most of the correlating of the report will be done under the chief economist so that we are all releasing the same kind of information.

By the way, for the hon. members who have not met the chief economist, Mr. Ian MacDonald, he has just moved in here. I think you would like to have a look at him so you can ask him some questions. He would be glad to see you up at his office at any time.

Vote 403 agreed to.

On vote 404:

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, in vote 404 on the ODA, I would like to make a comment or two.

First of all, I have been over many times to 950 Yonge Street and I want to congratulate the hon. Minister for the effort that goes into this agency and the kind of people he has been able to gather around himself over there. When this was established and came to my attention it seemed to me that here was a medium where I could get some help for various struggling enterprises in northern Ontario, so I steered some of these people over there. Some of these contacts have been fruitful certainly, but I continually run up against one or two of the weaknesses, as I see them, of the agency.

I want to ask the hon. Minister why, for instance, the terms of reference of the agency have to be limited to exclude primary industry? This is the type of thing that we always run up against in our country. There is not very much left when you take out mining, prospecting, fishing and lumbering and the kind of things that we do in northern Ontario. We have to realize that, for instance, in mining we find we have potential small industries. We have prospectors who are certainly among the poorest of any of us and have not got the facilities, or have not the money or the ability, to develop certain small mines but could, mind you, employ 30, 40, 50 or more men.

But we are up against this roadblock. After all, this kind of help is not available within The Department of Mines; so it is not available anywhere. I can see no real reason why this kind of help could not be available in the agency. I would like the hon. Minister to comment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The reason for the ODA working on the basis it does, not perhaps being as helpful to primary industries as I hope it will be in the future, is that we endeavoured to set up to make the most impact on secondary industry. This was where we felt the majority of jobs would be found, in secondary industry, and we would take out time and efforts and devote it that way. As you know the ODA, as far as I am concerned, has proven to be a very valuable asset for the province. As I announced the other day I think there will be some major changes made in the ODA's operations in the not-too-distant future.

We have many other things under consideration, particularly in view of the change in employment between now and 1970. I think we have to look at the secondary industries, which also would include primary industries. The closest we could come to assisting anybody in the primary industry is the Cobalt refining.

I do not know whether you know or not, but most of the silver mined in Ontario went down to Arizona somewhere to be refined and back up to the mint at Ottawa. This company was in need of assistance. We gave it a year or so ago and today the silver mined in Ontario is refined at Cobalt refinery and shipped up to the mint.

If you can consider that primary industry, we have helped one organization, one firm in primary industry. But I would think that consideration could be given to assisting the people you are talking about in the not-too-distant future. Again, it is one of the things we are looking at with reference to our planning for regional development.

Mr. Farquhar: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the machinery is there, the people are there and this particular agency could do a wonderful job along the line I have suggested. I am hopeful that the hon. Minister will give this consideration and expand these terms of reference.

We have to remember that in the fishing industry, for instance, there is at the moment possibly no great future, but there are establishments in northern Ontario that are bankrupt at the moment, practically bankrupt, and could use a little help, could use possibly a little advice in their structural and financial setups, and possibly a little capital to keep them going in the light of the fact that fishing does seem to be coming back a little bit. But there is not this kind of help available within the fish and wildlife section of The Department of Lands and Forests. There is no help anywhere unless the agency can develop its terms of reference.

The same thing happens in the case of prospectors. There are many of them in our area, and there are many minerals, as all the hon. members know, which have not been exploited to this point. But in all cases the leases in connection with these various potential mines are held by prospectors who do not have the money to expand them. As long as the ODA can limit itself to the position where they cannot work with primary industry, we are getting no place in northern Ontario because there is nothing there but primary industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I suggest that if the hon. member has a list of these people he says need that assistance—fishing companies and so on—if he will let me have a list we can do one of two things: We can put it on the programme and take a look at it; and second, I think that in many of those cases what many of them need besides money, and perhaps more than money, is a little advice as to how to market their products and how to operate efficiently.

I think I said the other day, and the fact is true, that the majority of these people do not need money but they certainly do need management advice. They need advice as to how to set up their accounts and how to merchandise. If some of these people come to see us perhaps we can even get them into our export trade promotion and find markets for them that they cannot find domestically. There have been instances where we have taken people into the export market who were not doing too well domestically, but now they are doing very well on an export basis. So if the hon. member will give us a list, we will be glad to take a look at them.

Mr. Farquhar: I think we have made our point here; just one step further. I have been over to 950 Yonge, as I said, with all these people. These cases I refer to are all on record and they have moved to a certain position, but there they stopped because of the limited terms of reference. I am sure these cases I speak of are available to the hon. Minister, and if not I will surely make them available. But they are on record.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there is one aspect of the ODA's operations that I would like to raise briefly.

The hon. Minister's predecessor unveiled the first loan that was made under ODA in a fashion that would make a Cecil B. DeMille Hollywood production look second-rate. Unfortunately, within a year that turned out to be the Fairfield episode and I think the original unveiling looked a little out of place.

The explanation given by him later with regard to the shroud of secrecy that fell upon the operations of the ODA was that the company did not want the internal operations of the firm to become public property and I think the hon. Minister gave substantially the same explanation a year or so ago.

Now we seem to have some slight change in this policy. The hon. Minister explained, if I recall his comments in his introductory statement, that he had permission from three of the companies to give the details and he did give these details. Perhaps it is not surprising that the three he had chosen were success stories. I am a little bit curious about the failures, because the Fairfield instance—the first instance—upon careful examination, struck me as being a pretty doubtful kind of proposition from the word go, and I am a little curious as to how the ODA or the various screening agencies involved in the ODA could ever have been drawn into a company with the questionable record that that company had.

As I understand it, what happens is that the hon. Minister has a financial advisory committee which reviews the applications and passes upon them. Am I correct, Mr. Chairman, that no loan is granted or underwritten, to put it more accurately, unless it has been approved by the advisory committee? May I ask specifically with regard to one? I understand that one of the companies that has gone bankrupt is the Campbellford Pulp Company, a small outfit that was getting into the pulp business. Am I not correct in this instance, that this application was turned down twice by the financial advisory committee?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Here is the answer to the hon. member's question about the Campbellford Pulp Company. I will give him the full details and I want to say that I am not reluctant to disclose information on failures. I think that only by disclosing the failures and looking at our own weaknesses are we going to be able to protect ourselves in the future.

I might also make a point right now that this is the only province in Canada that developed an agency that does make public its losses. I would suggest that if the hon. member does not take that statement seriously, he should look at the statements of other development agencies across the country. They will not tell what their loans or losses are and if they are asked which are the companies that they loaned money to or which are the companies that went bankrupt, they will give no information whatsoever.

Mr. MacDonald: They must have a poor Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps that is it. I am just suggesting that they are set up on a little different basis, which perhaps we could discuss later on. But I am not at all reluctant to release information on any losses. I simply suggest though, before I talk about this one, that when the ODA was put together—as I pointed out last year—we did not have the backup staff that was required. We got into it because there was a need to assist small industries to provide jobs and as we got our experience, sometimes the hard way, we profited from that experience.

Again I say to you, as I said two days ago, that since I took over the portfolio, of all the loans made there has been only one $5,000 loss and that was made to a gentleman manufacturing Indian products—totem poles and so on—and this was more or less a charitable donation to try to help somebody we have all been talking about. We have stiffened up very considerably the process of granting loans and I would think that the chances of our getting into a difficulty like the Fairfield incident will be very, very remote from here on in, because from this experience we have been able to put some teeth into our demands on the part of the people who want a loan.

Many of the hon. members send people in, and I think that because hon. members send them in they think that they can automatically get their hand into the till. When we ask them for an audit statement, they do not know what we are talking about; then they say that they will make it up and bring it in and we reply that it must be made up by a certified accountant. Sometimes weeks go by before they show up and then we get complaints that the agency does not work fast enough. But we are not lending money to anybody without a certified statement.

A statement will not always tell the facts, as the hon. member well knows. You have to read between the lines, and the people who come to us, even with a statement, are people who have gone to regular financial institutions where the statement is not good enough to get a loan. We have to be judge and jury as to whether the government should take a chance on this man, help him do the job he wants to do and provide the employment in his particular area.

Here is the statement on the Campbellford Pulp Company:

At its meeting on April 4, 1963, the financial advisory committee deferred consideration of an application from Campbellford Pulp Company Limited for a guarantee loan of $75,000 until its next meeting pending clarification of certain points.

A serious situation arose in the progress of the company because funds were not available to process orders for pulpwood which had been received. The secretary of the committee therefore telephoned all members of the committee who were within striking distance of Toronto—eight of the nine appointed members—and asked them to attend a special emergency meeting. Forty-eight hours' notice was given of this meeting.

On April 11, 1963, when the meeting was held, only four members attended. The motion to grant this company a guarantee was passed by a majority of three to one.

It should be pointed out that this was one of the early guarantees and all of the rules governing the activities of the financial advisory committee had not yet been formulated. In the existing rules the majority of the members must be present to constitute a quorum, so this is just one of the weaknesses of the early days of the ODA and I am sure it has been corrected.

Mr. MacDonald: Had it been turned down twice?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was never turned down, it was deferred. This happens time and time again. I have talked to some of the hon. Liberal members; they have sent people in, and in our first discussions with them they give us the information they have available. If we find that it should be questioned we ask them to go back and get further information. Perhaps in the long run they do get turned down but on the other hand deferring it does not necessarily mean that—

Mr. MacDonald: The door is kept open.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The door is always open. I can suggest that perhaps the criticism that ODA will get more than anything else will be from people who come in and do not get a loan because they think of ODA as the government and that they should automatically be granted a loan or a guarantee. Our feeling is that they have to be made to realize that it is a business institution. We are willing to take a risk, but at least we want a fair chance of knowing whether the money is going to be used for the purposes that it is needed for.

The hon. member would be surprised about the state of some companies that come in. Let us say that company A is $100,000 in the red with its creditors and the owner wants to borrow $100,000. If we gave him that sum he would go right back home, pay off all his creditors and then say that he had no operating capital and go down the drain. This is a thing that we have to watch very carefully because it can happen if we get too excited about giving loans. It is far better for us to say we would give him $150,000 than to give him $100,000 and then have him fold before sunset after he has paid off his creditors.

I could write a book about some of the organizations that have come in and attempted to borrow money. We have had some people come in who have six companies and $9,000 of working capital, but when all of the six companies have been gone through, the last company owed the prospective borrower $100,000. And that is exactly what he wanted to borrow. I am quite sure in my mind that if we gave him $100,000 it would have been transferred through these six companies to the end, and he would have been the fellow to take the $100,000. Therefore, we defer a lot of these until we get together. I am quite sure we could have lent this man some money had he done what we suggested—gone back and consolidated the six companies until we found out who his creditors really were.

This is one of the problems of running the agency. I would just like to suggest that the risks that we get are people who have gone to other institutions and cannot go anywhere else, but if we are going to be of any assistance, we have to take that kind of gamble. I know we are going to be criticized when we have losses, but also as I pointed out, we had many success stories, as you referred to. I have mentioned three only. I could mention 24 that are success stories.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask you, what are the total losses now? More than $4 million has been lent. What are the outstanding losses?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The total losses are about $487,000 since the agency started and perhaps this is a good point at which to review what has been accomplished.

I referred a few minutes ago to the other development agencies. I think this will be to the edification of the hon. members; I am sure they will be interested in it. Let us take GIC in Quebec. This is a Crown corporation setup; the bonds sold by it are guaranteed by the Quebec government. They sold something like $50 million of the bonds, guaranteed by the province. The money was put into a committee to loan to small industries, and if you look at their balance sheet last year, they loaned about $9 million, but they had an income of something like $450,000 or $460,000. Now, the money was not earned on the money loaned, the money was earned on taking the proceeds of the debenture and putting it out on short-term loans, and nobody knows whether any of the $8 million or $9 million was lost or not. This is why I say that no other agency, that I know of, explains its losses.

Now, ODA works on a different basis. We have no money. We use the government credit on a guaranteed loan through the bank, so that when we do have a loss it stands out like a red wheel on a hearse. It cannot be buried. We are not interested in burying it, but I think also we should recognize—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): A hearse too; do you bury it as well?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not interested in hiding the losses, because I think the $487,000 has done this. There have been 43 guarantees made to 40 companies up to December 31, 1964. None of these companies could obtain funds from the conventional lending institutions, therefore the province took the risk where other lenders were not willing to do so. Management, consulting and technical services provided the 3,000 companies and individuals, many of whom are now operating more efficiently, maintaining or creating additional jobs, and adding to the economic potential of the province. These advisory services have been made available in all parts of the province. More than 170 inventors have been assisted in their projects. Of these, more than half have had their inventions evaluated by the Ontario research foundation at our cost. Some 40 new products and techniques have been assisted to reach the market.

In addition to the $4,700,000 provided in guarantees, Ontario companies were assisted to raise $11.5 million, making a total of $16.2 million in additional financing obtained by Ontario companies as a result of the agency's efforts. The guarantees provided by the agency are either maintaining, or in the course of creating, 3,100 job opportunities.

Its other activities, both financial and advisory, are either maintaining or creating a further 2,800 jobs, for a total of 5,900 job opportunities. Canada's balance of payments position has been improved to the extent of $19.3 million as the result of replacement of imports by the firms assisted of $5.2 million, and additional exports of $14.1 million.

I have given to the House three success stories of the agency of which we talked a few minutes ago, and I have many others. Many others have benefited from the Ontario development agency programme. Municipalities have added additional assessment. Local tradesmen and company suppliers have benefited from purchase of the companies and the payroll of the workers. Additional benefits have accrued through education and welfare, unemployment and similar causes. In some instances, new business has been attracted as a result of the establishment of plants under the guarantee loan programme, and I think I have pointed out that in Carleton Place Leigh Instruments attracted three other companies because they were put in business by the agency.

Under the guaranteed loan programme, the province did not have to go to the market to raise additional funds and pay interest thereon. Instead, we used the credit of the province. The hon. members may be interested to know that most of the repayments are being made on schedule. Repayments fall due at different times for each company. Some companies have a two-year moratorium before they start to pay back, some have a year. To date, four guarantees have already been completely discharged right on schedule, and several others will be discharged in the near future. Losses to date have amounted to about $487,000. In what more economical manner could the province have obtained the successful plants which are now operating? And 5,900 job opportunities at an average cost of $90 each?

I think the raising of $16.2 million in additional financing, and improving the balance of payments position of $19.3 million, as well as the other benefits to Ontario, have accrued for this $487,000. I think the money was well spent, although I do not like to see losses any more than anybody else. But again I would like to suggest, and I think you would agree with me, that the figures indicate that it cost $10,000 to train a man for service industry and $20,000 for manufacturing, so if we say it costs $10,000 to provide a job, you take the 5,900 and multiply it by that, I think you can see that $487,000. I am not alibing for the loss, I am just suggesting that I think the money—the way we have handled it—has been well spent, despite the losses, and again I say I think the losses have been reduced to a minimum in the last year.

Mr. MacDonald: I can understand how the hon. Minister sells refrigerators to Eskimos, when he can make a failure sound as attractive as that. He is obviously something of a salesman.

However, may I get some clarification as to procedures for my own satisfaction? If you have had a bankruptcy, does the government then in effect take over the payments, or does it wipe the whole thing off and pay the bank, or the lending institution or whatever traditional institution had made the money available?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What happens is that the bank, in many instances, will take a first floating charge on the assets of the company, whatever they are. The man may put up life insurance, or his furniture, anything he has in the way of an asset. If he goes bankrupt, the bank will then in a regular business way, as though we were not behind it, go ahead and exercise its opinion to take the assets. If the amount collected on the assets is not sufficient to meet the amount guaranteed, we make up the difference.

Mr. MacDonald: And is this $487 million?

Hon. Mr. Randall: $487,000!

Mr. MacDonald: Thousand, rather.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Get away from that million, you scare me.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, the amount of loans involved, may have been much larger. This is the deficiency that you had to make up?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there is something in the nature of an exploratory question I would like to ask the hon. Minister and perhaps it falls into the category of the different ways that comparable agencies operate in other provinces. I was rather interested, and I am certain that a lot of people were, when earlier this year, it was announced by Clairtone that they were going to move some of their establishment to Nova Scotia. The Globe and Mail on January 26 quotes Peter Monk, president of Clairtone Sound Corporation, as saying that the biggest factor in Clairtone's decision to build a $3.5 million plant in Nova Scotia, was the $7,945,000 it obtained through the Nova Scotia government.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would care to comment on that, because I know in business circles, and in many other circles, there were big question marks as to what, if anything, justifiably and legitimately, should be done in Ontario, when an industry like Clairtone would be attracted away, although I understand they contend they are not really closing up here, they are opening up elsewhere in an expansion. But I have heard it whispered that this may be only stage one. In stage two, even the existing plant here might be moving.

But quite apart from that speculation, what is the hon. Minister's comment on the relative position of the kind of assistance that is given by the government of Nova Scotia? We cannot suggest anything invidious about it—they are both Tory governments, there and here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me be quite frank with you. This government is not going to go into competition with some of—let us say—our sister provinces who badly need industry. I say most of them could have a nickel mine if they would put the mine there first. It is going to cost money to put industry in these areas. The people who are attracted are people who probably need financial assistance now, even though they are in Ontario, but perhaps to raise the kind of money they want, their borrowing power has reached its maximum. Now, if somebody comes along from another province and says, well I will give you the kind of money you require and supply the kind of plant you require at an interest rate they can live with for the next 15 or 20 years, I would be reluctant to criticize any entrepreneur who would not take advantage of that opportunity.

I might suggest to you that this is not entirely exclusive to the Maritime provinces, this is going on in the far west. If any province can afford to have a 'give-away' programme, I am sure we could, but we would certainly be accused of trying to prevent industry from going into areas where it is badly needed.

The Clairtone situation is one I know something about. Peter Monk served on one of our committees here at the economic council for one or two meetings, and then got too busy and he could not continue to serve. So he knew the agency was available if he needed funds from us. But from the amount of funds which were loaned to him by Nova Scotia, I think something like $8.5 million over a long term at a very good rate of interest, one he could live with—I think he was very wise to accept it, despite the fact we did not want to see the company leave Ontario. I think if you had been in our position, you would have been reluctant to make the same deal.

The Maritime provinces, as you know, have had a number of meetings amongst themselves because they realize they are being outbid by each other. This company in particular was negotiated for by New Brunswick, and they were very upset when they lost it and it went to Nova Scotia. Since this has happened, as you know, there has been a meeting of the minds down there. They say they are not going to go out and outbid each other, and discount each other right out of business in order to attract industry. This was bound to happen and I think it is a good thing that it did happen. That is the answer to Clairtone, the man got a good deal and he took it. If I were in his shoes and needed that kind of assistance I would have done exactly the same thing.

Mr. MacDonald: My question was an exploratory one.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you happy with the answer?

Mr. Sargent: The hon. members of the House will recall last year that under this vote the Fairfield plant was a "cause célèbre," as it were. Seeing that frankness is the order of the day, in the words of the hon. Minister, I want to be very frank in that the concept of this loan to the Fairfield plant in Owen Sound was, to all of us, a fine one and we are very happy with it. In all fairness to the working staff of the ODA, they did an excellent job in trying to make an almost lost cause a going concern, along with those of us who had our own capital in the matter. I have no quarrel with anything, insofar as I am sorry the thing did not go; but the motivation at that point in discussing this department with the House, was that I knew $85,000 had been expended by this department because there was an election in prospect at that time.

I think most members will appreciate the fact that we are in this business serving people, trying to do a job; but once we start to mislead people, then we are out of business. The hon. Minister who inherited this department and the situation at Fairfield, tried to get the government off the hook, as it were, in his reply to me. I was a new member at that time, I was inept in presenting my facts, as I probably am now, and aware of my many shortcomings. But I was sincere in what I was trying to tell the House on behalf of my party. In light of the facts as they have developed now in the past year—I have had an opportunity to review the company books and everything I have said is true—I am going to ask the hon. Minister, after I have revealed my information, to withdraw his inference that I had misled the House, that I was trying to make political capital out of these statements.

This is a very serious thing, sir, for a Minister to accuse a member of misleading the House. The hon. Minister says on page 375 of Hansard, in a long discourse trying to justify the government's position:

I regret that the member for Grey North, in his maiden speech, attempted to make political capital out of a genuine effort—

That I will go for, it was a genuine effort:

—of this government to assist the employment situation in Owen Sound. In so doing, he has brought no credit either on himself, the Liberal Party, the citizens of Owen Sound or the constituents that he represents.

Furthermore, by his actions, he might well have dealt a blow to further friendly co-operation between local municipalities and the Ontario development agency.

My concern at the time was that two months before the election this money, $80,000, had been poured into the company on loan signed by the ODA. The directors of our company met—the minutes show this, they are in a safe in Owen Sound—on July 22, 1962. They reviewed the situation, it was a hopeless situation and the plant had to close down.

But as you all realize there was an election underway at that time. The sitting member was a Tory in Owen Sound. The government refused, the ODA refused, to close the plant down and said: Keep her going. In the interim the Cabinet met, or the ODA met, and $80,000 more was approved to go into the pot in Owen Sound.

However, only $45,000 appeared at the bank.

On September 27, a telephone call came from Mr. Mitchell ordering the plant to close down for one week—that was two days after the election. Seeing that the election had been won by a Liberal on a very small majority of 10 votes, but it looked like the election might stand, the order came to close down the plant. The point at issue is that it was not until October 18 that this department had sent a notice to the bank advising them of this, but in the interim, on October 4, all the employees had been discharged, they had received their vacation-with-pay stamps and there was a skeleton staff of two or three people there working.

The hon. Minister goes on further to complicate the House, I do not suggest that he would do it purposely, but he says, in effect:

I would suggest that the member for Grey North should have been aware of the fact that the plant was not closed down the day following the election and that it was still operating last week.

This date he talks about is January 30. At that point the bank was operating under section 88 to get the balance of the stock out, they had a skeleton staff of two or three people there.

Our investigation of records shows now that everything I said was absolutely true and that the company wanted to close the plant down two months prior to the election and the ODA would not let them, they said: Keep it going. The facts are true as I stated them and I would suggest to the hon. Minister at this point in all fairness—he is a fair man, and I know most of the hon. members in this House are fair when a man's reputation is on the line, by his statement that I would mislead the House—I would suggest, Mr. Minister, that you have a full investigation of what I have said today, a full inquiry, and at that time I will expect an apology from you to me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, I would just suggest to the hon. member that the finance advisory committee and the civil servants certainly do not enter into politics when it comes to granting loans. Second, if all the facts as outlined in my statement are in Hansard, I do not have them with me, what was said then is as true then as it is today. I will be very glad to review the new information the hon. member has discussed today. If there is any need for an apology, I would be the first to make it, but I would like to see the information.

Mr. Sargent: May I interrupt, please? You say Hansard is as true now as it was then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right!

Mr. Sargent: The point I am making is, it is not true. I suggest you have a full inquiry as to who was telling the truth.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I suggest that we will take a look at it again.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

No. 81

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, April 29, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

Price per session $3.00. Address, Clerk of the House, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto.

CONTENTS

Thursday, April 29, 1965

Estimates, Department of Economics and Development, Mr. Randall, continued	2415
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	2467

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

(continued)

On vote 404:

Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, in connection with the lending of money on these ODA loans, do the loans provide funds for the purchase of fixed assets equipment or are they sometimes loans for working capital as well?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): They are only made for working capital at the present time. We have found that is the major problem with the companies that are having difficulties, so these are really working-capital loans. I might say again that in checking with other agencies across the country, this is unusual. Most of them lend against buildings and machinery.

Mr. Taylor: May I ask what type of security is normally taken, or are loans ever made without security and how has that worked out insofar as losses are concerned?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As the hon. member knows, when the loan is made it is made through the local bank that the man deals with. The bank will take whatever security he has to offer, depending of course on whether our guarantee says we will make the loan without any security, in which case the bank will give him the money and we take the risk. But in most instances the bank will take a first floating charge on anything that can be turned into assets if something goes wrong with the business. In the majority of cases, the borrower has some assets and this is the way it is handled.

Mr. Taylor: From the hon. Minister's experience, what is likely to be the length of term of the loan, and what basis of repayment is normally tried for?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I said, they vary. I think I mentioned this afternoon that sometimes a loan will be made and the man will not start payments for two years because he is starting up a new programme. The loans run up to five years, but there are varying periods. I do not think we have had any that have gone over the five-year period.

Mr. Taylor: In connection with the advisory services, do these necessarily go with each loan and is there a charge for this service? Of the seven firms that failed, did they have advisory services in their failures?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is no charge for the advisory services. That is our insurance that the loan is carefully watched. I wish I could say to you that the advisory services had been available from the first loss we suffered, but they were not. The advisory services were made available, I would say, nine or ten months after the agency went into business. The agency has proved that with the advisory services and the assistance we have been able to give, even some of these companies which failed were kept alive a lot longer than they probably would have under normal circumstances. But I would say now that any time we make a loan, we make sure that if the advisory services are required—and in many cases they are—they are available.

Mr. Taylor: Were the advisory services provided on those seven failures?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not in all cases. With the original ones which went into difficulty, there would be no advisory service available. That was one of the weaknesses that we took care of. But I would say that with perhaps three out of the seven the advisory services were available. Despite advisory services, the managements had some responsibilities and if they did not do as they were advised—as in some cases they did not—they get into difficulties and we got into difficulties.

Mr. Taylor: Since the total amount of loans guaranteed by ODA since its inception is only $4.7 million, does the hon. Minister feel that ODA has failed to achieve its objective or was the original $100 million estimate out of line?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not get the question on the $100 million; I presume the hon.

member is talking about the original thinking of setting up a development corporation?

Mr. Taylor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think that—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): No, he did not say that, he just wanted to know whether the hon. Minister's predecessor was alert.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe he was. I think the $100 million figure or the $50 million figure was something that was not definite—it was talked about. I do not think there was any definite figure established. I do not think that kind of money was required.

Answering the hon. member's second question, I would say yes, it has been very satisfactory. One of the reasons I say it is satisfactory is that in the first year when it was set up money was tight, it was very difficult to get, and we had most of the applications. Last year, as I mentioned, only nine guarantees were given and yet there were 1,500 of what we call interviews-in-depth with people whom we have helped, and about 1,400 people who merely made a telephone call or only came in once, and we do not call this an interview-in-depth.

I would say yes, it is satisfactory, but again, as I said this afternoon, we are looking at the needs of small industry, at what we call service industries today, and as the hon. member's colleague brought up, the primary industries. I think we have to take a look at where the jobs are going to be in the future and see where ODA can be of any further assistance.

Mr. Taylor: It was my understanding that the $100 million figure was written into the original Act. As I recall, the former Minister suggested that the initial outlay would be up to $100 million and if more was required another $100 million would be provided.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not in the Act, and as to what the Minister said, I do not have that information.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Come, come, my hon. friend! I heard the $100 million figure mentioned—it certainly was not put into the Act and there is nowhere in the Act that would show it. I do not think that the $100 million fund was really something that anybody anticipated would be established for a development fund, because as we found out and some of the other provinces found out, you can do a lot with $10 million, $15 million or $20 million.

Mr. Singer: Is the hon. Minister repudiating it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not repudiating it. The hon. member asked a question—

Mr. Singer: Either the hon. Minister is for him or against him.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What does the hon. member mean, for him or against him?

Mr. Singer: Well, is he right or is he wrong?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether he is right or wrong. We did not write it into the Act so perhaps—

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister is repudiating it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, let the hon. member have his way.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. Minister whether he feels that the limitations requiring that applicants be turned down by all other lending institutions before becoming eligible for a loan, is too restrictive on this department's activities? I am thinking of the fact that the length of time required to be turned down by all the other agencies may well prevent a coming industry from getting established. These things can run anywhere from a month up to a year and a half by the time they reach the point where they have been definitely turned down, and under the circumstances the hon. Minister is more or less the court of last resort. Does he not think that the betterment of industrial development within the province might be effected by having a little more leeway in that particular restriction?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would like all the flexibility that we can get, but what we find is that most of the people who come to us have already gone through the time the hon. member referred to and have tried the other institutions. As a rule they come to us perhaps as a court of last resort. What we require, as I said this afternoon, is a balance sheet. If a man brings in a certified balance sheet he can get an answer within a week or so, or perhaps less than that, but I think the time lag that the hon. member is talking about—he does not come to us and we say that we cannot give him a loan and to go and talk to three or four other people—he has usually gone as far as he can go and canvasses his creditors before he comes to us.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister seemed interested in the remarks I made during the estimates of The Department of Tourism and Information with regard to the development fund and service industries, and I wonder if he or his department has given any further consideration toward making available the assistance of the Ontario development agency in this particular field.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As the hon. member recalls from the comments made the other day, we have been holding meetings with the tourist industry. We have made one loan—a very satisfactory one—to a tourist operator in Ontario. It is working out very well, and I have reason to believe from talking to the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) that we will pursue this again this year and probably in more detail. We have some further meetings planned, and one of the things we found out, as I discussed with the hon. member personally some time ago, is that in the tourist business most of them are small operators and their accounting systems are very inadequate. Our first approach with the tourist industry—and these things are going to happen from here on in—is to endeavour to assist them in setting up an accounting system so that they will know whether they are making or losing money, or what their chances are of making a success of the business they have chosen to stay in.

I would think that as we expand the operation, and we hope to, that tourism will be given every consideration.

Mr. Paterson: Fine; it would be appreciated.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister has had a chance to refer to the remarks of his predecessor, Mr. Macaulay, at page 2543 of Hansard of April 18, 1963, and if he supports all of the programme that I see here, the four point programme and later on, several other points. He talks about dollars and so on. Surely the hon. Minister must have some views on what Mr. Macaulay said, and I think we are entitled to hear them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you to repeat that question, I did not catch it?

Mr. Singer: It is very simple. The hon. Minister's predecessor was the bright, shining light of this government. He was called in—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): You had predecessors. Are you standing by what they said?

Mr. Singer: No, but I am glad the hon. Prime Minister has joined in because I think his present Minister should either endorse or condemn the programme of his predecessor. He is the responsible Minister. He stands in his place tonight, talking on behalf of government, and he should say that he agrees with what Mr. Macaulay said.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Why?

Mr. Singer: If he does not, in answer to my hon. friend from High Park, if he does not agree, then he should say that Mr. Macaulay was wrong.

Mr. Cowling: Why?

Mr. Singer: Why? Because—

Mr. Cowling: That was a year or two ago.

Mr. Singer: Oh, that is a year ago! Well, here is a government that cannot be consistent even from year to year. It is as simple as that. Either we had a programme that meant something in 1963, or the spokesman of government at that time meant absolutely nothing. Here was the usual noise, adding up to great confusion. Here is the hon. Minister, who has worked very hard, coming to us and telling us he is a great man. He has done all these things. He has got everything on an even keel; he is promoting greater good for Ontario. Does he agree with his predecessor or not, because the things he said about the Ontario development association do not jibe at all with what his colleague said on these pages. I want him to answer.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Now, 007, that is quite enough!

Mr. Singer: Are you going to answer?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would just like to suggest this to you, that what Mr. Macaulay said about setting up the agency is one way. When I talked to Mr. Macaulay about another way to set it up, we looked over other means of setting up the agency and how we could accomplish the same means. We came up with the Act as it is written today. Perhaps I was able to persuade Mr. Macaulay that this was a better way than his. Maybe right now, or a year from now, we should have the $100 million. I think there is lots of time to review the programme. If we need that kind of money, I am sure that we will take a look at it in the future.

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, I just cannot accept that. Right here on page 2548, this is what it says—

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): What year?

Mr. Singer: It says:

The 13th plank in our programme was the establishment of the Ontario development agency.

Mr. McKeough: What year?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Just before the election.

Mr. Singer: Just before you arrived. It is unfortunate that you arrived, but it was just before you arrived, my hon. friend from Kent West. I would suspect that as my hon. friend from Kent West stood up on the platform in Chatham and the neighbouring voting subdivision, he quoted from this sort of thing, but I have not heard him stand up to say that the 13th point in Mr. Macaulay's speech on April 18, 1963, is something that he stands for four-square. No, I have not heard him say that at all, and I would think he would say that tonight.

But let me read to you the 13th point in Mr. Macaulay's platform.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): We may go to the 22nd point, if you are interested.

Mr. Singer: In any event, Mr. Chairman, the 13th plank in the programme, as Mr. Macaulay said, was the establishment of the Ontario development agency.

As hon. members are aware, legislation creating the agency has already received Royal assent and the first loans have been made. I am sure the hon. members will wish to discuss this in more detail and so I will delay any further comment until we come to vote 406.

And then he embarks upon a many-pointed programme concerning the Ontario development agency. The essence of it is, for my friend the hon. Prime Minister, that Mr. Macaulay suggested to this House and suggested to the people of Ontario, that he was prepared to recommend to his Cabinet colleagues and they were prepared to agree with him, that Ontario put in $100 million of public money to provide this kind of development.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister was here.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Prime Minister was here and knows and approves, and had he been here the other afternoon he would have heard his friend the hon. Minister of Economics says, "We do not do anything without the approval of the Prime Minister"—and I am sure that is true. The hon. Prime Minister must have approved of Mr. Macaulay's programme of $100 million. What do we have? $4.7 million of a $100 million programme.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: May I suggest to my hon. friend that in the remarks he has quoted, Mr. Macaulay did not say that he had any Cabinet approval of this proposition.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would imagine, and I would think, that the people of Ontario are entitled to assume that when a Cabinet Minister, particularly as important a Cabinet Minister as Mr. Macaulay was in that Cabinet, stands up and says, "I am prepared to spend $100 million of Ontario's money," that he does it with the approval—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is that what he said?

Mr. Singer: —he does it with the approval of his leader. I can suspect that there are some of your followers, sir, who might make that sort of statement as a suggestion and you might not approve—

Mr. McKeough: Are you prepared to endorse everything the hon. member for Grey North says?

Mr. Singer: —but I just cannot imagine that Mr. Macaulay in that day would have made that statement without your knowledge and approval.

Tonight, we have a different Minister, who pretends that he has not even read what Mr. Macaulay said, and I say that if that change can take place so quickly, there is no strength, there is no substance, there is no reality—all we have is a super-salesman who is capable, as my hon. colleagues or hon. members of the House have said earlier, of selling refrigerators to Eskimos, who is getting up and selling without any substance, without any meaning and without any real conviction.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is an irresponsible statement.

Mr. Singer: And I say that we, in this House, and the people of Ontario are entitled to a programme. What do you mean by ODA? What are you going to do with it? In our opinion, you are doing absolutely nothing.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps that Mr. Macaulay's announcement of the loan guarantee plan, back in 1963, was somewhat in the category of Mr. Gordon's Budget. It was a pre-election announcement. We had many great, bold announcements at that time. We find that very few of them have amounted to very much.

There is no question in the world that the $100 million was the figure that was spread around all over the place. It was certainly mentioned quite firmly in this House by a responsible Minister of the Crown and caught, as it was no doubt intended to catch, headlines all across the province, trying to give the impression that the government was willing to stand behind this amount of loan. Now we find that it is not a $100 million programme, but a $4.7 million programme. I am not saying that a $4.7 million programme may not have certain useful purposes, but it is quite a different thing from the original announcement.

Unfortunately this is just the way it is with almost everything from the government. Mr. Macaulay was a great man for points. We can all remember his 12-point housing programme. Same thing—nothing, or practically nothing, produced. However, housing can come up later, Mr. Chairman; I will not mention it any further now. But this is the sort of public relations type of job the government does, instead of an actual solid job on development or whatever else the topic may be.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, just to correct the record, it certainly indicates the government has flexibility. We can change our minds.

Mr. Singer: Flexibility?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You just wiped out all the policies for the last ten years and got a clean sheet.

Hon. Mr. Randall: While we talk about $4.7 million there is also another $11.5 million raised through the services we were able to give the applicants without the taxpayer putting up a dime. I think it has been a remarkable job of getting these loans out with so little invested on the part of the province. I would like to see what we could do if we had the kind of money you are talking about. I am not too sure we can use all that money for that kind of purpose, unless the programme was broadened to take in many people today who can go to IDB. We do not want to go into competition with IDB in Ottawa. We do not want to go into competition with the banks. I think that we want to stay away from interfering with private enterprise. If they will lend the money, that is what they are there for.

Mr. Singer: Are you repudiating your predecessor?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are only going to take care of the people who cannot get money from private enterprise. This is what we are set up to do and I think we have done a pretty good job of it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have a few more exact quotes. At page 2549, the Minister of the day said:

I have spoken in New York, Chicago, and yesterday in Los Angeles—and in this expansive way the present Minister has spoken in Tokyo and Timbuktu and done equally well:

—I have proposed that Canada must be permitted to sell more goods to the United States; that there are extensive opportunities for U.S. investment and enterprise in this province; that U.S.-owned subsidiaries in Ontario should be allowed to pursue actively, and in competition with the U.S. head office, export orders; and that U.S. subsidiaries in Ontario should be encouraged to buy Canadian component parts, particularly when the component parts can be obtained as cheaply or more cheaply in Canada than in the United States.

These were wonderful statements and they were made with all the authority of government behind them, with all the money that was available to buy publicity for them. There was not a man who had made available to him more PR men, more publicity releases, than the hon. Minister's predecessor. I am surprised and I am shocked that the hon. Minister can stand here tonight and pretend to plead innocence of all these statements.

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): What are you trying to prove?

Mr. Singer: I am trying to prove just this for my hon. friend: At page 2555, in one of his again multi-point programmes he said:

And we are going to improve the province of Ontario—

No. 2 in that programme—I have forgotten which one that must have been; it must have been 26(z):

—by expanding aggressively and quickly the $100 million Ontario development agency to help finance Ontario industries. The Ontario development agency will also play a major role in providing financial and other advice to small Ontario industries.

Mr. Chairman, the point is very simple. Either the government has changed its policy or else the policy still continues. I ask the hon. Minister the very simple, the very pointed question: Is he repudiating tonight the statements of his predecessor made in 1963, with all of the fanfare and with all of the publicity that the government and the hon. Prime Minister permitted to be attached to them at that time? Has he drawn his horns in; has the government drawn its horns in? I think we are entitled to know, and I think we are entitled to know in more specific language, in particular language, what your programme is. The broad general banalities—and that is all they are—the pleasantries are not enough. Surely the hon. Minister has the courage to stand up and tell us what his policy is. Does he believe Macaulay or is he repudiating Macaulay?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have suggested that we have accomplished exactly what we intended to accomplish without the $100 million. As far as I am concerned, when the Ontario development agency needs expanding I will go back to the Cabinet and ask for the kind of money that is required to expand it.

Vote 404 agreed to.

On vote 405:

Mr. Thompson: I congratulated the hon. Minister this afternoon when he had explained to us about regional development—and I said it was really the most refreshing sight that we have had in the Cabinet benches in a long, long, dreary time. He said:

Quite frankly, I do not move on a programme until I have facts. I have not the facts yet or a pattern of how I am going to do it, so I have not a programme.

I think, really, that this has been most helpful, this discussion with my hon. colleague, and it is something that not only we in the Opposition have a right to ask but indeed the people of Ontario have a right. We had this enormous fanfare in connection with all kinds of economic development, of which this programme that Mr. Macaulay had emphasized was only a part, and now we find that this hon. Minister has really graded this down a great deal.

One of the things that the hon. Minister did on housing was show a sense of purpose again. He had shown drive and vitality, and when he stood before us during last year's estimates it seemed to me that he was honest about it and we congratulated him. He said, if I can paraphrase his remarks, "I have taken over; we are going to get going on the housing situation; I am going to be working on an Ontario housing corporation, and this is going to be an answer—"

Mr. McKeough: You said all this this afternoon.

Mr. Singer: Well, you are going to listen again and you are going to be polite for a change.

Mr. Thompson: I might say with reference to my hon. friend, I hope he does listen because we have not talked about housing this afternoon.

Mr. McKeough: He said all this this afternoon.

Mr. Thompson: In connection with the Ontario housing corporation, we have not come to it until now and I suggest to the hon. member for Kent West that he listen because it seems to me he has to listen harder than a number of other people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: And when the hon. Minister right here stood up on August 19, 1964, he had shown a sentiment—

Mr. Chairman: This is Ontario House; it is vote 405 we are on.

Mr. Thompson: Do you want me to wait? Do you want me to continue on housing now?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is too bad, my hon. leader was making such a substantial contribution to the House.

Mr. McKeough: Same as he did this afternoon.

Mr. Newman: All you hon. gentlemen have to admit deep down in your own hearts you know it is true.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the Ontario House apparently does have salesmen, so to speak, operating out of the premises in London. How often are these commercial men brought back to Ontario to be re-oriented with the new developments here so that they can go right back on the continent and sell?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As a rule they are brought back once a year and at the very outside every second year. Most of them have been back within the last few months.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, do these same individuals make trips to the continent, or are the representatives on the continent responsible for continental Europe?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, they do both. If the man in the Milan office or in Dusseldorf requires the assistance of the director of marketing, say, of food stuffs for the agriculture department, and he believes he needs that assistance, he will go to Dusseldorf or Milan and work with our representative of that area. The same goes for Mr. Thompson, who is in charge of exports for manufactured goods.

Mr. Newman: If I may, Mr. Chairman: Are specialists in certain fields occasionally brought in from Ontario to do special selling jobs rather than have the personnel of Ontario House do the selling?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, as a rule these men are quite qualified to do the job, as they are trained here first before they go. I would say they are the veterans in the trade ministry department who are over there now. When trade missions go over they also go out with the trade missions to lend assistance and as a rule the trade mission is accompanied by one of the men from this office who is in charge of it while it travels in its various locations. If the services of the man located in London, for instance, is required, he will go along with them too and help set up contacts.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may: How many employees are there involved in just the London office?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There are a total of 44, including the Glasgow office which was opened last fall for emigration.

Mr. Newman: Was it 34, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Forty-four!

Mr. Newman: Forty-four! Have their salaries gone up in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, there has been an increase, the same as for the civil service.

Mr. Newman: Then the hon. Minister does not look upon Ontario House with the same favour this year as he did the previous year, because I noted the salaries have gone up yet the total amount allocated for salaries is substantially lower, practically ten per cent lower this year than it was last year.

This year there has been allocated

$198,000 for salaries, last year there was allocated $217,000. There has been a substantial increase given, yet the hon. Minister is using approximately ten per cent less in funds. Are they that more efficient?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As the hon. member knows, the salary increments for people overseas are somewhat different to the civil service here. They have allowances along with the salaries for foreign service. We follow pretty well the same procedure in salary adjustments as the federal people do in their foreign offices. So the amounts could vary. It does not necessarily follow that every year they are going to be exactly the same.

Mr. Newman: Still I would like to know if the personnel has increased. Because salaries have decreased, your personnel must have decreased likewise. You must not be looking on Ontario House with the same favour this year as you did last year.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps we misunderstand each other. In 1964-65, the salaries were $151,900 and this year, 1965-66, they are $198,000—a $46,100 increase. Is that what you are referring to or were you looking at some other figures?

Mr. Newman: You are right, Mr. Minister. May I then ask the hon. Minister, how these men are trained? Are they professionals when they first apply for the job or are they given training on the job?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What happens is that we try to take people from inside and promote them from here. To give an example, we are at present bringing back our man who runs the New York office and he is being replaced by a man who has been working in the trade and industry branch for the last two and a half years. We feel that he is sufficiently knowledgeable about the province of Ontario, its geography and its manufacturing that he can be a very worthy civil servant in the city of New York. The man coming back is coming back now with what we call foreign experience. He will be a key man here helping to train others, and eventually, perhaps, he will move on to Ontario House in London or somewhere else.

Mr. Newman: Are all of your employees former residents of Ontario, or are they from the countries in which they live?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I would say they have all originated from Ontario. Some have lived in Europe for some time. The man in Germany was over there for four or five years, back here for two years and back in Germany for another three years.

Mr. Newman: May I then ask the hon. Minister how the officers in Ontario House differ from those in the offices in Germany, Italy or the United States?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They do not differ particularly, except that this is really the head office for Ontario where we do most of the contacting and most of the work through immigration, and through the agriculture department and through trade and export promotions. That is where the Agent General resides, and the people who are in Dusseldorf, and in Milan are particularly picked for the knowledge they have of that country.

For instance, the gentleman we have in Milan is of Italian extraction and knows his way around, talks the language and he fits into that picture more so perhaps than if we transferred a man from here who did not talk the language. He would be lost. I might say to you that when I was there last year, the representative from Quebec was using his services to get established because he did not speak the language. This is one of the major reasons why we like to make sure that the men in the other areas fit into the environment of the country and get along with the language, with the people and understand what is required in that particular office.

Mr. Newman: The individuals operating out of these offices, are their duties solely the sale of Ontario products, or are some of their duties searching out for skilled help for Ontario industry?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the gentlemen, we are talking about—and I refer again to the man in charge of the agricultural pursuits and manufacturing—they are interested not only in exporting, helping exports out of Canada, they are interested in getting branch plants over here, they are interested in getting licence agreements for Canadian manufacturers. They follow pretty well the same pattern out of those offices that we follow right out of this one. When it comes to going to foreign markets, we are looking for three things: We are looking for export possibilities, we are looking for licence agreements, we are looking for those who would like to come here and invest in the province of Ontario. Their jobs are pretty well similar to what we do here ourselves.

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister when he was in my own community, Windsor-Walkerville, mentioned the fact that there was a shortage of 17,500 skilled individuals, and he mentioned that it would be necessary to bring some of these people from Europe. Would that be the duty of the various offices operated by this department in England and on the continent, to search out this skilled help and direct it to Canada, or would that be under the jurisdiction of the federal authorities?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me perhaps tell you how we handle it. We have an immigration office in London that is the main immigration branch, and the immigration director there, working with the federal immigration people out of Canada House in London, and the other federal offices throughout Europe, surveyed the market by visiting these Canada offices. When he would go to Italy, of course, our man in the Milan office would go with him so that he could do any follow-up work. The same would take place in Germany. And one of the reasons for our men being associated with immigration, or giving a hand, is because in many of those countries in Europe you cannot advertise for people to come to Canada. It is forbidden by their government, it has to be almost word of mouth. So when our immigration director visited the capitals of Europe and the federal offices over there, if our man was available who covers that area, he would go with him.

For instance, the man in Milan even covers the Middle East. The man in Dusseldorf is not just in Germany, he has all the inner-six market of Europe, so he is doing a travelling job in various countries. Naturally, if we are interested in immigration, it is part of his job to walk in and talk to the Canadian federal officials and see if we are getting anywhere with our immigration requests, or what else can be done. He then feeds this information back to our London director and in turn it comes back here.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Minister that is very nice. Have you ever instructed any of your officers in any of the countries involved to look for farm labour?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I cannot say that we have, Mr. Chairman, although I have discussed this with my colleague the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). I know that he has talked to his agricultural representative in London House. I do not know how successful we would be. As you know, we do have a good many Dutch farmers in this country, particularly up in the Simcoe area and the Brantford area. But if farmers come in or somebody in the agricultural field over there wants to migrate to Canada, we would welcome the opportunity of giving him the information and making sure, if he got here, there was full information available as to where to settle and the best place to make a living.

Mr. Newman: You do not specifically attempt to sell the fact that there is a shortage of farm labour in certain parts of Ontario, and you would appreciate having individuals migrate to Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Surely.

Vote 405 agreed to.

On vote 406:

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, has the department made potential surveys of export markets of various countries? And if so, what countries have been done? What moneys are set aside for that? Regarding a survey of the export market potential so far as we are concerned, have any studies been made along those lines?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Aside from the economic research group without our own branch, there are no special studies being made. I might suggest to you that there is quite a bit of information available to us from trade and industry in Ottawa, which we are aware of. I think the studies are of interest, but I think when we get into the markets ourselves—we have, as you know, been very active—then we will be in a pretty good position to assess whether we can do business there or whether we cannot.

One of the things that I personally found, and I am sure others have found the same thing, is that you are often told the product will not sell there and there is no use going. This is not true, and it is one of the reasons why when we have our sales missions and we hand pick people, we only do it after we have talked to the federal trade officials in that area about what kind of people we should bring along to do business.

There are, as you suggest or have requested information on, surveys available. The Department of Trade and Commerce in Ottawa is continually sending letters stating what the opportunities are. We have a new service of our own through which we send out information advising manufacturers where the opportunities are. But our experience has been—and my own personal experience has been—that you are not too sure whether you can sell or not until you have a look at your market. I think you have to go and look at it yourself, and so far we have been successful enough with our missions to realize if you take somebody's word for it that there is not any business there, that is where you probably get an order. We are using surveys all the time. We have no particular programme of our own to survey markets because we find what we are doing is pretty successful.

Mr. Taylor: Would it not seem logical that if new markets were being investigated, to be selective in those markets, after having made surveys of the types of material those countries import that fits in best with the type of items that we are manufacturing in our province?

It seems to me that that has been the Japanese approach to the North American markets. They have surveyed the items they manufacture and that are likely to provide a lucrative potential market for them. Then they concentrate, not just on one item or on several items, but they make a mass attack at the whole economy of that particular country. It is my understanding that they did that to the United States and Canada, and later to certain Latin American countries, but I think it was all a planned programme rather than a hit-and-miss attack on individual items.

Would it not seem that a broader approach might be applicable in markets such as this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I would think the suggestion is well put. As I say, I think we have a pretty good idea of what markets exist. I agree with the hon. member about our Japanese friends; I think that they have done perhaps the best job of market survey of anybody that I have come in contact with.

One of the major problems they have in Canada is that we have an imbalance of trade with Japan because they are buying more from us in the way of raw materials and food stuffs than they are selling to us, and they are somewhat perturbed because of the imbalance of trade. I suggested to them that we are importing many goods from the United States where we have an adverse balance of trade, and if they would come and analyze the U.S. imports that they, the Japanese, produce and produce them just as well with the same quality, and they concentrated on selling those goods in this country, they would not hurt Canadian manufacturers and they would help reduce the imbalance of trade.

Their surveys have been topnotch. I have seen some of the surveys and I know what they are doing and that they have been very successful in many areas.

There are other things, of course, that they have been successful at and one is, of course, to grant long-term credit as a nation, which we are not able to do as a province. I think that internationally it is recognized that a province is limited when it comes to long-term credit, but these countries, Japan, for instance, is a country of monopolies and they make no bones about it. The Japanese tobacco monopoly—or the Japanese machinery monopoly—is not entirely like the Russian system, but they are marketed through government agencies and all the manufacturers work through that agency. If they want to sell sewing machines here, four or five manufacturers can get together, turn their promotion money into the agency and they are well organized to do a job of selling. Here in Canada, we do not operate that way. We operate—

Mr. Taylor: Does the hon. Minister think it would be a good idea if we did?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that we could take a lesson or two from them, and I agree with the hon. member because they are pretty tough competition. But this is the difference in their merchandising techniques, and while I think that we have been successful, I think we have had to be successful only in co-operation with the federal authorities because it is a nation-wide job. It is not just a provincial job. We think we are doing a pretty good piece of work in getting as much out of the export market as we are doing at the present time, but I would go along with the hon. member in that I think surveys are essential and undoubtedly we will be making more than we have done to date.

There is a section here that has just been referred to me.

In obtaining information, exports-imports, of the general position of various countries, the industrial research division made detailed studies of more than 20 countries in 1964.

How effective these are remains to be seen. They have just been completed.

Mr. Taylor: With respect to the hon. Minister's offices in Italy and in Germany, I realize that they are relatively new, but have any specific results been achieved by these offices as yet?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I would say that they have been entirely satisfactory or, I can assure the hon. member, they would not be there. They handle all the sales missions that go through. We have had a sales mission and a fair in Milan, Italy, recently. We have just finished a big warm air heating show in Stuttgart, Germany. These are the things that they are handling, and as I pointed out some time ago—or at least a few days ago—we are going into more of these international fairs. These offices serve that purpose, plus the fact that they have been able to direct to us a number of foreign investors who want to operate plants in this country, or who would like agreements made, or they want to get products from Ontario to sell through their distribution centres in these various countries. So the offices have performed a very valuable service, and I think on page 30 in this report the hon. member will find an item on the work that those branches are doing.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, might I ask a question in the same regard, being quite interested in the textile business which our province seems to have lost. Has the Milan office sought out any textile manufacturers in Italy who would be interested in moving into Ontario? There are a great many million yards of Italian fabrics imported into our country and there may be an opportunity here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot tell the hon. member offhand whether they have or not. I will certainly try to find out and give him the information. I cannot be specific on that, I am not too sure.

The market is one that we are very much interested in and certainly they do an excellent job of turning out good, high quality textiles.

Mr. Newman: Since the imbalance of trade between Canada and the United States is so great, would the hon. Minister not be better off to concentrate more effort with his offices in the United States, and possibly to establish more offices in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that is a good suggestion, and this year we have 18 missions going and nine of them are going to the United States. We also had two market surveys made as to what our possibilities are in selling in the United States. Again I think I can assure the hon. member that if we go over there we had better make sure that we have the answers, because most Americans in the survey areas that we contacted believe there is not too much difference in Canadian products, that they are pretty well the same, so why should they buy Canadian when American is just as good.

They will buy Italian pointed shoes and anything else that is imported because there is a certain amount of romance to an import. But these surveys indicate there is a market there for Canadian manufacturers, but before they go I think even the manufacturers have to recognize that they have to have good quality, they have to sell the difference, they have to be competitive in price. I might mention that we sell quite a bit of hard maple over there. I think just the word "hard" is one of the reasons why they say it is different.

I had a terrazzo manufacturer in to see me the other day and he brought a problem about importations of terrazzo from Italy. He said that he had started to get into the American market and asked if we had any ideas as to how he could take up the slack. I asked him what there was about Canadian terrazzo that is any different, and he replied that it was the hardest in the world. So I suggested to him to say that it was good hard Canadian terrazzo and to put the emphasis on the "hard." So he has gone back to try it out. I hope he is successful.

These are the things that we have to do in the United States. We have to sell the difference, because people think that if it is Canadian it is the same as American because everything that is produced over here has to be designed in styling and in quality to meet American competition because their people read American magazines, newspapers, and listen to radio and television, and they do not expect to settle for anything less than what they consider the best design and the best quality. It is not as easy as people think to crack the American market, and perhaps while I am on my feet I can give another point that would be of interest.

If you are a subsidiary American company such as the three major electrical companies, General Electric, Westinghouse and Frigidaire, then if there was free trade tomorrow and you wanted to sell appliances on both sides of the border, there would be no problem walking into a dealer and getting him to stock any of the products of those companies because they are known on both sides of the border.

But take one of the best selling appliances in this country, Moffat ranges. Nobody knows Moffat in the United States and if you walk into a dealer in Buffalo he will ask whether you are on the Ed Sullivan show, or if you have a 13-week television programme, or if you are going to pre-sell the range. If it is not pre-sold he will not want to pioneer it.

These are some of the problems that Canadian manufacturers are going to have with national brands. As I say, to the three major electrical companies it would not make any difference because their names are pre-sold on both sides of the border. So when we talk about other items entering into a free trade area, such as automobiles, it does present some other problem. This is one of the reasons for the survey, to acquaint Canadian manufacturers—at least manufacturers in this province—with the necessity of recognizing they have to sell the difference, because if it is just the same, they are going to have a hard job.

Mr. Newman: The Canadian manufacturer either has to sell, or he has got to be advised that there are certain fabrication gaps, and I understand your department does a very good job of that. You published two booklets, one on fabrication gaps and another one on manufacturing opportunities. What type of distribution do those books get throughout the province?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am informed that the distribution is roughly about 9,000 to 11,000 manufacturers in Ontario, which I think covers pretty well the bulk of the manufacturers. These are the people who would be interested in those booklets.

Mr. Newman: I am very glad to hear that because I can recall the early days of the publication of this type of manual. I had to distribute them in my own community individually because they were not sent into the community, so I think you are doing the right thing.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, I have here a letter sent to me, a copy of a letter sent to the hon. Prime Minister from Mr. Robert Sharp, president of the Sharp Brothers Cut Stone Company, and I would like to read it to the hon. Minister and have his comments on it. I think it is a disturbing situation.

Re the new women's residence for the University of Western Ontario, London, Ontario, Ronald D. Murphy, architect.

Dear Sir:

May we bring to your attention some disturbing facts pertaining to the awarding of the cut stone sub-contract by the general contractor, McDougall Construction of London in connection with the above project. The cut stone contract for the supply of Indiana limestone has been awarded to the Standard Stone Company of Windsor, Ontario, a company which has not actively participated in this trade for the past three years and which incidentally submitted a quote to only McDougall Construction.

We have been advised by the local representatives of the stone cutters and planer's union that the Standard Stone Company of Windsor does not presently employ any skilled tradesmen, nor are their present facilities sufficient to undertake a project the size of the women's residence. We investigated these facts and find that the Standard Stone Company has made arrangements to sublet the contract to the Wollery Cut Stone Company of Bloomington, Indiana, U.S.A.

This situation is made financially possible by the present outdated custom regulation No. 306d, which is presently under review by the federal government. The loss of this project to foreign interests, with the resultant rise in unemployment and loss in tax revenues represents a loss of approximately $160,000, of which $85,000 in labour costs would otherwise have accrued directly to Canadian labour.

We have for some time been watching with great interest the Ontario government's efforts, through The Department of Economics and Development, to develop small business in Ontario as well as to bring the trend to buy Canadian. Our company does not feel that the aforementioned circumstances are conducive with present government policy.

Since all universities are government subsidized we feel that as a Canadian company, with 40 years experience in our field, it is reasonable to expect our government representatives to take whatever steps are required to stop this unnecessary export of Canadian capital.

However, if this situation is allowed to continue, then it will be to our advantage to import the finished product and we shall have no compunction whatsoever about becoming brokers for the American quarries and fabricators and thus eliminating much of the Canadian labour we now use. Although we have always been on excellent terms with union labour we primarily employ it, not protect it.

Yours truly.

Now, Mr. Minister, I think that this is a serious situation. I would like an explanation as to the validity of the situation. You see what it means if the remaining stone cutting yards in Ontario adopt this procedure; it means the end of the few stone cutters that are left in the province and it does away with certainly labour and interest through the province. Would the hon. Minister remark upon this; and also upon the handling of the business with the universities, what co-operation and what co-ordination there is with a department of such magnitude and importance as Economics and Development? I would think there should be a great degree of co-ordination with The Department of Public Works in this regard so that these things do not happen—if in fact it is a fact.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, trying to find an answer to the hon. member tonight, I think, would be rather impossible.

I would suggest two things. One is that if he will let me have that correspondence I will certainly be glad to talk to the man in question. He will be one of many with whom I have sat down and discussed a similar problem. I had one when I first took office, up in Orillia, and I have been dealing with the tariff department in Ottawa helping him over the last year. I understand just last week, we were successful in getting the federal tariff authorities to recognize it was in inequity that they were imposing on this company if they wanted to compete and ship goods to the United States.

I can also suggest to you that in the new building that is going up over here in Queen's Park, I have had one or two occasions to talk to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), and he is most co-operative. We have had meetings with the purchasing agents of all the government departments to point out what we would like them to do with reference to Ontario manufacturers and Canadian goods particularly, without necessarily becoming parochial in our approach to doing business with others.

I do not know what the circumstances are, but I have had enough experience to know there are two sides to the story. If you will let me have the correspondence, I would be delighted to look at his problem and if it is a federal one, we will do our best to discuss it with the federal people; and if it has something to do with any control we have through public works or The Department of Education I am sure we would be interested in making sure that an Ontario manufacturer got breaks along these lines, if his prices were competitive and his quality met the specifications.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this letter was addressed to me, I would like to comment on it. It is dated April 22. It crossed my desk this week and I instituted the necessary investigation to find out what was behind it. As I recall, I sent a copy of the correspondence to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development. Naturally it will take some time, as this involves a tariff matter with the federal government. It would appear to be obvious that when the letter was sent to me, a copy was sent to you. The investigation into the situation has been started and in due course we will find what it is all about.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I agree with that. I agree with what the hon. Minister says. I raised it, not to jump the gun in any way, but the president of this particular union is in my constituency, a member of the Hamilton labour council, and he asked me to check it out last week. I raised this with The Department of Public Works and I have received a reply from Mr. Miller. It is unclear and I thought—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I can only say this to you; that in the first place, as a government we have no control over the allotting of contracts by the various universities to whom we make grants. In other words, they are autonomous bodies and they are governed by their own boards of governors and they let their own contracts.

On the other hand, there is an element in this situation that goes beyond just simply the allotting of contracts by whoever it may be. We have no control whatsoever, as a government, over the institutions to whom we make grants, just as when the various school boards in the province build their own schools and allot their own contracts. On the other hand, there is a point in this letter which was obvious to me when it came to my desk and I read it. I have, as I say, started an investigation to find out what is basically behind it, because it does seem to me, as it does to you, ridiculous that a contract would be awarded to a company and then sublet in effect outside the country. We want to find out what it is about, because we are very interested in maintaining the union and those men who have ability to cut stone. Believe me, there are few of them left in the province.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you. I would appreciate, Mr. Chairman, any conclusion you might arrive at on the correspondence.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister will be aware that when some of our industrial commissioners find groups and industrial people who are interested in locating in small areas adjacent to regions which have low economic activity sometimes it is to their advantage to have some housing and buildings available for these various types of businesses. It has come to my attention that the city of Barrie, for instance, has been very successful in entering into an estate type of development which has attracted industry in that area. I wonder if the department has ever given consideration to this industrial estate type of development in order to attract industry into specific areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the moment we have not participated in any project to that extent, but I welcome the suggestion. I think it is a very encouraging way to get industry to go into a town, because in most cases the question asked of us is: "Where can we locate a plant in a hurry?"

For instance, I had one the other day looking for three-quarters of a million square feet with a 30-foot ceiling almost overnight. Well, you just do not wave a magic wand and find a plant like that. We do not get too many of those and I hope this one materializes.

What the hon. member is suggesting is what has happened up in Rexdale where a number of private developers have built small plants of 2,000, 5,000, 10,000 square feet on speculation and there have been enough small entrepreneurs who rent those on a lease-back basis or straight rent basis. This is what some of the towns like Barrie are beginning to realize that it is not just enough to have a serviced land sitting there available for industry, that perhaps they have to get together with developers and put some buildings on those lands.

This is one of the things, again, which I think will come into the programme I talked about this afternoon on regional development. It is one of the matters that we have in mind when we talk about regional development, because I think it is a good way to get industry diversified.

I have heard about Barrie's programme. As you know, Barrie has done an exceptionally good job of getting industry there in the last five years and I think that the town people themselves, at the grass roots level, recognize that they have a stake in the community. Some of their people have gotten together and developed this area and put their own money into commercial buildings.

As this takes place, I think we will find the mortgage companies more interested in going into areas and loaning some of their mortgage money against these commercial properties. Up to the last few years this has not been necessary. Most of the commercial money has found placement right here in Metro Toronto, or within a radius of 25 or 30 miles. I would think that now, with many of these mortgage companies getting a little more competitive—and there are lots of them—that there will perhaps be other areas such as Barrie developed.

We are talking to the industrial commission about it. I would welcome any suggestions from them, and certainly it will be one of the things that we will have in our regional development programme, to guide them and assist them along those lines.

Mr. Farquhar: I am encouraged to note this has come to the attention of the hon. Minister. I think this has many advantages but in particular, possibly, in the interest of small industry which is not necessarily ready, or able or in too big a hurry, to develop a tract of land, complete with the housing and so on. I think the department could consider entering this field. I am sure that this would be one way of directing industry where we need it and away from the places where we do not need it.

Would the hon. Minister think a little bigger for a few minutes now and consider, or at least comment on, the establishment of some of the cornerstone type industries that we see, for instance, being established in Quebec by way of the steel development there, and there is a fertilizer plant as well? Could we discuss a little bigger thinking in connection with industrial development in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say this: Quebec has an entirely different industrial situation than that which we have in Ontario. They have lagged a long way behind and this is one of the problems with which perhaps Mr. Lesage is faced. He has recognized, and so have the business leaders of Quebec, that they have to take some revolutionary steps in order to get industry into Quebec and to get it moving.

They have formed GIC, General Investments Corporation, which we talked about this afternoon. I think the shares issued at the moment amount to something like $35 million; there is another $175 million to be authorized and they have borrowing power for that much more. I believe on the figures I have seen, the steel mill is going to cost $225 million. Undoubtedly they are going ahead with it despite the fact that Dosco, I believe, is putting on a large addition.

The GIC has done a number of things in order to attract industry. They have even gone out and bought family businesses, as you probably recognize. They have taken a whole interest or a part interest in family businesses.

I do not think, in the figures I have seen, they have attracted any more industry there than we have in Ontario. I think we are getting the bulk of it. We certainly do not want to do anything to discourage people from going to Quebec, and that is the reason why we do not go down that end of the country and take a floor in a hotel and say: "Would you come on up to Ontario?" We send our people across the border in some areas. If we are going to get industry, we like to take it out of the United States and bring it in here.

We have had groups in here from the west. There was a group here from Saskatchewan the other day. Mr. Thatcher was here and did an excellent job of promoting Saskatchewan, asking Ontario manufacturers to either build branch plants out there or move out there. I think if they spent as much time and energy just south of their border there are a lot more fish over there than there are down here, because if a man has a big operation here he sometimes is reluctant to cut it in half and take it where it is going to be perhaps an uneconomical operation. Unless he can justify manufacturing in those areas in volume, he is not going to split up his plant.

But on the hon. member's remarks, I would think that we have a steel complex here and I do not think another one is necessary. The one we have in Hamilton is spending something like, I think it is, $85 million now and another $80 million later on to expand. This is just as good as a new steel industry. I think what we should be interested in doing—again as I said the other day we have 11,000 manufacturers in this country employing less than 50 people—it is far better to concentrate and build them up to 100 employees and twice as much floor space than perhaps spending all our time trying to coax in new industry. I think we should work on the industry we have as well as try to get new industry.

I think, being specific, we do not have the same problems as Quebec. We are not complacent about it, but I think we are doing a pretty good job of getting our share of industry in the province of Ontario.

I hope that GIC is very successful in its task, because a strong Quebec is a strong Canada. We personally feel here that if Quebec gets as big as Ontario then we are all going to be better off, because we certainly cannot live without the rest of Canada and I am sure the rest of Canada would have a hard job getting along without Ontario. Our future is a joint one and as soon as Quebec reaches its economic objectives I think the country as a whole will be a lot better off. We have done everything in our department, even our offices in the States and overseas, to encourage their people to come to us and work with us and we will give them all the help we can.

I believe, in answering the hon. member's question, that we are not losing anything to Quebec; we are getting our share of the business and certainly we do not want to go out and raise the ante in order to stop people from going to Quebec.

Mr. Farquhar: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. Minister's hesitation to cut any throats across the border and certainly more power to him as far as that is concerned.

On the other hand, I hope he will not ignore the fact though in the interests of being fair we are still competitive with those people and we still have to remain competitive and we will have to do everything in Ontario they are doing in Quebec to keep even with the board, as has been shown in recent months in connection with the pulp and paper industry and others. I just hope that the hon. Minister does not take too soft an approach and does not bend over too far backwards in connection with competition with Quebec or any other province.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps I could suggest to the hon. member how we solve some of these problems. It was not too long ago, about a year ago, that Dominion Textiles talked about building a plant in eastern Ontario. We worked with Dominion Textiles for several weeks. I talked to the people myself and they finally wound up going to Quebec. We have been talking to them in the meantime, and now they have opened up a new plant just outside Cornwall, a $14.5 million plant which employs 300 people. When we lost the one to Quebec they said: "Mr. Randall, we have another one coming which will fit better in Ontario than this one. We only have to haul the material out of that plant which is a raw material plant and it has to be finished in Quebec. We can haul it from there, just outside of Montreal, and it is economically sound for us to put it just outside of Cornwall."

Then announcement was made the other day by Mr. King, the vice-president. So we have been informed as to what is going on with these plants. This is just one case where we get a plant. If Quebec gets a plant today, we will get another branch plant tomorrow; but the manufacturer has to decide himself where it is economically sound to put the plant. I think that we will go along on the basis that we cannot force them to come in. We can encourage them, and in many instances they have come here rather than go to Quebec.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, a year ago the estimates for this particular branch of trade and industry were $910,000 and now we are up to $1,335,000.

There is one thing that I have objected to before in this particular department, and in this particular estimate, and it shows up in the public accounts of 1964 under "Miscellaneous." Under this particular item, $970,000 plus has been spent. Over half that amount, Mr. Chairman, $515,510, goes to Dalton K. Camp and Associates. Of course as we all know, Mr. Camp is the number one organizer of the Tory Party and this particular item, as I have pointed out before, to my mind is just a means of using public money to keep the government machine in power. Public accounts also had to do the same thing right around election time in 1963 and 1964.

I think that a government, or a business the size of the province of Ontario, could easily afford to handle much of this business itself. The total of $515,000 on this one particular item in this department, to me is nonsense, it is a waste of public funds and it is obvious to me that it is a political pay-off. I think if we are going to have efficient, clean administration in this province that this is something that we in government have to watch—

Mr. McKeough: What is it for?

Mr. Trotter: Obviously the advertising and exhibits and there are so many ways to use that. I remember on a previous occasion in this department, immediately prior to the election, that they had great pictures of the leader of the Conservative Party in the province of Ontario down at the CNE—this was in the Ontario building—and of course once there was an election this type of advertising disappeared. But this was the type of thing that was billed in this department, and it is obvious that again this is on the increase.

This particular item 406 has gone up approximately $400,000. I hope that the present Minister is not going to use the same means and the same system of rewarding the faithful workers of the party in power. This is on the increase, and it is a shocking waste of public funds. It is most undemocratic, for an item such as this shows that any political party that is in power and has become entrenched can perpetuate itself over the years by the use of public funds. Again I must protest, as I have protested before, that this type of spending is obviously a misuse of public funds.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the hon. Minister mentioned something about trade missions. As a matter of interest I would like to ask him how decisions are made as to which countries sales missions are sent.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I said earlier, we work with the federal trade authorities as well as our own, and we ascertain from them and through the material available to us through their own research, where we have an opportunity of selling goods. Then we gather the various industries people together and take them on these missions. At the moment I think we are going to explore almost any market where we can sell products manufactured in Ontario, and most of the markets are open to us. I would hope, as I said earlier, that we will concentrate on the American market this year with half of our missions, but there is a market for almost all the goods we sell in any of the markets of the world.

It may be a lot easier to sell manufactured goods in Great Britain, for instance, than it is to take them all the way to Japan, because the Japanese are pretty tough to sell. Even in the car business they talk about competition, but they do not allow Volkswagens there except on a very restricted basis.

In some areas, due to their tariff regulations, we find that if we are putting a mission together it is necessary to make sure that the mission is going to a market where there is an opportunity of getting an order.

Mr. Gaunt: How many countries will be visited this year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I listed them yesterday. There will be a total of ten countries involved this year in the 18 missions, including the United States.

Mr. Gaunt: The hon. Minister pointed out earlier that there was a very definite advantage as far as he was concerned in visiting the potential foreign markets. Does he plan to visit all ten countries that he has listed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I wish I had the time to do it, but it is not possible to go on all the missions. I will go on what I think are the key missions where we have not been before. If I can go on missions where I think it is necessary that a Minister can be helpful, that is where I will go. It does not matter where it is as far as I am concerned, as long as I think that we can get results.

The areas I went into last year were places I had never been before, such as the Far East and Africa. The result, in Africa particularly, was that we did bring back business. In the Far East particularly in Japan I think that we have made the Japanese aware that we have a Canadian nuclear system, which I can assure the hon. member they were not aware of at the grass roots level. I talked about the utility of our product when I went over there; we were not even on the international chart showing that Canada was in the nuclear energy field. All countries but Canada were represented, and when we had the opportunity to talk to the people who will buy the equipment, which are the major utilities, they were quite surprised that we had done as well with nuclear energy here as we had. In fact, the word that we have had since then is that they are very much interested in our system because of the reason Canada has not used nuclear energy for anything else but commercial purposes. These are the things that come to light when we go into new markets, and when they do buy nuclear equipment we will have an opportunity of selling it to them.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, on this small point, may I tell the hon. Minister that there are other members in other parties of this House who would gladly accompany him on some of his trips, particularly to the African continent. I was intrigued by his suggestion that he had some success in Africa. In what field, I am curious to know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We had some success with the sanitary industrial products. Also one of our mission members had sealants for the major dams over there—the Niger dam and the Volta dam. Apparently they were having trouble in the Niger dam, and this sealant was the one that they felt would do the job. He got an order for $36,000 worth of sealants.

I might say at this moment just a little more about Africa and the possibilities there. In the first place, these people are short of money as we all recognize—they are an emerging nation; they need long-term credit. We have credit facilities at Ottawa—I know something about them as I served on the board with Mr. Hugh Aitken, of the Export Credit Insurance before I came into government. They will give long-term financing on specific products, but they have not gone into the business of financing completed factories. I found out in West Africa that Ontario manufacturers can go down there and sell completed factories tomorrow without any difficulty, but we have to be able to give them longer term credit. For instance, we may have to take Nigerian bonds for 20 years, and they have to be re-financed through a consortium of banks or by the federal government. As I said earlier, the Ontario government is not in the business of international financing, we do not have that kind of money available.

But just this week we had one of our contracts with $9 million of orders in the hand. One was for a small hospital and two schools. And there is another hospital to follow if we can find a way through the federal authorities to finance it.

They are in Ottawa this week talking to Mr. Sharpe. I phoned Mr. Sharpe and set up an appointment for them on Wednesday, and I expect I will have a report by the time I get through here tonight.

I believe that if we can finance completed factories we can go into these countries tomorrow with people such as wire and cable people, grinding wheel factories, bicycle factories, and we have nothing to lose because we are not selling those kinds of goods in the African countries today. As you know, there are 35 of them, and they all need long-term credit.

One of the things, I think, that most people do not recognize is that perhaps we have a government in Nigeria today that is a little unstable. It may even be a little pro-Communist, but a hundred years from now the people are still going to be there, the needs are going to be there, and the government is going to change. I think if we in Canada can get some of our factories in there we would be doing a much better job than giving them handouts of cash sums which do not get into building factories and turning out products.

Perhaps one of the most interesting visits I had was from Mr. Nkrumah. I had an hour with him and he asked me what was wrong with the economy and I told him. I said: "You are building schools and hospitals and universities and wide boulevards, but you have no industry to speak of and the industries you have are about to close down because they cannot get a permit to bring in the raw materials." He said, "What do you suggest?" I said, "I suggest what we do is see if we can work out a deal with the federal government to allow us to come down and put in factories and use the money in that regard."

They had a meeting of Cabinet the next day and before I got back home there was a letter here wanting to send a mission of high-powered ministers in the government to talk to ours. We have since been talking, not only to Mr. Sharpe and Mr. Drury, but External Affairs.

I am in hope that we can convince the federal authorities that instead of going out trying to sell a bicycle chain here and a pump there, we could go out and sell a complete factory. When we walk away with that order, we walk away with an order of some substance and we make a contribution to that country that I think is as worthwhile as building a hospital or a school. As much as they are needed, when they are built they need money behind them to keep them operating. I think, as I said to Mr. Nkrumah, "Perhaps your economy is in reverse. In Canada we got the factories first, these other things came second."

I think in most of these emerging countries, as you recognize, you have had some experience, they are placing the emphasis on education and schools. These students are being turned out and the worst thing you can have is a fellow well educated who cannot find a job. Then you have some problems.

This, I think, is the proper approach to selling in those countries. Only by going there yourself and talking to the people who can tell you what their problems are, can you come back and be any kind of an authority on where we should spend our time and our efforts.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I simply commend the hon. Minister strongly on his initiative. I think not only is it of inestimable value to develop the secondary manufacturing industry in that kind of continent, but that it will ultimately have very worthwhile economic and social repercussions here. I wish I had had a tape recorder for the conversation between the hon. Minister and President Nkrumah.

The one reservation I have—I hope the hon. Minister did not tell him that he cannot carry conversation to the bank, he would have been taken aback.

Mr. Taylor: Last year the hon. Minister mentioned that The Department of Trade and Commerce had offered a space in their foreign offices for any industrial development officers the Ontario government might wish to appoint. Has the department made use of these opportunities in any case?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I said we had discussed with Mr. Sharpe the possibility. It was brought up when Mr. Sharpe asked me if we were going to open up any more foreign offices. I said we had not made up our minds, we are looking at other areas, and he suggested to me that perhaps we could solve our problems by making use of the offices they had. I said yes, I think the suggestion is a good one. We have not placed any industrial officers in their offices yet; we have not found it necessary. I can assure you, as I said yesterday, for all intents and purposes the officers they now have are almost on our payroll because as long as we will continue sending people over they are only too happy to work for the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec or any other province that will send people in to work for them.

Again, in these areas I have just finished talking about the federal authorities did a remarkable job of setting up appointments for us and staying right with us and giving us all the help we needed. So I think to put an office of our own down there at the moment, when they will spend their time, would be a waste of effort. If we find it necessary, the offer still holds good.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you.

The hon. Minister mentioned participation in the federal trade shows. Does he plan on participating in all the trade shows that they are putting on this year? I think there are some 30, are there not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The last I heard there were something like 70. No, we will not participate in all of them, for a number of reasons. It is very hard to get a single manufacturer to take his product to a trade show, and then turn around and come back home and go back with another. If there was an Ontario section, such as there was in the Stuttgart show, we would concentrate on one industry, such as the heating industry. The reason for that is that in Germany today, like Great Britain, heating is selling like it is going out of style. Our feeling is that if we could get a section at one of the international shows put on by the federal government we will take a section. In the areas where we cannot get a section, we will have one of our men from Europe stationed there with an Ontario booth and see if we can pick up prospects for branch plants and utilize the efforts of the show in order to try to get suspects turned into prospects, to bring them here, to sell them something or to set up plants over here.

Mr. Taylor: You will be participating in most of the shows then, will you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. Here is a list of some of the shows in which we are now going to participate.

There is the hospital equipment show in London; there is an international exhibit of oil and gas heating in Stuttgart, which we have just finished; there is an international sample fair in Milan which finished on April 25, we were in that one; the Hanover fair on April 25, we are participating in that; the Mediterranean fair in Palermo, Italy; the Dallas gift show out in Dallas, we think there is an opportunity out there to do some good work; the British toy fair, we were very successful in Britain last year and we are going to be in the toy fair again this year; and there is the international household goods and hardware show in Cologne, Germany.

These are what we have on the docket for the moment. Later on in the year if there are some others come up that look like we should participate in them, we are flexible.

